Mr. GILLETT. Yes, Mr. Chairman, we did, for this reason: The Committee on Appropriations, as the House will readily admit, can not every year investigate every one of these small items. There are a great many of them, and some we take up one year and some another.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] permit me to answer that question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] that during the fiscal year 1909 the Department of State estimated $12,000 for this item. At that time the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge the subject-matter went into the details of the expenditures made by the State Department under this item and refused to allow the estimate, reducing it to $8,000, the amount that had been carried the year before. At that time we became satisfied, as to the result of that investigation, that this appropriation was approximately correct.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that I suppose what has happened is that the gentleman is convinced that it is about four times too large now, is it not?

Mr. GILLETT. I was coming to practically what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has said, that we do not every year, and the House, of course, will appreciate that we can not, go into every one of these details of the estimates. Some years we take up one and some years another. This year, I remember, we did not take up this at all, but we gave the same amount that we did last year.

As to the criticism on horseshoeing, it strikes me, as it does the gentleman, that it is extremely large, although he has very much exaggerated the excess, because horseshoeing is expensive. I had a horse here at one time, and I remember you have to put pads on a horse here in Washington on these hard asphalt streets, and it is expensive business; much more so, I discovered, than it was at home. But it does strike me that this sum for horseshoeing is very large, and I am glad the criticism has been made on it. And I am willing to go further. I believe that all these expenditures probably for the horseshoeing and carriages for all the departments are and will necessarily be expensive and extravagant, because it is left, of course, to some subordinate, just as all government business is, who has no personal interest in economy, and it will be the same there as it is in this House, where we have direct control. There are going to be outrageous extravagances until we get some other system. Until it is somebody's business to go into all these details and keep watch on them all the time extravagance will creep in. And I am inclined to think it is inevitable in the Public Government, and we can not and will not be able to stop it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] an itemized statement from the State Department about this item last year?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. They are obliged to put it in every year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, for instance, as to the item "including the purchase, care, and subsistence of horses," how much is that?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not seen that there was any purchase of horses last year at all.

Mr. HAMLIN. I can say to my colleague that it does not appear in that printed report in that way.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes, it does, if the gentleman will excuse me. It gives the full amount—$7,951—that was expended——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. For the purchase of horses?

Mr. HAMLIN. For the purchase of horses?

Mr. GILLETT. No. I do not believe any horses were purchased.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is that $7,900 for?

Mr. GILLETT. For all the items.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Read the items, then.

Mr. GILLETT. There are a hundred of them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is exactly what I am after.

Mr. GILLETT. If you want me to take the time, I will read them. They are printed and accessible to everybody.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to pass some amendments, and see if we can not start this great economy performance right now.

Mr. GILLETT. I will send the document to the gentleman. I do not think he wants to take the time of the House by having it read. Anybody can get the document at any time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, while the subject-matter of this discussion is not large, some of the questions which rise are important. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] took occasion to criticise indirectly the Appropriations Committee. I shall not retaliate by reference to the agricultural appropriation bill, though I might cite some cases directly in point. But I want to call this fact to the attention of the House: It is beyond the capacity of any men that you may select as members of the Committee on Appropriations properly to investigate each item of expense that they have to provide for in the respective appropriation bills. The very purpose of creating these committees on expenditures of the various departments was because of that inability. The subcommittee that I happen to be a member of has been working for the last three weeks upon the sundry civil bill. That bill will carry items aggregating over $70,000,000. We start with the reindeer in Alaska and end with the Samoan chiefs in the middle of the Pacific, and we do not miss much in between. Now, I may cite you one single subject there that runs to nearly $6,000,000—that in regard to the Light-House Service.

It would be well worth the trouble of the Committee on Expenditures of the Treasury Department to spend six weeks or six months in investigating that single department; and if they do, they can suggest to this House reforms in the method of appropriation that would result in the saving of money that would run up, in my judgment, to many thousands of dollars. For us to go into detail in our committee is a physical impossibility. We do undertake to do so whenever there is an estimate that indicates that the item is too large; and whenever we have obtained information from any source that leads us to believe that there is extravagance as to any particular expenditure, then interrogation is had as to that expenditure.

Now, the testimony taken in the preparation of the sundry civil bill, and I speak of that bill because I am not on the subcommittee that prepares this bill, will comprise over a thousand printed pages of testimony. Yet with that work, lasting six or seven hours a day for three weeks, we have only touched the surface of things; and that is inevitably so.

Now, the thing to do is not to criticise the committee for not doing an impossible thing, but to bring about a reform in affairs that will enable the House to obtain accurate information. If you want to get at the big leaks, not the little ones, you have got to make even a more radical change than that. The Committee on Appropriations is not responsible for most of the extravagance of this House. It comes about in two ways. It comes about through those committees that have appropriation jurisdiction for a particular department. In the course of a few years the members of such committees become the champions of the department their work relates to, champions in the sense of always seeking to increase the budget of that department. And this extravagance comes about by this Committee of the Whole refusing to support the Committee on Appropriations in cutting down the expenditures. Repeatedly the members of that committee have come in upon this floor and been overridden by the membership because a particular appropriation happened to be of value to certain gentlemen in their districts. You will not get real economy until you establish a real budget, until the people of America have some information as to relative expenditures.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky were fit and proper at this time. I could stand here and give you a hundred instances just like his as to the light-houses. Let me give you one in this bill, and I expect an effort will be made to take it out of the bill. We found in one bureau five retired United States naval officers. Five of them in one bureau, each drawing $5,000 or over, where there was no use for but one superintendent and a few $900 clerks. It took a long time to unearth. It was a small matter, it is true, but hundreds of these cases we have unearthed, and it would require an annual session every day of the year to go through the departments in detail.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What bureau was that in?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The Hydrographic Office.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Are these five retired naval officers there drawing double salary on the retired list?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No, sir; they were drawing an active salary. They are on the retired list, which made it a full salary in the active service. Now, we have cut that out, and it is new and subject, perhaps, to a point of order, and we no doubt will meet with that when the subject is reached. We have given them but one salaried officer of that kind, who shall be a superintendent. Gentlemen very often sit here and unthoughtedly make points of order, and some will work a bill over and over to find something that is subject to a point of order, and out it goes. What encouragement is that to your committee to unearth these things and bring them in, when a few can sit here and talk about economy and make points of order that prevent the saving of thousands and thousands of dollars? Now, the gentleman from Kentucky was right. We need your sympathy. We need your help, when we are trying to economize and to cut down expenses, instead of gentlemen sitting here ready to make points of order all through the bill; and that is the way you have treated us time after time.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not care to prolong this discussion. Yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] complained that the present Secretary of State was not left without certain offices mentioned in a paragraph which we have passed, so that he might discharge all of the duties of Secretary of State which it was said had hitherto been performed by that officer. To-day we are told that the Secretary of State is now remiss in that he has not looked carefully after the cost of shoeing the horses that belong to the wagons and carriages of the State Department. He ought to be a man of wonderful capacity to transact business if he gets through with all this. We are bound to assume that this Secretary of State is as good a blacksmith as the gentleman from Missouri, or some of the rest of us, but he may not have been about the streets and gathered up as much street conversation as to what was going on in the State Department as the gentleman from Missouri.

I want to testify a little myself on the subject of shoeing horses. In the last winter I have seen a number of splendid horses fall because of ice and slippery streets, thereby being injured or destroyed, and as a blacksmith I would say that those horses ought to have had sharpened calks, steel toes, and frost nails in their shoes every day of that sort of weather, notwithstanding the gentleman claims that they should be shod only once a month, as he would shoe his horse out on a gravel or dirt road in Missouri. I am not very well acquainted with the district of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], but I know that a majority of the horses in that region in former times, at least, were never shod at all. [Laughter.] Beyond that, many farmers drive their horses to market and plow their corn and never shoe them at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A horse on a farm that is being used for plowing and all that ought not to be shod.

Mr. KEIFER. I thought you were a farmer.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I used to be a farmer, and I say this, that a farm horse whose work is confined to the duties of the farm is better off not shod than he is shod.

Mr. KEIFER. I guess you are right about that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But if you are going to drive a horse on the road, he ought to be shod.

Mr. KEIFER. Yes. Some of the horses in the gentleman's district are shod on their fore feet and not on their hind feet.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; that is true.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, we are in the city of Washington, with paved streets, the capital of the Republic, and the Secretary of State is looking after foreign affairs, to see whether he can extend commerce or the influence of the Republic in the far Orient, and he is looking after a multitude of important things. Now, if the streets are slippery and his horses fall on the street or are injured, they say he ought to stop and go out and look after the matter of having them economically shod, and that if they are shod more than once a month there is extravagance, and we ought to criticise the State Department as a failure. That is the kind of argument we have heard this day and yesterday, and I only criticise it in the sense that it should be criticised. I agree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. SHERLEY] that we have got to look to the special appropriation committees to work out our economies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask that his time be extended one minute, so that I can ask him a question.

Mr. KEIFER. Make it five minutes.

[By unanimous consent the time of Mr. KEIFER was extended five minutes.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I indorse what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] said and what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] said; but when the House undertakes to help the Appropriations Committee discharge its functions, what makes you get mad about it?

Mr. KEIFER. In the first place I did not get mad. The only thing I was doing was criticising the effort of the gentleman when he failed to help us. He was talking about horseshoeing out in Missouri, when we ought to talk about shoeing horses on the smooth, icy paved streets of Washington.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You live out in the country yourself?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do not you know that a gravel road will wear a horse's shoes out more quickly than these smooth asphalt streets in Washington?

Mr. KEIFER. Not in wet and icy weather.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They will not?

Mr. KEIFER. No, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, one other question: Suppose the Secretary of State does concern himself with great questions in the Far East, is that any reason why he should pay two prices for shoeing a horse in Washington?

Mr. KEIFER. Not at all. Nobody ever thought that would be a reason.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do not the subordinates look after the small details?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, the gentleman now is going to criticise the official blacksmith. I have no objection to that sort of criticism. I was trying to relieve the Secretary of State from that sort of criticism.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, interrupted the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] to say, in substance, that it was not the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to inquire into the details of expenditures; that such duty devolves upon the Committee on Expenditures in the several departments. That seemed to me to be such a startling doctrine that I ventured to call the attention of the committee to it in the shape of a question put to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman will permit me, the gentleman misunderstood me. Perhaps I was not plain in my statement. I said that the particular business of the Committee on Expenditures in the department was to go into details; that while we were compelled to confine ourselves more or less to the estimates sent in to our committee, it was the duty of the Committee on Expenditures to go into all of these details.

Mr. SCOTT. The impression which the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia made upon my mind, and I think upon the minds of most of those who listened to him, was that it was not the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to go into the details of expenditures. Evidently the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] so construed it, because he referred to my remark, calling attention to the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON], as a criticism on the Committee on Appropriations. I did not intend it as a criticism, because I do not believe that the Committee on Appropriations considers its duty to be performed when it simply reports to the House the estimates that were sent in from the departments.

I concur in all the tributes that have been paid by any Member here to the diligence of the Committee on Appropriations. I quite agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that it exerts every possible influence in the direction of economy, and it does, to the extent of its time and opportunity, go into the details of expenditures; otherwise it would have no idea as to the amount to be expended. I quite agree, also, with the gentleman from Kentucky, that with the multiplicity and multitude of items in appropriation bills it is impossible to investigate every individual one of them, and yet to the extent to which it is possible, such investigation ought to be made by the Appropriations Committee, for the reason that any inquiry made by the Committee on Expenditures could not be made available for the use of the Appropriations Committee in a practicable way.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why not?

Mr. SCOTT. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, would the gentleman say that he would be willing to wade through the hundreds of pages of testimony taken by a committee on expenditures in order to find out whether there had been any extravagance or not?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I would not do any useless thing like that, but I will tell the gentleman what I would do. If the Committee on Expenditures diligently went into the matter and reported to our committee that certain expenditures in regard to particular and specific items were unjustified, and recommended that they be not carried unless the officials appearing before our committee showed very clearly that they were justified, they would not be allowed by my vote.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he does not believe that the Committee on Appropriations would resent as an impertinence a recommendation which might come from a little bit of an expenditure committee——

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, the trouble with the gentleman's whole position is that he is trying to determine the value of men and things by the name given them. I do not care whether it is a little committee or a big committee, a big man or a little man, if he presents facts that are true, I for one, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, would welcome any information from an expenditure committee showing where we could make a saving and reduction.

Mr. SCOTT. As a practical matter, we all know that the inquiries and investigations made by expenditure committees have not been of value to the committees that really have the appropriations to make.

Mr. SHERLEY. Speaking for myself, after seven years' service in this House, there have been so few reports by those committees on expenditures that we have had no chance to judge of their value.

Mr. SCOTT. And the reason there have been so few is that the appropriation committees—and I speak of the whole of them—have largely made the work of the committees on expenditures in the House unnecessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; put it the other way—the failure of the expenditure committees to do the work has forced the Appropriation Committee to undertake to do it. That is the way to put it.

Mr. SCOTT. It may be that in the beginning such was the case; but of recent years I am very sure that the other condition prevails, and that the expenditures committees found themselves without a function, for the reason that the committees which have the appropriations to make go into the details of expenditure and thus secure the information necessary to make those appropriations wisely.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that under the rules of the House the committees on expenditures in the various departments of the Government are charged with the duty of investigating all expenditures made by the department over whose expenditures the rules have given them jurisdiction. It is not any part of the duty of any committee having appropriating jurisdiction to investigate expenditures, but it is a necessary incident, because, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has said, these committees have heretofore failed to perform their functions, making it necessary for the committees on appropriations to exercise the right which, I think, they possess of inquiring into the expenditures of appropriations for previous years as an incident to making appropriations for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, it is also to be borne in mind that the Committee on Appropriations can not on an appropriation bill suggest remedial legislation to cure some of the extravagance without its being subject to a point of order that any Member can make. Our hands are tied. Give to the Appropriation Committee the power that it had under the old Holman rule, whereby any provision looking to a reduction of expenditure was in order upon an appropriation bill, and we will give you some results and give them to you speedily.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Kansas, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, has stated that he heard with surprise the statement that it was not the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to investigate expenditures, I want to call his attention to some facts with reference to expenditures in the departments over whose appropriations and expenditures his committee has jurisdiction, and to ask him if his committee has taken the time to inquire into expenditures of the Forestry Bureau of the Agricultural Department.

Until three years ago there was no law requiring the head of any department of the Government to submit to Congress at the beginning of each session of Congress or at any other time any statement or account or any information regarding the expenses incurred in travel during the fiscal year of employees in that department. It was believed by the Committee on Appropriations that great abuses had grown up under the practice then in vogue of the employees of the various departments traveling on every conceivable kind of a junket, for the purpose of lecturing or packing conventions, that was deemed necessary by the chief of the bureau, and the Committee on Appropriations prepared and submitted to the House a provision requiring the heads of all the departments of the Government to submit at the beginning of each session of Congress a detailed statement of the employees who traveled, the places to which they went, the time absent from the department, the business on which they had gone, the cost of that travel, and the appropriation from which the expense of that travel was paid. I have here the report of the Secretary of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1908.

The aggregate amount expended during that year on account of the travel of employees, outside of the field service, was $224,015.20. I was very much interested in looking through this report and examining it to see whether or not there were such abuses as the Committee on Agriculture would naturally want to correct, either in their appropriation bill or by legislation. I find, to my amazement, that in one bureau, namely, the Forestry Bureau, during the fiscal year 1908 there were a great many employees in the Bureau of Forestry traveling—what for? To deliver addresses to women's clubs; addresses at county seats on educational questions, questions entirely foreign to forestry; addresses delivered at meetings arranged by Members of Congress in their own States, presumably in their own districts; and, if I may have five minutes more, I desire to read some of these items as tending to show the want of scrutiny with which the Committee on Agriculture has been investigating not only these various expenditures in the Agricultural Department, but also the indifference of the committee as to the purposes for which the expenditures were made.

[By unanimous consent the time of Mr. TAWNEY was extended for five minutes.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Before the gentleman begins I would like to ask one general question: Does the gentleman undertake to justify the extravagance in the State Department by proving that the Agricultural Department is also extravagant?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; but I say that when the Committee on Appropriations is criticised for not investigating the minute details of expenditure, the report of which expenditure is not referred to it under the rules of the House, that the committee having the report of these expenditures referred to it and charged with at least some responsibility concerning the fact of such expenditures as well as the necessity for them should propose some legislation to prevent abuses of this kind before criticising other committees that neither have these reports or the legislative jurisdiction that would enable them to recommend remedial legislation.

In looking over this report I find that a man by the name of Betts went to New York to deliver an address before a of Betts went to New York to deliver an address before the Carriage Builders' National Association, which cost $12. W. C. Barnes, inspector of grazing, went to Chicago, Denver, Gunnison, Salt Lake, and return, to make general examination of grazing work and to address the members of the Gunnison Stock Growers' Association, then to Denver to assist in grazing questions arising at the American National Live Stock Association convention, and then to Salt Lake to attend supervisors' meetings and to attend to general grazing matters; expenses, $240.25, paid from the general expenses, Forest Service, 1908.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman expect to have this speech replied to by the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. And go into some other question and have that replied to by some other committee?

Mr. SCOTT. Since the gentleman has submitted to one interruption, may I ask him before he closes if he will inform the committee whether he has inquired into the details of this matter sufficiently to be able to advise the committee whether or not the expenditures which he criticises were in the public interest or otherwise?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will leave the question of the necessity for the travel and the expenditures, or the justification for the expenditures, to the Committee of the Whole or to the House of Representatives. Mr. Barnes went to points in Illinois, Missouri, and return, to confer with officers of the general federation of women's clubs on courses of study of forestry. This was, no doubt, an important conference with these estimable ladies, whose organization was no doubt in a position to aid in creating sentiment in favor of larger appropriations for the Forest Service. Mr. Barnes went to New York City and return, to see about the preparation of pictures for educational work in schools on the general subject of forestry. Then I find in this report, "Kellogg, R. S., to Kaaterskill, N. Y., and return," to address semiannual meeting of National Association of Box Manufacturers' Association; "Kellogg, R. S., Iuka, West Point, and Durant, Miss., Memphis, Tenn., and return," to deliver 13 addresses upon forestry at meetings arranged by Congressman CANDLER, of first Mississippi district. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. In just a moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What authority is there for the Department of Agriculture to instruct a Chautauqua?

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever. The expense of delivering the 13 addresses in the first district of Mississippi, I might say, was $132.98.

Mr. MANN. I know, but that is not important; but did it help to reelect the gentleman?

Mr. TAWNEY. I presume so. That was evidently the purpose. I could not imagine a more effective method of campaigning than that, especially if the Member can go around and introduce the gentleman from the department who has been brought there at his instance or through his influence and at government expense. No commendation to a Member's constituents is comparable to that which is apparently disinterested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. I find here also an item of a man sent from the Agricultural Department to deliver educational addresses at county seats in the State of Georgia. He was engaged in that work for almost thirty days.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At whose instance did he go?

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not say. It says at the instance of a Member of Congress, but does not give the name of the Member.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What year?

Mr. TAWNEY. The fiscal year 1908.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was that immediately preceding the national election?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it was in September, 1907.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just before the primary——

Mr. SCOTT. Georgia is a Democratic State.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps this is part of the invasion of the South arranged for during the last national campaign.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say this report is made in accordance with the law adopted by Congress some three years ago and contains 126 pages, covering expenditures in all the bureaus of the department for traveling expenses incurred by employees who are employed and paid for services here in the department. Their duties are not in the field, but in the department. I concede, Mr. Chairman, that it would not be possible for the Committee on Agriculture, or any other committee that has more than one appropriation bill during a session of Congress, to analyze this report and the reports submitted by the other departments for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there is any abuse in the matter of travel on the part of departmental employees, but I do submit that there should be sufficient attention paid to these reports by the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations for a specific department and the committee on expenditures in these departments, and to report to the House legislation that will put a stop to the abuses that exist under general or lump-sum appropriations, that are being expended in defraying the expense of departmental employees who are sent throughout the country promiscuously for the purpose of delivering addresses upon any and upon every occasion that they may be requested to do so, either by Members of Congress or by anybody else.

If these reports, disclosing facts of this kind, are permitted to pass without notice, abuses such as I have shown from this report may be expected to continue, and Congress, not the departments, will be responsible. The amounts expended by these departmental employees on account of travel is only a small part of the expense. Every day they are absent from the department their regular work in the department ceases, and the Government is paying them their full salary and receives nothing in return. This voluntary and unauthorized contribution to the entertainment of the public is entirely unnecessary. It is performed by the departmental employees, not by the field force, that is always out among the people. When the Government pursues the policy of supplying from its departmental force the lecture platforms of the country, as it is doing to-day, we must not complain because of any demand the people make on the Federal Treasury, for we invite it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I see that there is getting to be trouble here between the brethren. Gentlemen are jealous of their duties and the way they have been discharged, and have gotten entirely away from what is before the House.

The Department of State has been severely criticised here for a bill for shoeing horses, and for other things. It does look to me that this is a large bill for horseshoeing, especially to gentlemen who ride in automobiles and do not know anything about it. I am not justifying this expenditure, but I want to say that there are some things in connection with the Secretary of State that the country ought to know as well as this horseshoeing bill. I had occasion to go to the State Department a few days ago, and as I most usually do, I was walking. I saw a gentleman walking in front of me leisurely. I have to walk leisurely because I can not walk any other way. [Laughter.] I did not try to overtake him. He was a plain, democratic looking gentleman. So I walked on, going in the direction of the Secretary of State's office, and right at the steps where we turn up to the office I discovered that this gentleman was Secretary Knox. I wondered if there was another country on earth where the prime minister or the head of the Cabinet, abundantly able of his own accord to own automobiles and horses, would go along there walking just like a Democrat down South running for Congress among the farmers. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And you might add also that he does own automobiles and some of the finest horses in America.

Mr. SIMS. Well, I do not know what he owns or does not own, but I think that we are getting down to little matters. Now, I am in favor of the horse. Kentucky and Tennessee for a long time have been in the horse-raising business, and Missouri is in the mule business, as is also Tennessee.

I want to keep the horse here, but, of course, there is no reason why, if we use horses, we should be extravagant in taking care of them; but I would rather have a few excessive horseshoeing bills occasionally than to have every Cabinet officer with a $6,000 automobile at government expense, that will cost more to keep in repair every year than it will to shoe all the horses that each member of the Cabinet may or can use.

Why, automobiles are provided for assistant engineers in the District of Columbia. Yet the Secretary of State travels on foot or travels in a carriage. Four horses cost only $600, if I remember correctly. But in a little while you will see an amendment brought in here to furnish an automobile at government expense to every member of the Cabinet. And what else? A chauffeur to go with it. It is true, I see, out in Missouri that chauffeurs are doing something else besides driving wagons and automobiles. [Laughter.] They may be more popular hereafter than they have been, but they are an expensive luxury, because it costs a great deal more to keep a chauffeur than to keep somebody in the stable to take care of a horse. [Laughter.] I want to emphatically indorse the course of the Secretary of State in walking or riding in a horse-drawn vehicle.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Last session we appropriated $6,000 to buy the Vice-President an automobile. This year we appropriate $2,200 for its repair.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I said. I say that it will cost more to keep one in repair than to shoe all the horses that all the Cabinet members can use. I say, stick to the horses. Some of the streets are easy to travel on, and I do not see why the horse wears out the shoes so fast.

But let him wear them out. It is not like wearing out rubber tires worth $60 or $70 apiece. We have the Secretary of State, who is serving the Government to-day in the first place in the Cabinet at $4,000 less than any of the other gentlemen in the Cabinet, and does not spend half as much time in politics as some of the other members do. Let the people know that there are some things common, plain, and democratic that are voluntarily done by the Secretary of State that are worthy of emulation. Go to the prime minister of any foreign country, and would you see him walking down the streets alone, without a guard, without an aid, without a military gentleman, without even a detective in plain clothes? No; you would not see it. As long as we stick to the horse or walk we will have Secretaries of State that are a model for the other countries to follow and to pattern after, instead of running out and aping the ostentatious manners of effete monarchies.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars" insert:

"Provided, That not to exceed the sum of $2,000 of the above amount shall be used for the purchase, care, and subsistence of horses, repair of wagon and carriage, rent of stable, pasturage, and repair of harness."

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There was so much confusion, Mr. Chairman, we did not hear the first part of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, let me ask, Do you not undertake to regulate the shoeing of horses?

Mr. HAMLIN. The shoeing is in there. I meant to put it in; it was in the original one. I will add by inserting the words "shoeing horses."

Mr. GILLETT. I have no objection to that amendment, and it will save time.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am glad of that. I want to make just a few remarks.

Mr. GILLETT. We might not accept it afterwards.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I frankly state to the committee that I want to put in the RECORD some information that I think will be of value to the House, especially to my friend from Tennessee who has just spoken. I can shy, and do shy, as far from an automobile as he does. But there is no excuse for this extravagance that is in evidence in this particular matter before the House. Now, let me call attention of the committee to these facts: There are four horses in the State Department, one carriage and one mail wagon. Here are the items that make up the expense for maintaining these things during last year: Repair of harness, $15.60; horseshoeing, $237.66; forage, $594.88; repair of mail wagon, $589; rent of stable, $720; pasturage of horses, $62.83; stable supplies, $15.40; harness and stable supplies, $420; service of hostler, $600; making an aggregate of $3,249.37 for four horses, one wagon, and one carriage during last year. That exceeds the estimate made by my friend from Tennessee of maintaining an automobile and furnishing a chauffeur, too.

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman, does that include the purchase of any horses?

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir; it does not.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Your amendment does not?

Mr. HAMLIN. It does not include the purchase of any horses.

Mr. MANN. I think the amendment as read did include purchase.

Mr. HAMLIN. I did not mean to have included the purchase of any horses.

Mr. MANN. As originally read, I think it did.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does it provide for the purchase of horses? If so, I will ask to modify the amendment by striking that out. Here are the items which I wanted included in the amendment:

For shoeing horses, $200.

Now, I think that is extremely liberal; in fact, entirely too much. Fifty dollars for each horse per year, if you shoe them once every week.

Shoeing, $200; stable rent, $600; repairing wagon, $200; repairing harness, $50; pasturage, $50; hostler, $900.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know what it costs to shoe a horse here?

Mr. HAMLIN. No; but I have a pretty good idea.

Mr. MANN. I will not undertake to say what it costs to shoe a horse here, but I know I have frequently paid $5 to shoe a horse all round in the city of Chicago.

Mr. HAMLIN. If it should cost $5 here, and they shoe them every month, it will only cost $60 a horse, and I have provided $50. But I am satisfied that it does not cost $5. I know it should not do so.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what it costs here. It would depend upon the shoe. I take it, it requires a better shoe in Washington than it does in Chicago for the horses to travel upon these asphalt streets.

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, my experience in Chicago is that it would require much better shoes there than it requires on the asphalt pavements here, for they have to travel over the cobblestones there. It seems to me they would be continually wearing the calk and knocking off the toe of the shoe; and I see no reason why a horse here could not go barefooted on these pavements.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman does not want to say that there is no reason why a horse should not go barefooted. A horse would not last two days here barefooted.

Mr. HAMLIN. You could get a Missouri mule that would go without any shoes here forever.

Mr. MANN. That may be, but they cost too much. We can not afford them.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will suggest that the gentleman's amendment, if I understood it correctly, is more liberal in the matter of horseshoeing than the statement of the State Department shows that it cost them the last fiscal year.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. If I understand, the gentleman allowed $200.

Mr. HAMLIN. And that amount I said, in my judgment, was entirely too much; but it cost the State Department $237.66 last year, they said.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the $237.66 was for shoeing 6 horses.

Mr. HAMLIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I will refer to the evidence brought out by the gentleman himself:

Mr. HAMLIN. In glancing down the contingent expenses my attention is called to an item of horseshoeing, which suggests this inquiry to my mind: How many horses has the State Department?

Mr. CARR. We have a mail wagon and two carriages belonging to the Secretary of State. There are 4 horses; 2 horses for the mail wagon, and 2 horses that are used for the Secretary's carriage.

Mr. HAMLIN. You have had 4 horses during the year?

Mr. CARR. Yes.

And down a little farther Mr. Carr states:

Prior to the early part of last summer we had 6 horses. * * * One of the 6 became lame last summer and the other was getting old, so we disposed of 2, thinking 4 would be sufficient.

Now this statement is for the year ending June 30, 1909, and Mr. Carr states that prior to the early part of last summer they had six horses. Consequently they must have had six horses to shoe during almost the entire twelve months. I say, therefore, that the gentleman's statement is more liberal in the matter of horseshoeing than the expenditure reported by the Secretary of State.

Mr. HAMLIN. My amendment does not expressly specify any amount for shoeing. I specify certain items for which there shall not be paid to exceed $2,000, but in my individual estimate that I made here I said you could allow $200 for shoeing, and still keep the amount down to $2,000.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Very well. That was my understanding.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not think it will cost half that.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, in justification of what seems to be a complaint on one side, that the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department has not gone far enough, and what seems to be a complaint on the other side that it has gone too far in the matter of printing, that the amount of printing was brought about by the foundation laid at the hearings of the committee to go into this matter and make a thorough investigation of the expenditures in the State Department. We found by questions that the report of the Secretary of State, which was transmitted to Congress on December 10 last, was not complete as to the matter of itemizing. You will notice, on page 8 of the hearings before that committee, in answer to a question by one of the members as to the item on page 12 relating to Great Britain, which is marked "miscellaneous," and amounts to $1,329.94, it was in a lump sum, and there was no way to ascertain what that miscellaneous amount was composed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Now, we got the information. We found that this was composed of 21 different items, which go to make up the miscellaneous item of $1,329.94.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not the gentleman remember that when I asked that question about that miscellaneous item the witness referred me to a couple of footnotes, and stated that the two footnotes would aggregate the amount carried in the miscellaneous column, but when I called his attention to the fact that it would not aggregate the amount by nearly $600, he then admitted that he did not know what made up the remainder of this miscellaneous item? I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that the original notes of that hearing were sent down to the office of the Secretary of State, and that when they came back the question and answer were changed, and an itemized statement was put in instead of the actual answer, "I don't know?"

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I will be glad to answer my colleague on the committee, but I hope he will not take up my whole time. His statement is substantially correct; but it was also understood that the representatives of the Department of State before the committee might file this itemized statement.

It was found that there were many things they could not carry in their minds, and they could not furnish the information. It was understood by the committee that they would be permitted to file a written statement, as shown by the hearings themselves. That is the justification for printing the hearings.

Now, as I started to say before I was interrupted, another question was asked, where the reply is elicited—

There are a number of appropriations expended under the department, as shown in the report, that are not shown in the foregoing amount. The department will send to the committee a complete statement in concise form, showing all expenditures for the last fiscal year.

Now, the department has done that, and it has been printed for the use and benefit of the Members of the House and of the committee. The committee found that they could not get along with the information obtained in the hearings before the Appropriations Committee and before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, because, while it may seem that the committee's jurisdiction is similar in a great many instances, and in a great many instances is a duplication of work of these two committees, we believe there is quite a difference. I think the discussion here to-day has brought out the fact that there is really no conflict in the jurisdiction of the committees and that the business of the Committee on Expenditures in any of these departments is to go further into the details, into the itemized accounts and examination of them, the manner of making the purchases, the manner of auditing the accounts, and the manner of checking up the different officers in the department. In order to do that the State Department has furnished the committee a full description of their manner of doing business, making purchases, keeping the schedules, and it has all been printed in convenient form for the use of the committee and the Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. It seems to me that it would be a very great reflection upon Congress, upon the American Government, upon the administration, upon the Secretary of State, who is our representative in the conduct of affairs with foreign governments, to put an item like this in an appropriation bill. If anyone believes that there has been corruption in regard to the expenditure of this money in the past, it is worthy of investigation. If there has been some error, as I suppose would be claimed by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, as to the expenditure of the appropriation, that is a proper subject of criticism on the floor of the House. I do not know as to the item. I dare say that the gentlemen connected with the Department of State have a much better idea about the cost of that service in the city of Washington than has my distinguished friend from Missouri, where the cost would be quite different from what it is here.

But it seems to me it would be a very wrong thing for us to advertise to the world that we have a Secretary of State, to whom we are compelled to look to carry on negotiations with all foreign countries of the world, and are afraid to trust him as to the amount necessary to shoe the horses that are allowed him by the Government. What more preposterous thing could there be than to say we intrust to him the question, practically, of war with foreign countries, and then say we are afraid to trust him with the expenditure of $8,000?

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the gentleman's position is correct, we have absolutely no power on earth to attack extravagance in this department, if it is a reflection upon the department to criticise it. We must accept the statement of the department.

Mr. MANN. Not at all; we have the power to give them the amount of money we deem right. The gentleman makes no suggestion that the amount be cut down; he does not pretend that he knows in reference to the amount of money that is required for this item. He admits by his proposition that $8,000 should be appropriated under the item, but wants to couple it with the assertion that we can not trust our Secretary of State as to how that $8,000 shall be expended.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the gentleman will permit another suggestion——

Mr. MANN. I do not yield to the gentleman for further suggestions; I think he has talked about an hour on this subject this afternoon.

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I think not. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is easy to say that the Department of State has expended this money erroneously. Why, the gentleman from Missouri picked up a volume that cost $2,000 to print, and there is nothing in it of any value except 10 pages of testimony that would not have cost $20 to print, and on its face it looks as though the gentleman and his committee had been guilty of gross extravagance in expending $2,000 to print 10 pages of testimony. The gentleman explains that. I accept his explanation, but the gentleman refused to permit the department to make the proper explanations as to how it had expended this money, and wishes to judge the department upon appearances, as it seems to me, while if you judge him and his committee upon appearances, without explanation, it would convict him of extravagance.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Illinois believe that any sensible person on the face of the earth expects the Secretary of State to personally look after the shoeing of horses or what they cost or the expenses of his stable?

Mr. MANN. I do not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, one other question: Does the gentleman not think there ought to be somebody connected with the State Department who looks after the expenditures in the State Department?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt there is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, why do they not bring them down to the right quantity?

Mr. MANN. That is not the question here. This is a question to compel the Secretary of State to determine in reference to the shoeing of horses. That is what I am objecting to. I think it would be the grossest affront to the United States that could be given to say that in Congress we can not trust the Secretary of State in reference to the expenditure of $8,000 under his control.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in ten minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would amend that by making it five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this last amendment will be exhausted in five minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. On the paragraph and all amendments I move that debate close in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the position of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is hardly tenable. It is no reflection upon the Secretary of State or upon the head of any other department to determine how much shall be allowed for any particular service. The paragraph under discussion provides for miscellaneous expenses, including the purchase, care, and subsistence of horses and vehicles, to be used for official purposes only. In addition to the maintenance and subsistence and purchase of these articles and animals, this appropriation is used for the payment for foreign papers, gas, telegrams, telephone service, and other items. If the Committee on Appropriations had recommended that these items be segregated so that the amount to be appropriated for the horses and vehicles could be separated, the gentleman from Illinois would not construe that as a reflection upon the head of the State Department. In the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations for the fiscal year 1909 a detailed statement was made as to how the money under this particular paragraph was expended. If the statement of the gentleman from Illinois is accurate, it is an outrage even to segregate the items to the extent they have been segregated in this bill, and all of the contingent and miscellaneous expenditures in the State Department should be lumped and the authority given to the Secretary of State to spend the money for the numerous items according to his will.

Whether the amount indicated in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] is sufficient for the particular purpose, I am unable to say. The statement shows that in 1908, for six horses, rent of the stable, forage, pasturing, horseshoeing, repairs to harness and vehicles, about $2,400 was expended. If the House should think that $2,400 were too much to expend for such purposes, it is not any outrageous assault upon the Secretary of State to say that he should manage to get along by expending only $2,000 for those items.

If we are to accept the conclusions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], it is an affront to all of the executive officials to place any limitation whatever either upon their will or discretion in the expenditure of public money. It does not seem to me to be an item over which it is necessary to get unduly aroused. Even gentlemen from Missouri, as well as gentlemen from Chicago and New York, are able to form some fair idea of how much should be allowed for the purposes enumerated in this amendment, even in the city of Washington. We know something about what it costs to live in our respective localities, and how that expense compares with the expense of living in the city of Washington, and, instead of it being a matter to arouse the resentment of a distinguished economist like the gentleman from Illinois, it seems to me that he should rejoice that other Members of the House are willing to give their time and energy to these trivial items and to place proper limitations upon them, so that he and myself and others may be free to devote our energies and time and attention to the greater matters that come before the House in the progress of our legislative work.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if this is not a fact, that it costs the people of the United States over $10,000 a day to run this House, and we have expended one-quarter of the working day, aggregating in value $2,500, in disposing of this little item of shoeing horses?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is not the money saving that is of so much importance as it is the information and intelligence which results at times in the executive departments of the Government, which justifies a discussion of these items. Of course, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] had his way, he would put no limitation whatever upon the discretion of the Secretary of State. Unfortunately for the Secretary of State, however, all of the Members of the House do not come from Pittsburg.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offered to accept the amendment, as far as I was concerned, which the gentleman offered, if he would not debate it, but he declined at the time. I thought it would save time, and I felt, as I think the Members of the House generally have felt, that these items do show lack of economy. They show what I submit all departmental expenses show, just what all the expenses of this House show; but when the gentleman refused it, I went and looked at his amendment, and I am sorry to say, for the sake of economy, that I, personally, shall not vote for it, because it strikes me, having looked at the details since then, that it is too small an appropriation. He says there shall only be $2,000 allowed for this purpose, and yet, at the outset, of this amount last year they spent $600 for a laborer; they spent $720 for a stable, which we certainly must allow them; they spent $594, practically $600, more for food, for forage; so there is $1,920 right off to which you can not object. Then, in addition to that, they spent several hundred dollars for repairs of harness, stable supplies, and such things. There is $1,920 right off which they have to have, and I think the gentleman has put his figure entirely too low.

The truth is we do not know. It seems these expenses are too large, and the gentleman suggested right off that we could cut it down and save a lot of money, but on looking at the figures it seems it would be obviously impossible to cut it to such an extent as he suggests, for it would hamper the department——

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. In the first place, I want to take issue with the gentleman's statement. I did not refuse to have the gentleman accept my amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. You refused to accept it and stop all debate; that was my proposition.

Mr. HAMLIN. This is what I wanted to say: Does not the gentleman believe that these horses could be kept in a feed stable here and kept for $25 each per month?

Mr. GILLETT. Twenty-five dollars apiece?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. That is what I used to pay ten years ago; whether you have to pay more or not now I do not know.

Mr. HAMLIN. You can keep them in my own country for $15——

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly you can keep them in the country——

Mr. HAMLIN. I mean in the city out in my section of the country. Now, I do not understand that we ought to pay $700 rent for a stable.

Mr. GILLETT. This stable, as I happen to know, has been in use by the State Department for years. I do not know whether they pay too much or not.

Mr. HAMLIN. It may be a stable capable of keeping 25 or 30 horses, and they have only four.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman does not know about that, neither do I.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am absolutely certain that $2,000 will be ample money.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not agree to that.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say that if we do not stop these little leaks, we might as well permit big steals.

Mr. GILLETT. I think, Mr. Chairman, I have shown that $2,000 will not be ample money, and I do not think in making any such figure as that we are acting with sufficient knowledge of the facts, and I think, therefore, this amendment should not be adopted.

I think we had better give them the amount asked. I think two or three years ago they asked a larger sum, and we cut them down to this amount of $8,000. They have been having it now for three years, and while probably it does allow them to conduct the stable on an expensive and extravagant plan, as all these stables of the different departments undoubtedly are conducted, as all the business of this House is certainly conducted, yet I do not think it would be fair to cut down this one department without some knowledge of the facts.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman submit to one more question?

Mr. GILLETT. If my time will permit.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by a vote of the committee.

Mr. GILLETT. I will answer the question.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman says three years ago they asked very much more than this and you cut them down to $8,000, and they have had that since?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does not the evidence show during all that period of time up to this spring they had six horses instead of four?

Mr. GILLETT. No; I do not know it does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired by order of the committee. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 22, after the word "dollars," insert: "Provided, That not to exceed the sum of $2,000 of the above amount shall be used for the care, subsistence, and shoeing of horses, repairs of wagons and carriage, rent of stable, pasturage, and repairs of harness."

Mr. HAMLIN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—32, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in line 21, page 46, by striking out the word "eight" and inserting the word "six."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 21, page 46, strike out "eight" and insert "six," so as to read: "Six thousand dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of building in the District of Columbia for the use of the Department of State, $3,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I regret to take even five minutes of the time of the committee in reference to a matter that is not directly under discussion, but I do feel as if the remarks made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Minnesota ought not to pass entirely without comment. So far as I am personally concerned, "my withers are unwrung." My good friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, can not disturb my equanimity or ruffle my good humor by calling attention to the delinquencies of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. No one is more ready than I am to admit the shortcomings of that gentleman. I may say this for him, however, that no one is more willing or more anxious, indeed, to profit by criticism than is the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. But in order that he may profit in this way the criticism should be intelligent, it should be founded upon information, and it should offer practical suggestions of a remedy for the condition complained of.

The gentleman read a number of items from the report in regard to the traveling expenses of the Bureau of Forestry and plainly drew the inference that all of these items were reckless, wasteful extravagance, and that the travel had not been undertaken in any good public cause. I do not remember all the quotations that he made, but I do recall the first one to which he referred, that of a certain Mr. Betts, who charged for expenses of traveling involved in attending a meeting of the National Carriage Builders' Association and delivering an address there. The National Carriage Builders' Association naturally is interested in anything that would tend to promote the prosperity of that industry.

It happens that the Bureau of Forestry has been conducting extensive investigations and experiments, as the result of which it has been discovered that a third grade, a cheap variety of wood, may be used in certain parts of carriages where heretofore it has been thought that only the very best and most expensive varieties of woods were suitable. Is it not a matter of interest and importance to a great industry to have information in respect to a question of that kind? And I have no doubt that the gentleman whose traveling expenses here have been criticised was the expert who had conducted those investigations and who was called upon by this association to bring to them, for the benefit of the great industry they represented, the results of the investigations he had made. I do not believe that there is a Member of the House who would deny that such an expenditure was entirely appropriate. I have no doubt that the majority, if not all, of the items which he criticised could be explained in just as satisfactory a way.

But suppose that the expenditures were unjustifiable? In what way has the gentleman suggested a remedy? The only thing the Committee on Agriculture could do after investigating the matter of these traveling expenses, if it concluded that there had been undue extravagance, would be to suggest to the chief of the bureau under whose direction they were made that he be more careful in the future. They could not bring any legislation here, as has been suggested, to absolutely prevent anything of the kind.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit? They could put a limitation on, limiting the amount that could be spent for such purposes.

Mr. SCOTT. The committee, as I think the gentleman will bear me out, has this year itemized the appropriation for the Bureau of Forestry to an extent which it has never been itemized before. To the very utmost of its ability the Committee on Agriculture has endeavored to meet the criticisms that have been made, and I believe gentlemen of the House will agree with me has fairly met the criticisms that have heretofore been made to the effect that appropriations were made in too great lump sums.

We have divided these Forest Service appropriations into 50 or 60 or 70 different items where heretofore the subjects have all been covered in one paragraph. I believe that the Committee on Agriculture has met the very objection which the gentleman from Minnesota makes; and I submit that his observations have not the point which remarks from the high authority which he bears in this House ought to have, and ordinarily do have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Treasury, $12,000; 3 Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $5,000 each; clerk to the Secretary, $2,500; executive clerk, $2,400; stenographer, $1,800; 3 private secretaries, 1 to each Assistant Secretary, at $1,800 each; government actuary, under control of the Treasury, $2,250; clerk of class 4 (1 transferred to office of Auditor for the Treasury); 4 clerks of class 3; 2 clerks of class 2; chief messenger (transferred from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing), $1,100; 2 assistant chief messengers, at $1,000 each (transferred from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing); 3 messengers, at $900 each (2 transferred from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing); 3 messengers (1 transferred to the office of chief clerk and superintendent, and 1 transferred from Bureau of Engraving and Printing); in all, $60,670.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve the point of order upon the following language found in lines 5 and 6, "executive clerk, $2,400." Is that a new officer?

Mr. GILLETT. It is, and I think, however, I can satisfy the gentleman that it is a desirable office; but in doing so I perhaps shall have to take three or four minutes, and would not want to keep the gentleman on his feet.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I am going to make the point of order anyhow.

Mr. GILLETT. You are not open to conviction?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, there are so many of these additions and new things. I will withhold it.

Mr. GILLETT. Well, I think it in the interest of economy.

I hope to be able to satisfy the gentleman, because the Treasury Department have taken up the matter of an entire reorganization of the department in a manner which has impressed the committee exceedingly. They have introduced reforms and reorganized their forces in such a way—as the gentleman will see if he looks at the report of the committee—as to reduce the force from 3,740 to 3,654, a reduction of 86 places and a saving of nearly $100,000. I think it is no more than fair to say that this has been done by the new blood that has come into the department, that is giving great personal attention to the administration of the different bureaus. They have found where whole masses of clerks could be dispensed with and where the work could be exactly as well done, they believe, with a very much smaller force. This has, of course, taken a great deal of the time of the Secretary and the assistant secretaries, and they can not permanently give all their time, as they did for a while, to this kind of administration. Therefore they have suggested this executive clerk for the very purpose of carrying out these reforms, which they have already inaugurated and which they expect to carry still further, so that they think in another year they can still further reduce the expenses of administration by a large sum.

And I believe, and the committee believes, that it is thoroughly in the interest of economy to carry out still further the reductions which have already been made, to allow them this one executive clerk. And I might say here, because the point will probably be raised later, that in furtherance of this we have raised the salaries of a very few men in the Treasury Department; men who have cooperated with this movement, who have proved themselves valuable, and whom we thought it was wise to encourage in this work. It is quite a new experience for the Committee on Appropriations to find the officers of one of the executive departments making radical reforms of this kind, reducing employees and reducing expenses. We thought it was something that should be encouraged; and if the gentleman will investigate it, I think he will be of that opinion. This executive clerk is the very first step in the progress of what we believe is real reform. There are several other raises, as I say, to follow later, but the general reduction of expenses far outweighs the few advances, so that the result is a very large saving; and we believe in another year it will produce an equally large saving, and that in the Treasury Department, if the present officials stay there, we are in the way really to have a better and more economically administered department.

Every once in a while a young man of energy and ability comes into a department and stirs up the stagnant waters and reduces expenses; but he shows his value, and then the trouble is, he is taken away and leaves the government service; but whenever there is an improvement of this kind, we think it should be encouraged. That sort of an improvement is taking place in this department now.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman feels that this is a step in the interest of economy?

Mr. GILLETT. I sincerely do, and I should be very sorry, for that reason, to see a point of order made against this item.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to say to the gentleman that I will give him all the support possible when it comes down to a question of economy, and therefore I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I should like to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] that, in my judgment, these three Assistant Secretaries up there—Mr. Norton, Mr. Hilles, and Mr. Curtis—would be worth to the Government or to any private corporation that was reorganizing its service easily $50,000, and probably they will be getting that before a great while from somebody else.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of chief clerk and superintendent: Chief clerk, including $300 as superintendent of Treasury building, $3,000; assistant superintendent of Treasury building, $2,500; inspector of electric-light plants, gas, and fixtures for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department, $2,250; assistant inspector of electric-light plants and draftsman, $1,800; 6 clerks of class 4; additional to 1 clerk of class 4, as bookkeeper, $100; 4 clerks of class 3; 3 clerks of class 2; 3 clerks of class 1; clerk, $1,000; clerk, $900; 2 messengers (1 transferred from Secretary's office); 5 assistant messengers; 1 messenger boy, $360; storekeeper, $1,200; telegraph operator, $1,200; telephone operator and assistant telegraph operator, $1,200; chief engineer, $1,400; 3 assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; 6 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 firemen; 5 firemen, at $660 each; coal passer, $500; locksmith and electrician, $1,400; captain of the watch, $1,400; two lieutenants of the watch, at $900 each; 68 watchmen; foreman of laborers, $1,000; 2 skilled laborers, at $840 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $720 each (1 transferred from Bureau of Engraving and Printing); wireman, $1,000; wireman, $900; 34 laborers (1 transferred from Secretary's office, and 1 from Bureau of Engraving and Printing); laborer, $600; 10 laborers, at $500 each; 3 laborers, at $480 each; plumber, $1,100; painter, $1,100; 87 charwomen; foreman of cabinet shop, $1,500; 10 cabinetmakers, at $1,000 each; cabinetmaker, $720; carpenter, $1,000; carpenter's helper, $660. For the Winder Building: Engineer, $1,000; 3 firemen; conductor of elevator, $720; 4 watchmen; 3 laborers, 1 of whom, when necessary, shall assist and relieve the conductor of elevator; laborer, $480; and 8 charwomen. For the Cox Building, 1709 New York avenue: Three watchmen-firemen, at $720 each; and 1 laborer; in all, $200,450.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to get some information. The Winder Building and the Cox Building belong to private parties, do they not?

Mr. GILLETT. The Winder Building belongs to the Government. The Cox Building is rented.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much rent is the United States Government paying for buildings in the city of Washington?

Mr. GILLETT. I am told it is about half a million dollars in round numbers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to take the gentleman's opinion as to whether he does not think it would be wise for the United States to build all the buildings it needs in this city and quit paying exorbitant rents?

Mr. GILLETT. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman; I have been of that opinion for years. I think we are paying extravagant rents for buildings in this city.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say that I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he would be in favor of spending $100,000,000 for buildings in the city of Washington?

Mr. TAWNEY. When you take into consideration the cost of maintenance of the buildings, it exceeds the expense which the Government is paying for rent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why does it cost private parties any less than it costs the Government for maintenance?

Mr. TAWNEY. I speak only from what knowledge and experience I have gained since I have been here.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if the Government does not have to pay for the cost of maintenance whether it rents the building or owns it? If the gentleman from Missouri will permit, I would like to suggest that we passed a resolution yesterday that will bring information that will completely answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. Yes; we passed a resolution the other day to get some information that is already printed and in the hands of Members.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Why did not the gentleman prevent it?

Mr. MANN. I was not in the House at the time.

Mr. GILLETT. I want to say that the exact figures of the amount that the Government is paying for rent is $459,340.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois. I feel this way about it: When I first came to Washington I thought the time might come when the capital would be moved from here. It ought never to have been located here in the beginning. The place for it is out in the Ozark Mountains, or somewhere in the center of the country, but I am certain now it will never be moved until a foreign army sacks this capital, and that is a very easy thing to do on account of its geographical location. When I came here I observed how much money the United States Government has invested and is constantly investing in permanent buildings and improvements, and I made up my mind that it never would be moved until the event of which I speak occurred, and I hope it never will.

I understand from time to time it is charged on what seems to be circumstantial evidence that the Government is paying exorbitant rents for some of these buildings in Washington. I am in favor of the United States Government building every building that it needs in this town. It can get all the money it wants at 3 per cent, and a long-time bond would be only 2 per cent. I feel reasonably certain that it is paying at least 6 or 8 or 10, and in some cases a good deal more per cent than that on the money invested in these buildings in the way of rent. That is all that I have to say, except that the sooner we do it the better we will be off.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Customs: Chief of division, $4,000; assistant chief of division, $3,000; 7 law clerks, at $2,000 each; 3 clerks of class 4; 2 clerks of class 3; 2 clerks of class 2; 4 clerks of class 1; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; clerk, $900; messenger; assistant messenger; in all, $43,660.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on lines 9 and 10. Is not that an increase of salary?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; those increases of salary were made because the Secretary advised us that this chief and assistant had quite as much to do as the collector of internal revenue and did not have the same salary. The provision is subject to a point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How long have they been drawing this salary?

Mr. GILLETT. The present salary?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Three thousand dollars and $2,000?

Mr. GILLETT. Several years.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is there any increased burden put upon them?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, it has been growing all the time, but as I say to the gentleman, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a suggestion. On page 49, line 9, it says "87 charwomen," and then a semicolon. It does not seem to be any appropriation at all.

Mr. GILLETT. The law provides what they shall receive. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph on page 50. Did the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana go to the whole paragraph?

Mr. COX of Indiana. No; only to lines 9 and 10.

Mr. GILLETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert in line 9 "$3,000" and in line 10 "$2,000," so as to give them the same salaries that they had before.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Offices of disbursing clerks: Disbursing clerk, $3,000; deputy disbursing clerk, $2,750; 2 clerks of class 4; 2 clerks of class 3; 3 clerks of class 2; 3 clerks of class 1; clerk, $1,000; assistant messenger; in all, $22,070.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on lines 10 and 11 on page 53, and to the word "dollars" in line 12. I want to get some information. Are not those new offices?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, I will say that it is new. We combined two disbursing clerks in the Treasury Department and made one disbursing clerk and one deputy clerk. That, of course, is new, but it is a saving of time, and it is a saving of a great deal of space in the building. It is something that we thought ought to be done by all means, and we did it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman believes it will be in the interest of economy?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And it is in the interest of safety.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not only in the interest of safety, as the gentleman from Illinois says, but we save in money in these two men's salaries, and we save also in clerk hire.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In what way?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The saving in the space in the building is of far more value to us in the Treasury Department than the saving in clerk hire.

Mr. BURLESON. I can give it to the gentleman exactly. By the consolidation of these two offices and the abolishment of certain of the clerks under the two offices a saving of $930 has been effected, and that is by actual mathematical calculation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. By a consolidation of these two offices there have been some clerks abolished?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, it actually saves to the Government that amount of money?

Mr. BURLESON. It does.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The deputy disbursing clerk herein provided for shall have authority to sign checks in the name of the disbursing clerk; he shall give bond to the disbursing clerk in such sum as the said disbursing clerk may require, and when so acting for the disbursing clerk shall be subject to all the liabilities and penalties prescribed by law for the official misconduct in like cases of the disbursing clerk for whom he acts, and the official bond of the disbursing clerk executed hereunder shall be made to cover and apply to the acts of the deputy disbursing clerk.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 22643, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18006. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 21428. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of public lands for certain purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6851. An act authorizing the village of Taylors Falls, Minn., and the village of St. Croix Falls, Wis., to construct a bridge across the St. Croix River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 20180. An act for the relief of Patrick Shields;

H. R. 21693. An act for the relief of William H. Hawley;

H. R. 20835. An act authorizing the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico to assign the said judges to the several judicial districts of the Territory;

H. R. 21428. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of public lands for certain purposes;

H. R. 17872. An act providing for the sale to Johnson County, in the State of Wyoming, of certain lands;

H. R. 17838. An act for the relief of George W. Flack;

H. R. 11580. An act for the erection of a monument over the grave of Brig. Gen. James Shields in St. Mary's Cemetery, Carrollton, Mo.;

H. R. 5272. An act for the relief of the Bridgeport National Bank, of Bridgeport, Ohio; and

H. R. 18593. An act to authorize the transfer of the government highway known as the Alter road, in the city of Detroit, Mich.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. SHEPPARD to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies of the papers in the case of Samuel Dickins, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE PERKINS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution (H. Res. 496), which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 496.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JAMES BRECK PERKINS, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take charge of the body of the deceased, and to make such arrangements as may be necessary for the funeral, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That a committee of this House consisting of 20 Members be appointed to attend his funeral.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were agreed to.

The Chair announced the following committee:

Mr. PAYNE, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. ALEXANDER of New York, Mr. FORNES, Mr. CALDER, Mr. FASSETT, Mr. CONRY, Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, Mr. PARSONS, Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL, Mr. GOULDEN, Mr. COCKS of New York, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. WOOD of New Jersey, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. DENBY, Mr. LOWDEN, Mr. FERRIS, Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Accordingly, in pursuance of the resolution (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendations as to improvement of roads in the Yellowstone National Park (H. Doc. No. 772)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of documents distributed by the War Department during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1909 (H. Doc. No. 771)—to the Committee on Printing and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Sabine Pass and Port Arthur Ship Canal, Texas (H. Doc. No. 773)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 12, 1910.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Glory, honor, and praise we render unto Thee, Our Father, for all Thy wondrous works toward the children of men. We thank Thee that Thou hast so loved us that Thou hast provided that Thy spirit of wisdom shall in all ages enter into faithful souls, making them Thy friends and leaders of the people. Grant, Our Father, that the memory of such may be ever in the imagination, the thoughts, and the hearts of this people, that we may incline our minds unto Thee and keep Thy commandments forever. And unto Thee, from whom cometh all glory, we render all praise; now and forever more. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19028) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, Mr. CAMPBELL, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 4671. An act to amend the military record of Aaron Cornish;

S. 6662. An act to authorize the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River in the neighborhood of Sibley, Mo., and to remove the existing structure; and

S. 6739. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 614. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Dewitt Eastman," approved January 8, 1909;

S. 863. An act to correct the military record of John M. Miller;

S. 864. An act to correct the military record of John Oates; and

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill H. R. 18006, an act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

RECEPTION OF THE STATUE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I beg leave to submit to the Senate the communication which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina presents to the Senate a communication, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the communication as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Columbia, March 12, 1910.

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

It gives me great pleasure, as governor of the State of South Carolina, to present to the Congress of the United States a marble statue of John C. Calhoun, a native of South Carolina, and one whose name is honored wherever known.

John C. Calhoun was one of the greatest men that this country has produced, and a statesman of renown who has left his impress upon this Nation, and whose name is indelibly inscribed upon the pages of history, both national and State.

The State of South Carolina begs now to present through me, as her governor, to the Congress of the United States, as the representative of the people of the United States, this beautiful statue of a great and good man.

Respectfully,

M. F. ANSEL,
Governor of South Carolina.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I call up, in the absence of my colleague [Mr. TILLMAN], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness, Senate concurrent resolution No. 20, submitted by him on the 12th of January, and I ask for its adoption.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 20.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of John C. Calhoun, presented by the State of South Carolina to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for the purity of his life and his distinguished services to the State and Nation.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of South Carolina.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], whose illness we all deplore, did me the honor to ask me to take part in the ceremonies connected with the reception of the statue of Mr. Calhoun, I was very much gratified by his request. In the years which preceded the civil war South Carolina and Massachusetts represented more strongly, more extremely, perhaps, than any other States the opposing principles which were then in conflict. Now, when that period has drifted back into the quiet waters of history it seems particularly appropriate that Massachusetts should share in the recognition which we give to-day to the memory of the great Senator from South Carolina. If I may be pardoned a personal word, it seems also fitting that I should have the privilege of speaking upon this occasion, for my own family were friends and followers in successive generations of Hamilton and Webster and Sumner. I was brought up in the doctrines and beliefs of the great Federalist, the great Whig, and the great Republican. It seems to me, I repeat, not unfitting that one so brought up should have the opportunity to speak here when we commemorate the distinguished statesman who, during the last twenty-five years of his life, represented with unrivaled ability those theories of government to which Hamilton, Webster, and Sumner were all opposed.

From 1787 to 1865 the real history of the United States is to be found in the struggle between the forces of separatism and those of nationalism. Other issues and other questions during that period rose and fell, absorbed the attention of the country, and passed out of sight, but the conflict between the nationalist spirit and the separatist spirit never ceased. There might be a lull in the battle, public interest might turn, as it frequently did, to other questions, but the deep-rooted, underlying contest was always there, and finally took possession of every passion and every thought, until it culminated at last in the dread arbitrament of arms. The development of the United States as a nation, in contradistinction to a league of States, falls naturally into four divisions. The first is covered by the administrations of Washington and Adams, when the Government was founded by Washington and organized by Hamilton, and when the broad lines of the policies by which its conduct was to be regulated were laid down. When Washington died, the work of developing the national power passed into the hands of another great Virginian, John Marshall, who, in the cool retirement of the Supreme Court for thirty years, steadily and surely, but almost unnoticed at the moment, converted the Constitution from an experiment in government, tottering upon the edge of the precipice which had engulfed the Confederation, into the charter of a nation. While he was engaged upon this work, to which he brought not only the genius of the lawyer and the jurist, but of the statesman as well, another movement went on outside the court room, which stimulated the national life to a degree only realized in after years, when men began to study the history of the time.

By the Revolution we had separated ourselves from England and established nominally our political independence. But that political independence was only nominal. The colonial spirit still prevailed. During the two hundred years of colonial life our fortunes had been determined by events in Europe. It was no mere metaphor which Pitt employed when he said he would "conquer America upon the plains of Germany," and the idea embodied in the words of the Great Commoner clung to us even after the adoption of the Constitution, for habits of thought, impalpable as air, are very slow to change. The colonial spirit resisted Washington's neutrality policy when the French revolution broke out, and as the years passed was still strong enough to hamper all our movements and force us to drift helplessly upon the stormy seas of the Napoleonic wars. The result was that we were treated by France on one side and by England on the other in a manner which fills an American's heart with indignation and with shame even to read of it a hundred years afterwards. And then in those days of humiliation there arose a group of young men, chiefly from the South and West, who made up their minds that this condition was unbearable; that they would assert the independence of the United States; that they would secure to her due recognition among the nations; and that rather than have the shameful conditions which then existed continue they would fight. They did not care much with whom they fought, but they intended to vindicate the right of the United States to live as a respected and self-respecting independent nation. Animated by this spirit, they plunged the country into war with England.

They did not stop to make proper preparations; their legislation was often as violent as it was ineffective; the war was not a success on land, and was redeemed only by the victory at New Orleans and by the brilliant fighting of our little navy. On the face of the treaty of Ghent it did not appear that we had gained a single one of the points for which we went to war, and yet the war party had really achieved a complete triumph. Through their determination to fight at any cost we were recognized at last as an independent nation, and, what was far more important, we had forever destroyed the colonial idea that the politics and the peace of the United States were to veer hither and thither at the bidding of every breeze which blew from Europe. Such work could not have been done without a vigorous growth of the national spirit and of the national power, and the group of brilliant men who brought on the war were entirely conscious that in carrying out their policy they were stimulating the national—the American—spirit to which they appealed. Chief among the leaders of that group of young men who were responsible for the origin and conduct of the war of 1812 was John C. Calhoun.

As the war, with its influences and results, sank back into the past, domestic questions took possession of the field, and the conflict between the separatist and national forces which had been temporarily obscured forged again to the front, but under deeply altered conditions. When John Marshall died in 1835, his great work done, the cause which he had so long sustained had already entered upon its third period—the period of debate—and the task which had fallen from the failing hands of the great Chief Justice was taken up in another field by Daniel Webster, who for twenty years stood forth as the champion of the proposition not that the Constitution could make a nation but that, as a matter of fact, it had made a nation. Against him was Calhoun, and between the two was Henry Clay. The twenty years of debate which then ensued are known familiarly as the days of Clay, Webster, and Calhoun. The names of the Presidents who occupied the White House during most of that time have faded, and the era of debate in the history of the parliamentary struggle between the national and the separatist principles is not associated with them but with the great Senators who made it illustrious. As the century passed its zenith all three died, closely associated in death as they had been in life. The compromise which Clay and Webster defended and of which Calhoun despaired was quickly wrecked in the years which followed, and then came war and the completion of the work begun by Washington, through the life and death of Abraham Lincoln and the sacrifices and the tragedy of four years of civil war.

To have been, as Calhoun was, for forty years a chief figure in that period of conflict and development—first a leader among the able men who asserted the reality of the national independence and established the place of the United States among the nations of the earth, and afterwards the undisputed chief of those who barred the path of the national movement—implies a man of extraordinary powers both of mind and character. He merits not only the high consideration which history accords, but it is also well that we should honor his memory here, and, turning aside from affairs of the moment, should recall him and his work that we may understand what he was and what he meant. He was preeminently a strong man, and strong men, leaders of mankind, who shape public thought and decide public action are very apt to exhibit in a high degree the qualities of the race from which they spring. Calhoun came of a vigorous race and displayed the attributes, both moral and intellectual, which mark that race, with unusual vividness and force. On both sides he was of Scotch descent. His name is a variant of the distinguished Scotch name Colquhoun. It was a place name, assumed at the beginning of the thirteenth century, when they came into possession of certain lands, by the noble family which was destined to bear it for many generations. Judged by the history of the knights who in long succession held the estates and the title, the Colquhouns or Calhouns, who spread and multiplied until they became a clan, were a very strong, very able, very tenacious stock. They had great need of all these qualities in order to maintain themselves in power, property, and position during the five hundred years which elapsed before the first Calhoun and the first Caldwell started on the migration which, after a brief pause in the north of Ireland, carried Patrick Calhoun and some of the Caldwells over the ocean to South Carolina. Both families were typical of their race, for the Colquhouns are spoken of as a Gaelic clan, while the Caldwells were Lowlanders from the Solway. In order to understand these types we must go back for a moment into those dim, almost uncharted, regions of history which disclose to us the tribes of the Germanic forests pouring down upon the wreck of the Roman Empire. When the successive waves of Teutonic invasion broke upon Britain they swept up to the mountains of the North, driving the native Picts and Scots before them, and no part of their conquest was more thoroughly Danish and Saxon than the lowlands of Scotland. But the Highlander, who represented the survival of the Celts, and the Lowlander, who represented the invaders, were quickly welded together in a common hostility to their great and grasping neighbor of the South. The Celtic blood mingled with that of the descendants of the Teutonic tribes. They quarreled, they fought side by side, they intermarried; they modified each other and gradually adopted each other's customs and habits of thought. We have but to read "Rob Roy" to learn that although the Highlander looked down upon the Lowlander as a trader and shopkeeper, and the Lowlander regarded the Highlander as wild and barbarous, the ties of blood and common suffering were strong between them and that they were all Scotchmen. It is a remarkable history, that of Scotland, one of the most remarkable in the annals of men. Shut up in that narrow region of mountain and of lake, a land of storm and cold and mist, with no natural resources except a meager soil and a tempestuous sea to yield a hard-earned living; poor in this world's goods, few in number, for six hundred years these hardy people maintained their independence against their powerful foe to the southward and only united with him at last upon equal terms. For six hundred years they kept their place among the nations, were the allies of France, were distinguished for their military virtues on the Continent of Europe, and cherished a pride of race and country to which their deeds gave them an unclouded title. They did all these things, this little people, by hard fighting. For six hundred years they fought, sometimes in armies, sometimes in bands, always along the border, frequently among themselves. It was a terrible training. It did not tend to promote the amenities of life, but it gave slight chance of survival to the timid or the weak. It produced the men who fell with their King at Flodden. They could die there where they stood beneath the royal standard, but they could not be conquered.

Those six centuries of bitter struggle for life and independence, waged continuously against nature and man, not only made the Scotch formidable in battle, renowned in every camp in Europe, but they developed qualities of mind and character which became inseperable from the race. For it was not merely by changing blows that the Scotch maintained their national existence. Under the stress of all these centuries of trial they learned to be patient and persistent, with a fixity of purpose which never weakened, a tenacity which never slackened, and a determination which never wavered. The Scotch intellect, passing through the same severe ordeal, as it was quickened, tempered, and sharpened, so it acquired a certain relentlessness in reasoning which it never lost. It emerged at last complete, vigorous, acute, and penetrating. With all these strong qualities of mind and character was joined an intensity of conviction which burned beneath the cool and calculating manner and of which the stern and unmoved exterior gave no sign, like the fire of a furnace, rarely flaming, but giving forth a fierce and lasting heat. To this somewhat rare combination we owe the proverbial phrase of the "perfervidum ingenium Scotorum," an attribute little to be expected in a people so outwardly calm and self-contained. To them, in the struggle of life, could be applied the words in which Macaulay described Cromwell's army: "They marched to victory with the precision of machines, while burning with the wildest fanaticism of Crusaders."

After the union, under Queen Anne, peace came gradually to the long-distracted land, broken only by the Jacobite risings of 1715 and 1745, and then the Scotch intellect found its opportunity and began to flower. In the latter part of the eighteenth and the first part of the nineteenth century Scotland gave to poetry Scott and Burns and Campbell; to history Hume and Robertson; to metaphysics Hamilton, Reid, and Stuart; to fiction Smollet and the "Author of Waverly;" to political economy Adam Smith; and these are only the greatest luminaries in a firmament of stars. Edinburgh became one of the intellectual centers of western civilization, and the genius of Scotland was made famous in every field of thought and imagination. It was just at this time that John Caldwell Calhoun came upon the stage, for the Scotch intellect, trained and disciplined through the darkness and the conflicts of six hundred years, blossomed in the New World as in the Old when once the long pressure was removed, when the sword needed no longer to be kept always unsheathed and men could sleep without the haunting fear that they might be awakened at any moment by the light of burning homesteads and the hoarse shouts of raiders from over the border whose path was ever marked by desolation and bloodshed.

In the inadequate description which I have attempted of the Scotch character and intellect, slowly forged and welded and shaped by many stern, hard-fighting generations, I think I have set forth the mental and moral qualities of Mr. Calhoun. He had an intellect of great strength, a keen and penetrating mind; he thought deeply and he thought clearly; he was relentless in reasoning and logic; he never retreated from a conclusion to which his reasoning led. And with all this he had the characteristic quality of his race, the "perfervidum ingenium," the intensity of conviction which burned undimmed until his heart ceased to beat. Thus endowed by nature and equipped with as good an education as could then be obtained in the United States, Mr. Calhoun entered public life at the moment when the American people were smarting under the insults and humiliations heaped upon them by France and England, and were groping about for some issue from their troubles and some vindication of the national honor and independence. Calhoun and his friends, men like Henry Clay, and like Lowndes and Cheves, from his own State, came in on the wave of popular revolt against the conditions to which the country had been brought. Wavering diplomacy, gunboats on wheels, and even embargoes, which chiefly punished our own commerce, had ceased to appeal to them. They had the great advantage of knowing what they meant to do. They were determined to resist. If necessary, they intended to fight.

They dragged their party, their reluctant President, and their divided country helplessly after them. The result was the war of 1812. With war came not only the appeal to the national spirit, which was only just waking into life, but the measures without which war can not be carried on. The party which had opposed military and naval forces, public debts, tariffs, banks, and a strong central government now found themselves raising armies, equipping and building a navy, borrowing money, imposing high import duties, sustaining the bank, and developing in all directions the powers of the Government of the United States. The doctrines of strict construction, which had been the idols of the ruling party, looked far less attractive when invoked by New England against their own policies, and the Constitution, which Jefferson set aside, as he thought, to acquire Louisiana, became most elastic in the hands of those who had sought to draw its bands so tightly that the infant Nation could hardly move its limbs. Mr. Calhoun, with his mind set on the accomplishment of the great purpose of freeing the United States from foreign aggression, and thus lifting it to its rightful place among the nations of the earth, did not shrink from the conclusions to which his purpose led. His mind was too clear and too rigidly logical to palter with or seek to veil the inevitable results of the policy he supported. As he wished the end, he was too virile, too honest in his mental processes, not to wish the means to that end. The war left a legacy of debts and bankruptcy, and in dealing with these problems it was Calhoun who reported the bill for a new bank of the United States, who sustained the tariff of 1816, defended the policy of protection to manufactures, and advocated a comprehensive scheme of internal improvements.

Then it was that he declared in the House on the 31st of January, 1816, when he reported the bill setting aside certain funds for internal improvements, after urging an increase of the army, that—

> As to the species of preparation * * * the navy most certainly, in any point of view, occupies the first place. It is the most safe, most effectual, and cheapest mode of defense.

In 1814 (Annals of Congress, p. 1965) he said in regard to manufactures that—

He hoped at all times and under every policy they would be protected with due care.

Two years later he returned to the subject as a part of his theory of the national defense and said:

In regard to the question how far manufactures ought to be fostered, it is the duty of this country, as a means of defense, to encourage its domestic industry, more especially that part of it which provides the necessary materials for clothing and defense * * *. The question relating to manufactures must not depend on the abstract principle that industry, left to pursue its own course, will find in its own interests all the encouragement that is necessary. Laying the claims of manufacturers entirely out of view, on general principles, without regard to their interests, a certain encouragement should be extended, at least to our woolen and cotton manufactures.

At the close of the same year, December 16, 1816 (Annals of Congress, 1816–17, pp. 853, 854), he said:

Let it not be forgotten, let it be forever kept in mind, that the extent of our Republic exposes us to the greatest of all calamities, next to the loss of liberty, and even to that in its consequence—disunion. We are great, and rapidly—I was about to say fearfully—growing. This is our pride and danger, our weakness and our strength. Little does he deserve to be intrusted with the liberties of this people who does not raise his mind to these truths. We are under the most imperious obligation to counteract every tendency to disunion * * *. If * * * we permit a low, sordid, selfish, and sectional spirit to take possession of this House, this happy scene will vanish. We will divide, and in its consequence will follow misery and despotism.

A little more than a month later, broadening his theme, to which he constantly recurred, and speaking of internal improvements (February 4, 1817), he said:

It is mainly urged that Congress can only apply the public money in execution of the enumerated powers. I am no advocate for refined arguments on the Constitution. The instrument was not intended as a thesis for the logician to exercise his ingenuity on. It ought to be construed with plain good sense; and what can be more express than the Constitution on this point? * * * If the framers had intended to limit the use of the money to the powers afterwards enumerated and defined nothing could have been more easy than to have expressed it plainly. * * * But suppose the Constitution to be silent; why should we be confined in the application of moneys to the enumerated powers? There is nothing in the reason of the thing that I can perceive why it should be so restricted; and the habitual and uniform practice of the Government coincides with my opinion. * * * In reply to this uniform course of legislation I expect it will be said that our Constitution is founded on positive and written principles and not on precedents. I do not deny the position, but I have introduced these instances to prove the uniform sense of Congress and the country—for they have not been objected to—as to our powers; and surely they furnish better evidence of the true interpretation of the Constitution than the most refined and subtle arguments. Let it not be argued that the construction for which I contend gives a dangerous extent to the powers of Congress. In this point of view I conceive it to be more safe than the opposite. By giving a reasonable extent to the money power it exempts us from the necessity of giving a strained and forced construction to the other enumerated powers.

From the House of Representatives he passed to the Cabinet of President Monroe, where he served from 1817 to 1825 as Secretary of War, showing high capacity as an administrator. He took the department avowedly as a reformer, for the lesson of our unreadiness and our lack of military preparation had been burned into his mind by the bitter experiences of the war of 1812. The army was reduced by Congress during his tenure of office, but organization, discipline, and efficiency were all advanced by his well-directed efforts.

In 1825 Mr. Calhoun was elected Vice-President, and was reelected four years later. In 1832 he resigned the Vice-Presidency to become Senator from South Carolina. His resignation, followed by his acceptance of the Senatorship, marks his public separation from the policies of his earlier years and the formal devotion of his life to the cause of states rights and slavery. The real division had begun some years before he left the Vice-Presidency. His change of attitude culminated in his support of nullification and in his bitter quarrel with Jackson, which was all the more violent because they were of the same race and were both possessed of equal strength of will and intensity of conviction.

I have thus referred to the change in Mr. Calhoun's position solely because of its historical significance, marking, as it does, the beginning of a new epoch in the great conflict between the contending principles of nationalism and separatism. In his own day he was accused of inconsistency, and the charge was urged and repelled with the heat usual to such disputes. Nothing, as a rule, is more futile or more utterly unimportant than efforts to prove inconsistency. It is a favorite resort in debate, and it may therefore be supposed that it is considered effective in impressing the popular mind. Historically, it is a charge which has little weight unless conditions lend it an importance which is never inherent in the mere fact itself. If no man ever changed his opinions, if no one was open to the teachings of experience, human progress would be arrested and the world would stagnate in an intellectual lethargy. Inconsistency Emerson has declared to be the bugbear of weak minds, and this is entirely true of those who, dreading the accusation, shrink from adopting an opinion or a faith which they believe to be true, but to which they have formerly been opposed. Mr. Calhoun defined inconsistency long before the day when the charge was brought against him with that fine precision of thought which was so characteristic of all his utterances.

Men can not go straight forward—

He said in the House in 1814—

but must regard the obstacles which impede their course. Inconsistency consists in a change of conduct when there is no change of circumstances which justify it.

Tried by this accurate standard, Mr. Calhoun is as little to be criticised for his change of position as Mr. Webster for his altered attitude in regard to the system of protection. With the new conditions and new circumstances both men changed on important questions of policy, and both were justified from their respective points of view in doing so. That Mr. Calhoun went further than Mr. Webster, changing not only as to a policy, but in his views of the Constitution and the structure of government, does not in the least affect the truth of the general proposition. The very measures which he had once fostered and defended had brought into being a situation which he felt with unerring prescience portended the destruction of the fundamental principles in which he believed and of a social and economic system which he thought vital to the safety and prosperity of the people whom he represented. The national force which he had helped to strengthen, the central government which he had so powerfully aided to build up, seemed to him to have become the creation of Frankenstein, a being which threatened to destroy its creators and all he personally held most dear. It was inevitable that he should strive with all his strength to stay the progress of what he thought would bring ruin to the system in which he believed. Once committed to this opinion, he was incapable of finding a halfway house where he could rest in peace or a compromise which he could accept with confidence. His reason carried him to the inevitable end which his inexorable logic demanded, and to that reason and that logic he was loyal with all the loyalty of strong conviction and an honest mind. There is no need to discuss either the soundness or the validity of the opinions he held. That is a question which has long since passed before the tribunal of history. All that concerns us to-day is to recall the manner in which Calhoun carried on his long struggle of twenty-five years in behalf of principles to which he was utterly devoted. He brought to the conflict extraordinary mental and moral qualities, deep conviction, an iron will, a powerful mind, an unsparing logic, and reasoning powers of the highest order. Burr said that anyone who went onto paper with Alexander Hamilton was lost. Anyone who admitted Mr. Calhoun's premises was lost in like fashion. Once caught in the grasp of that penetrating and relentless intellect, there was no escape. You must go with it to the end.

He fought his fight with unbending courage, asking no quarter and giving none. He flinched from no conclusion; he faced every result without change or concession. He had no fear of the opponents who met him in debate. He felt assured in his own heart that he could hold his own against all comers. But he must have known, for he was not a man who ever suffered from self-deception, that the enemies whom he could not overcome were beyond the range of argument and debate. The unconquerable foes were the powerful and silent forces of the time of which the great uprising of 1848 in behalf of political liberty was but a manifestation. The world of civilized man was demanding a larger freedom, and slavery, economically unsound, was a survival and an anachronism. Even more formidable was the movement for national unity, which was world-wide. It was stirring in Germany and was in active life in Italy. The principle of separatism, of particularism, was at war with the spirit of the time. The stars in their courses fought against Sisera, and Calhoun, with his keen perceptions, must have known in his heart that he was defending his cause against hopeless odds. But he never blenched and his gallant spirit never failed or yielded. When the crisis of 1850 came, Clay brought forward his last and most famous compromise, which was supported by Webster. The two Whig leaders were filled with dread as they contemplated the perils which at that moment menaced the Union and were ready to go far on the road of concession. Calhoun, then nearing his death, had no faith in the compromise. He saw with that clearness of vision which nothing could dim that in the existing state of public thought, in the presence of the aspirations for freedom and national unity which then filled the minds of men throughout the world of western civilization, no compromise such as Clay proposed could possibly endure. He had his own plan, which he left as a legacy to his country. But his proposition was no compromise. It settled the question. It divided the country under the forms of law and made the National Government only a government in name. The solution was complete, but it was impossible. Clay's compromise, as everyone knows, was adopted. There was a brief lull, and then the mighty forces of the age swept it aside and pressed forward in their inevitable conflict.

I think Calhoun understood all this, which is so plain now and was so hidden then, better than either of his great opponents. If they realized the situation as he did, they at all events did not admit it. Clay, with the sanguine courage which always characterized him, with the invincible hopefulness which never deserted him, gave his last years to his supreme effort to turn aside the menace of the time by a measure of mutual concession. Webster sustained Clay, but with far less buoyancy of spirit or of hope. Thus, just sixty years ago, they all stood together for the last time, these three men who gave their names to an epoch in our history and who typified in themselves the tendencies of the time. Before two years more had passed they had all three gone, and the curtain had fallen on that act of the great drama in which they had played the leading parts. It is a moment in our history which has always seemed to me to possess an irresistible attraction. Not merely are the printed records, the speeches that were then made, and the memoirs then written of absorbing interest, but the men themselves not only filled but looked their parts, which is far from common in the case of actors in the never-ending drama of humanity. They all look in their portraits as imagination tells us they should look, and I share the faith of Carlyle in the evidence of portraiture. Over the vigorous, angular, and far from handsome features of Henry Clay is spread that air of serenity and of cheerfulness which was one among the many qualities which so drew to him the fervent affection of thousands of men. We can realize, as we look, the fascination which attracted people to him, the charm which enabled him, as one of his admirers said:

> To cast off his friends as the huntsman his pack,
> For he knew when he pleased he could whistle them back.

A gallant soul, an inspiring leader, a dashing, winning, impulsive nature, brilliant talents—I think one can see them all there in the face of Henry Clay. Turn to the latest portraits of Webster and Calhoun, and you pass into another world. They are two of the most remarkable heads, two of the most striking, most compelling faces in the long annals of portraiture. They are widely different, so far as the outer semblance is concerned. The great leonine head of Webster, charged with physical and mental strength, the massive jaw, the eyes, as Carlyle said, glowing like dull anthracite furnaces beneath the heavy brows, seem at the first glance to have no even remote resemblance to the haggard face of Calhoun, with the dark, piercing, yet somber, eyes looking out from cavernous orbits, the high, intellectual forehead, the stern, strong mouth and jaw, all printed deep with the lines of suffering endured in silence. But if we look again and consider more deeply we can see that there is a likeness between them. The last photographs of Webster, the last portraits of Calhoun, show us a certain strong resemblance which is not, I think, the mere creation of a fancy bred by our knowledge of the time. Both are exceptionally powerful faces. In both great intellect, great force, and the pride of thought are apparent, and both are deeply tragic in their expression. It is not the tragedy of disappointment because they had failed to attain the office which was the goal of their ambition. That was the shallow explanation of excited contemporary judgment. Personal disappointment does not, and can not, leave the expression we find in those two faces. There is a "listening fear in their regard;" not a personal fear—they were too great for that—but a dread because they heard, as other men could not hear, the hand of fate knocking at the door. The shadow of the coming woe fell darkly across their last years, and the tragedy which weighed them down was the tragedy of their country. It was thus that Webster looked when, in the 7th of March speech in the great passage on "peaceable secession," he cried out in agony of spirit:

> What States are to secede? What is to remain American? What am I to be? An American no longer? Am I to become a sectional man, a local man, a separatist, with no country in common with the gentlemen who sit around me here, or who fill the other House of Congress? Heaven forbid! Where is the flag of the Republic to remain? Where is the eagle still to tower? Or is he to cower and shrink and fall to the ground?

However Webster and Calhoun disagreed, they both knew that the Union could not be lightly broken. They knew the disruption of the States would be a convulsion. They foresaw that it would bring war, the war which Webster predicted, and they both turned with dread from the vision which haunted them.

We catch the same note in the words of Calhoun on March 5, 1850, when he declared, "If I am judged by my acts, I trust I shall be found as firm a friend of the Union as any man within it." Despite all he had said and done, he still clung to the Union he had served so long, and when as the month closed and he lay upon his deathbed the thought of the future, dark with menace, was still with him, and he was heard to murmur: "The South! The poor South! God knows what will become of her."

So they passed away, the three great Senators, and the vast silent forces which moved mankind and settled the fate of nations marched forward to their predestined end.

We do well to place here a statue of Calhoun. I would that he could stand with none but his peers about him and not elbowed and crowded by the temporarily notorious and the illustrious obscure. His statue is here of right. He was a really great man, one of the great figures of our history. In that history he stands out clear, distinct, commanding. There is no trace of the demagogue about him. He was a bold as well as a deep thinker, and he had to the full the courage of his convictions. The doctrines of socialism were as alien to him as the worship of commercialism. He "raised his mind to truths." He believed that statesmanship must move on a high plane, and he could not conceive that mere money making and money spending were the highest objects of ambition in the lives of men or nations.

He was the greatest man South Carolina has given to the Nation. That in itself is no slight praise, for from the days of the Laurenses, the Pinckneys, the Rutledges, from the time of Moultrie and Sumter and Marion to the present day, South Carolina has always been conspicuous in peace and war for the force, the ability, and the character of the men who have served her and given to her name its high distinction in our history. But Calhoun was much more even than this. He was one of the most remarkable men, one of the greatest minds that American public life can show. It matters not that before the last tribunal the verdict went against him, that the extreme doctrines to which his imperious logic carried him have been banned and barred, the man remains greatly placed in our history. The unyielding courage, the splendid intellect, the long devotion to the public service, the pure, unspotted private life are all there, are all here with us now, untouched and unimpaired for after ages to admire. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, it is with a feeling of pride that every South Carolinian has met to-day to do honor to this great statesman, and it is with particular sadness that the occasion should be so incomplete in not having with us to-day the senior Senator from our State [Mr. TILLMAN], who takes such a pride in the history of his State and especially in that of Calhoun. The senior Senator was to have had charge of these ceremonies.

A man is largely the product of his environment. The period at which the life of John C. Calhoun began was, perhaps, the most momentous in the history of the civilized nations of the world.

The immigration here was by those who sought an asylum from the oppressions and wrongs of those governments of the Old World which refused or were incapable of adjusting themselves to the growing sense of the sovereignty of the individual, which sense was being fostered by the rapid spread of education, and this was largely the cause of the production at the time of the American Revolution and the years immediately subsequent thereto of those great characters which, in military and civil affairs, stand out as possessing such wonderful powers of mind and character. Chief among these is he whose statue we unveil to-day in the Hall of Fame.

Born March 17, 1782, his childhood was spent among those scenes and under those influences which contributed largely to his future career.

According to the record, his opportunities for education, in an academic sense, were limited, but in the sense of the period in which he lived were, perhaps, the most fortunate that could befall a mind and character such as his. He came at a time to which all the lines of the past converged and from which were to radiate the influences that were to mold the future. The colonies of America had thrown off the yoke of oppression of the mother country, because they had agreed that the right of the governed to a voice in the government was inherent and inalienable, and that the peace, prosperity, and progress of the human race could only be brought about by securing to each individual the right of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;" that no man—no majority of men—had any right, divine or human, to invade this inalienable right.

He was born in the closing years of the struggle for American independence, for the establishment of a democratic form of government. His childhood and youth were spent during those years when the genius of mankind was attempting to solve the vexed problem of the ages—the problem of a government of the people, for the people, and by the people.

The different States, which at that time formed the thirteen original colonies, had met and formulated in convention that wonderful instrument known as the Constitution of the United States.

All history testifies to the fact that the labors of these men were directed to one main essential point—the framing of an instrument so in accord with the inherent right of liberty-loving men, that the oppressions they had been subjected to in the past should not be repeated in the future, and that this instrument should be so worded and so guarded at every point that the weakest individual, as well as the weakest community, should be protected in all the sacred rights that by nature they were entitled to.

Each State delegated such powers to the General Government as in its opinion was essential to the general protection and welfare, reserving to each State those powers which, in its sovereign capacity, it was better qualified to exercise for itself.

This was the school—the preparatory school—in which the young South Carolinian was being trained for his future career. How marvelously he had absorbed the cardinal principles of the times, his future career wonderfully attests. Perhaps no one of all the illustrious men who make this epoch of our history famous embodied and became the exponent of the spirit of the time as did Calhoun. This is due to the fact that he belonged to that section of the Union which represented the oppressed, and consequently called forth the same protest that gave rise to the Revolution and the Constitution.

As I have said, his academic opportunities were limited, but with singular application he availed himself of such opportunities as came within his reach. At the age of 19 he entered Yale College, graduating two years later with distinction. He studied law at Litchfield, Conn., and in Charleston, S. C. He was elected to the legislature in 1809, serving two years in that body. In 1811 he was elected a Member of Congress and immediately began that brilliant career which suffered no diminution or abatement, but grew and expanded with the years until cut short by death March 31, 1850. From 1817 to 1825 he was Secretary of War in President Monroe's Cabinet. He brought to that department that same devotion to truth, to the discovery of the principles that underlie and control the perfection of every department or division of life or government, and out of the chaos that then engulfed this arm of the Government he perfected that system which has resulted in the present efficient state of this department.

Chosen to the Vice-Presidency in 1825, he discharged the functions of that office with the same distinction and power that had characterized his previous career. In 1832 he resigned the Vice-Presidency to become a factor as a Senator of the United States in resisting what he believed was an encroachment upon the sacred compact of the Constitution of the United States. And here on the floor of this, the highest tribunal of the rights of the people on the globe, no voice has ever been raised, nor argument formulated, nor logic so irresistible, as his in the defense of the weak against the encroachment of the strong.

His interpretation of the Constitution was according to the spirit that gave it birth; the unjust taxation of England was the occasion of the revolt of the colonies; and the triumph of liberty against this oppression was the cause and opportunity of the writing of that sacred instrument. And when the same methods were being used to enrich one section of the Union at the expense of another, Calhoun plead with all the power of his earnest and loyal soul for the right of his section to enjoy the benefits of that that had been given it by God and that he supposed had been guaranteed to her by the Constitution, as the colonies had plead for their rights under God and their charter.

No clearer exposition of the theory of human government has ever been written than his marvelous disquisition on government. He touches the keynote of all that has embroiled nation against nation in civil strife when he says that human selfishness unrestrained leads to the disastrous abuse of power. His sense of justice and right was so acute; his own conception of truth so clear that he could not for a moment tolerate the sophistry of those who, under the guise of the liberal construction of the Constitution, were attempting to enrich themselves and their section at the expense of another and less populous section of the Union.

In his famous debate with the great Webster on the question of states rights he plead for that construction of the Constitution which was in accord with the spirit of its birth and which was intended to guarantee to each State and community the fullest possible measure of local self-government. He believed, and with resistless logic proved, that there was no power granted in the Constitution to coerce a State in accepting a law which unjustly discriminated against her enjoyment of every right and privilege enjoyed by another.

He has been criticised for having changed his attitude on the subject of a protective tariff. It is true that the first protective tariff of 1816 he did advocate, as every loyal American did, for the reason that he believed that in the emergency of war our country, being new and unprepared in manufacturing enterprises, was unable to supply her people with those articles necessary for their comfort and convenience, and that in case of a blockade or an embargo, such as we had just experienced, great suffering would result. Consequently he advocated fostering and hastening the efficiency of such enterprises as would render us independent in case of a repetition of a like experience. He realized full well the danger of such an experiment, for none knew more perfectly than he the power of human greed, but relying upon the good sense, experience, and patriotism of Americans, he believed that when the fostering care of the Government had insured the establishment of these enterprises it would not tolerate the extremes to which their greed subsequently led. No more than his South Carolina forefathers did he believe in ratifying the Constitution that it would be used as an instrument to coerce his State in paying, as they believed, an unjust tribute to this protected greed. As he favored the one for patriotic reasons, so he resisted the other for the same high reason. However subsequent events may have resulted, there is no one to deny the fact that the course of Mr. Calhoun was consistent and his logic irresistible.

He loved the Union, and it vexed his soul to know that the pride and honor of his State was being so humiliated that he foresaw that unless some measure could be adopted by which the oppression might be relieved, it would lead to disunion, which, to him, was the greatest of all possible calamities.

The two great questions involved—taxation, and the abolition of slavery—though in the minds of the protectionists and abolitionists they may have been disassociated from any reference to sections of the country, yet, in their application financially, socially, and commercially, the South was the section that was to bear the brunt of the entire loss and the necessary suffering consequent therefrom. Therefore, as to the tariff, South Carolina passed her famous ordinance of nullification. Under the teachings of Mr. Calhoun it was believed that so radical a step would bring those advocating this measure to a realization of the wrong that they were perpetrating; and for a time it did have this effect. Mr. Clay interposed his great influence and brought about a compromise, which for a time allayed the friction engendered by this legislation.

The other question, that of slavery, involved far different elements. It was true that there was a seeming inconsistency in democratic America legalizing slavery within her borders. The institution of slavery did, perhaps, tend to create an aristocracy, in fact if not in name, which our Constitution took pains to provide against. There was also a moral element involved which was at variance with the avowed spirit of the New World.

But notwithstanding this, a slave was the only property recognized and provided for by the Constitution. And Mr. Calhoun plead for the right of the South, under the Constitution, to maintain her own institutions and to solve the economic and domestic questions that arose within each State by virtue of the reserved powers claimed and held by each State under the Constitution.

The institution of slavery may have been, and perhaps was, a moral and political wrong, but it was also recognized by Mr. Calhoun as a moral and political wrong for those who could not and did not profit by this institution, and who had recognized it in the organic law of the land to attempt to coerce the South and to disturb the balance of power between the two sections by refusing the admission into the Union of any State that was likely to be a slaveholding State. There was another element involved in this great controversy between the sections which was not properly understood and which to-day is beginning to be realized by those whom fanaticism and passion had rendered incapable of appreciating and understanding the facts, and that was the nature of the negro himself. The people of the South understood that he was incapable of appreciating those higher traits of character and of life that would make him a fit subject for the exercise of the functions of citizenship.

Mr. Calhoun speaks this clearer than I may hope to do, when, on August 12, 1849, he gave utterance to these words:

I have now stated my reasons for believing that the abolition agitation will never stop of itself, nor ever will be stopped through the presidential election or the action of this Government, and that nothing short of the united and fixed determination of the South to maintain her rights at every hazard can stop it. Without this, the end must be emancipation in the worst possible form—far worse than if done by our own voluntary act, instead of being compelled to adopt it at the bidding of a dominant section whose interest and sympathy for them, and hostility to us, would combine to reverse the present relations between the two races in the South by raising the inferior to be the favored and superior and sinking the superior to be the inferior and despised.

The horrors of reconstruction, the alienation of the races, the intensifying of the natural antipathy, the long weary years of humiliation and suffering attest his prophetic power.

That he foresaw the result of these false principles introduced into our real life is marvelously revealed in the facts of to-day. In speaking on the question of a protective tariff, in 1842, in reference to the tariff, he said:

The question in what manner the loss and gain of the system distribute themselves among several classes of society is intimately connected with that of their distribution among the several sections. Few subjects present more important points for consideration. No system can be more efficient to rear up a monied aristocracy. Its tendency is to make the poor poorer and the rich richer. Heretofore in our country this tendency has displayed itself principally in its efforts as regards the different sections. But the time will come when it will produce the same results between the several classes in the manufacturing States. After we are exhausted the contest will be between capital and operatives, for into these two classes it must, ultimately, divide society.

Do the strikes, labor troubles that have convulsed our industrial life from time to time since this remarkable declaration, and of which we are having a fearful example just now in a neighboring State and city, attest the wisdom and prophetic power of this statesman and patriot? Was he not in the highest sense a patriot and a statesman when pleading for the defeat of an act which, once incorporated into law, he foresaw would grow into that gigantic abuse which would lead to the disasters that have followed?

In the light of the legislation and the discussions incident thereto that occupied the first half of the present Congress, I can not refrain from quoting his summing up of the same principles involved in the debate of 1842. He says:

On what ground do they ask protection? Protection against what? Against violence, oppression, or fraud? If so, government is bound to afford it. If it comes within the sphere of its powers, cost what it may, it is the object for which government is instituted; and if it fails in this, it fails in the highest point of duty. No; it is against neither violence, oppression, nor fraud. There is no complaint of being disturbed in property or pursuits, or of being defrauded out of the proceeds of industry. Against what, then, is protection asked? It is against low prices. The manufacturers complain that they can not carry on their pursuits at prices as low as the present, and that unless they can get higher they must give up manufacturing. The evil, then, is low prices, and what they ask of government is to give them higher; but how do they ask it to be done? Do they ask government to compel those who want to purchase to give them higher? No; that would be a hard task and not a little odious; difficult to be defended on the principles of equity, justice, or the Constitution, or to be enforced, if it could be. Do they ask that a tax should be laid on the rest of the community and the proceeds divided among them to make up for low prices? Or, in other words, do they ask for a bounty? No; that would be rather too open, oppressive, and indefensible. How, then, do they ask it to be done? By putting down competition; by the imposition of taxes on the part of others, so as to give them the exclusion of the market, or at least a decided advantage over others, and thereby enable them to sell at higher prices. Stripped of all disguise, this is their request, and this they call protection. Call it tribute, levy, exaction, monopoly, plunder; or, if these be too harsh, call it charity, assistance, aid—anything rather than protection, with which it has not a feature in common.

This was his exposition of the theory of protection.

How fittingly might these words have been spoken in the year 1909! Foreseeing as he did the tremendous lengths to which unrestrained greed might go, and the frauds that it might perpetrate, and the dangers to our Government it might entail, as a true statesman and patriot he brought to bear his powers and logic and reasoning to avert the wrong.

To sum it all up, what was the theme of all his speeches? To what great principles was his life devoted? It was the great aim of struggling humanity through all the ages, culminating in the war of the Revolution, and approaching its nearest perfect expression in the Constitution of the United States: Equal rights to all, under the law, and special privileges to none. For this in every department of life he plead. To him truth, honor, righteousness, equity, and justice were the basis of all proper personal character, the foundation of all enduring governments. And so long as free institutions shall exist, so long as humanity shall battle to overcome the weaknesses of human selfishness, so long will the name of John C. Calhoun be revered and honored. And in the Hall of Fame there can be erected no monument in free democratic America more fitting, more expressive of the principles upon which her government is founded, and the practical application of which, God willing, she will ultimately attain, than the statue of John C. Calhoun, the South Carolina patriot and statesman. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE JAMES BRECK PERKINS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. JAMES BRECK PERKINS, late a Representative from the State of New York, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. PAYNE, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. ALEXANDER of New York, Mr. FORNES, Mr. CALDER, Mr. FASSETT, Mr. CONRY, Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL, Mr. PARSONS, Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL, Mr. GOULDEN, Mr. COCKS of New York, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. WOOD of New Jersey, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. DENBY, Mr. LOWDEN, Mr. FERRIS, and Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia members of the committee on the part of the House to attend the funeral.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

House resolution 496.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JAMES BRECK PERKINS, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take charge of the body of the deceased, and to make such arrangements as may be necessary for the funeral, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That a committee of this House consisting of 20 Members be appointed to attend his funeral.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York submits resolutions which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions (S. Res. 199) as follows:

Senate resolution 199.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES BRECK PERKINS, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. PERKINS at Rochester, N. Y.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from New York.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, under the second resolution, appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. DEPEW, Mr. ROOT, Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. CLAY, and Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I move as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 14, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 12, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE ROBERT C. DAVEY.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana offers the following order, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Order 7.

Ordered, That there be a session of the House at 1 o'clock p. m. Sunday, March 20, 1910, for the delivery of eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. ROBERT C. DAVEY, late a Member of the House of Representatives from Louisiana.

The order was agreed to.

INCOME-TAX AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the House to the resolution submitting the income-tax amendment, agreed to by the House and the Senate, which concludes as follows:

And that he (the President) request the executive of each State that may ratify said amendment to transmit to the Secretary of State a certified copy of such ratification.

That is the concurrent action of the House and Senate. The governor of South Carolina, out of courtesy seemingly and by direction of the legislature, transmits to the House and, the Chair is informed, to the Senate also, the following communication, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In obedience to the provisions of the joint resolution ratifying the income-tax amendment on the part of the State of South Carolina, it gives me pleasure to herewith inclose to you a certified copy of the joint resolution as passed by both branches of the general assembly of this State.

Very respectfully, M. F. ANSEL, Governor.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the letter and resolution will be printed in the RECORD and will lie upon the table.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the resolutions of state legislatures ratifying the income tax amendment should be submitted to the House, but should be sent, as the resolution provides, to the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. That is what the concurrent resolution anticipated, that they should be forwarded to the Secretary of State.

Mr. KEIFER. That is provided for in the concurrent resolution, I think.

The SPEAKER. The President may send a message in the premises as to the ratification or nonratification. The Chair does not understand that it is necessary for the States to report to Congress, but the State of South Carolina has reported and, without objection, the letter and action of the legislature of the State of South Carolina will be printed in the RECORD and will lie upon the table. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

A joint resolution ratifying the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America.

Whereas both Houses of the Sixty-first Congress of the United States of America, at its first session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America in the following words, to wit:

"A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

"Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution, namely, Article XVI. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration:" Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of South Carolina, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the general assembly of the State of South Carolina.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this preamble and joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives.

In the senate and house the 19th day of February, A. D. 1910.

THOS. G. MCLEOD,
President of the Senate.
RICHARD S. WHALEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved the 23d day of February, A. D. 1910.

M. F. ANSEL, Governor.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Office of the Secretary of State:

I, R. M. McCown, secretary of the State of South Carolina and keeper of the great seal of said State, do hereby certify that the above foregoing two pages contain a true and correct copy of a joint resolution ratifying the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America, as passed by the last general assembly of the State of South Carolina, which was approved by the governor on the 23d day of February, 1910, and the original of which is now on file in my office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Columbia, S. C., this the 9th day of March, A. D. 1910.

[SEAL.] R. M. MCCOWN,
Secretary of State.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 19028, being the Indian appropriation bill, and that all the amendments of the Senate be disagreed to and that the House ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Indian appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's table and that the House do disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman—I notice a very large number of increases in appropriations and a very large number of legislative provisions were inserted by the Senate in this bill—I would like to ask the gentleman from South Dakota whether it can be understood in advance that these legislative provisions, and so forth, will not be disposed of in conference by the House conferees agreeing to them, but that an opportunity will be given in the House to consider them apart from the conference report.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Illinois, I will assure the House, speaking for myself, and I think I can speak for the conferees, that unless an agreement can be secured by which a greater part of the matter to which the gentleman refers that has been placed in the bill in the way of legislation is eliminated that there will be no agreement and that the House will have an opportunity to vote upon the legislative provisions.

Mr. MANN. I am satisfied with that statement.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to allow me to ask the gentleman if he has ever been on a conference committee when he had his own way?

Mr. MANN. I have been on a conference committee when I have had my own way.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In regard to all disputes in matters in controversy?

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I am not asking that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Chair announces the following conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, Mr. CAMPBELL, and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of South Carolina of the statue of John C. Calhoun, erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, March 12, 1910.

The SPEAKER. There is but one Member [Mr. ELLERBE], as the Chair is informed, of the South Carolina delegation present. They held the ceremonies in Statuary Hall at 11 o'clock. After consulting with the Member present, it was suggested, if it meets the approval of the House, that the ordinary business of the House proceed until 3 o'clock, and then that the committee rise, should it be in session, and the order be executed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 22643, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 22643, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Supervising Architect: Supervising Architect, $5,000; executive officer, $3,250; superintendent of drafting and constructing division, $3,000; superintendent of computing division, $2,750; chief of law and records division, $2,750; chief of accounts division, $2,500; chief of inspection division, $2,500; chief of division of equipment, $2,500; chief mechanical and electrical engineer, $2,750; inspector of furniture and other furnishings, $2,500 (transferred from sundry civil act); assistant inspector of furniture and other furnishings, $1,600 (transferred from sundry civil act); 6 clerks of class 4; 6 clerks of class 3; 3 clerks of class 2; 1 clerk of class 1 (1 transferred to division of special agents); contract clerk, $2,000; foreman duplicating gallery, $1,800; 4 technical clerks, who shall also be skilled stenographers and typewriters, at $1,800 each; 4 inspectors, at $2,100 each; inspector, $1,800; 5 messengers; assistant messenger; 1 laborer; 1 laborer, $360; in all, $84,400.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on the following language in lines 2 and 3, page 54:

Executive officer, $3,250.

I would like the gentleman in charge of the bill to give the committee some explanation.

Mr. GRAFF. That is simply a change in the name of the officer.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It does not create any office?

Mr. GRAFF. It does not add any new position, and does not raise any salary.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Auditor for War Department: Auditor, $4,000; deputy auditor, $2,500; law clerk, $2,000; 6 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; 24 clerks of class 4; additional to 1 clerk as disbursing clerk, $200; 50 clerks of class 3; 72 clerks of class 2 (one transferred from Treasurer's office); 82 clerks of class 1 (one transferred to Division of Printing and Stationery); 19 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 clerks, at $900 each; skilled laborer, $900; messenger; 5 assistant messengers; and 12 laborers; in all, $380,760.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to get some information. In this department have been filed the claims for bounty and back pay, or whatever might be due soldiers of the civil war, in settlement of their accounts.

Mr. MANN. Which department?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Auditor for the War Department. The auditor has been behind, I think, with that work nearly two years. He claims to be so busy down there that he can not even answer a letter of inquiry in reference to these claims that have been filed by these soldiers. It occurs to me, and I ask the chairman the question——

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will pardon me——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). I would not like the unqualified statement in the RECORD that he is behind two years.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. In this class of claims.

Mr. TAWNEY. In no class of claims.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I desire to say to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that I have had word from there that he is behind nearly two years, in a letter to me, saying a claim was filed at such a time, which is nearly two years ago. I may, however, be mistaken as to the two years, but, at least, quite a long time, enough to cause the claimant to inquire.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], understand why the auditor is now so far behind?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is what I am trying to find out.

Mr. MANN. I may tell the gentleman that last year, I think it was, there was an amendment inserted in the bill that passed through Congress, a Senate amendment, harmless upon its face, which I think no one understood, possibly, except the claims attorney, who very likely had prepared it, providing in effect for the removal of the statute of limitations upon nearly all classes of those claims, and authorizing, wherever a claim should be allowed by the Court of Claims under certain conditions, the allowance of those claims, regardless of the statute of limitations, and all similar claims, should be allowed in the office of the Auditor for the War Department. The result has been, having secured the allowance of the few claims of different classes in the Court of Claims which are subject to allowance, because not barred by the statute of limitations, that all claims of a similar kind which were barred by the statute of limitations, are now subject to allowance through application to the auditor's office, and, of course, the auditor's office has been flooded with these claims for the last year. And, doubtless, when that flood passes away, the Auditor's office will be able, as it was formerly, to take care of claims quite conveniently.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I thank my colleague for that information. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Does not the gentleman think that it would be wise in view of the fact that these men who have filed these claims are old, very old, and unable to get an adjustment of these claims within a year—I will cut it down one year for the benefit of the chairman of the committee—but within one year would it not be wise that this force should be increased temporarily, so that the department may be able at least to answer letters, letting them know the status of their claims, when an inquiry is made, or that they may be settled sooner than they are able to do now? It may be, as suggested by my colleague, that the extra amount of work in the office has increased so that they are simply flooded with this business; but I believe that the committee, possibly, have not looked into that matter sufficiently to determine whether there ought not to be some additional aid given to this department.

I have no reason to doubt the auditor is examining these claims as fast as he can, but I submit to this committee that, in view of the financial condition of many of this worthy class of applicants, and that they are old, if anything is due them it ought to be determined as speedily as possible while they are living, so it may be paid them before they are gone. Certainly the Government under such circumstances can afford to employ the necessary help to examine these claims. There certainly ought to be some way of answering inquiries after applicants had waited a reasonable time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that I may have two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the matter the gentleman refers to was not brought before the committee by the department. We gave them exactly what they asked, and I can only presume the reason they did not ask for more was because they expected this flood, being so sudden, would also subside rapidly, and with the present force they would be able to meet the business. It was not suggested to us, and we gave exactly what the department asked.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This condition has been in existence for a year or more, and there seems to be the same condition now as there was a couple of years ago.

Mr. GILLETT. I can only say that we gave them all they asked. Only a certain number of men can work on the old rolls to advantage. That may not be so as to the new rolls.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I understand that there are more than 200,000 of these claims filed that are waiting disposition.

Mr. GILLETT. We simply gave what they asked.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I am not criticising the chairman of the committee; I am simply making an inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I can give him the statement made by the auditor, as shown in the hearing given him before the subcommittee on the sundry civil appropriation bill a week or ten days ago. He says:

This year I have disbursed so far $233,292.24. I have settled 31,778 claims up to this time. In 9,719 of that number something was found to be due the claimants. Nothing was found to be due in the other cases. I have on hand about 42,000 claims unsettled of the enlisted men of the army, and there remains of that appropriation $166,707.76.

I asked him:

You estimate that that will be sufficient to carry you up to July 1?

Mr. Harper said:

I do not. I have settled up to date, by reason of reorganization, as many claims as I settled all last year, and I have but $166,707.76 remaining. It will require another appropriation, I think; an additional amount.

He said that they were coming in at the rate of about $2,500 per month.

Then I asked him:

Do you expect to clean up those that you now have by the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. Harper said:

I do not. I think that would require about ten or twelve months. That will depend upon how rapidly the claimants return the evidence called for.

That is one of the causes of delay. When the auditor calls for evidence, he finds that the claimants are not quite as anxious to facilitate their cases as they are when the claim is in the department. I then asked him:

Are you now receiving claims in the same number that you did a year ago?

He answered:

Not so many.

I asked him:

They are beginning to fall off, are they?

He answered:

Yes; they came all at once, these claims, after March 4, 1907, beginning about May, and up to January, 1908, there were over 200,000 claims filed, and they have been coming in at about, I would say, between two and three thousand a month since that time, and I have reduced the whole number by settlement to about 42,000.

Then I asked:

Then you expect you will require the whole of this $400,000 during the next year, do you?

He answered me:

I think so; yes, sir.

Then he speaks of the work of payments made for arrears of pay and allowances on account of the army, and he explained the manner in which the work is being completed.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. May I ask the chairman of the committee if he thinks the auditor has all the clerks necessary?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do. I think he has all the clerks he can work, and the committee has had no request for additional clerks, because the work is gradually drawing to a close. There are only 42,000 accumulated claims, and the number is diminishing very rapidly.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The reason I spoke of this at this time is that I have inquiries in reference to this matter, and I received such a letter from the Auditor for the War Department some time ago that I have not felt at liberty to inquire any more, because in that letter he said to me that his force was such that he could not answer any letters of inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. Was the letter written by the auditor?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Signed by the auditor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Or by the acting auditor?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It was signed by Mr. Harper, as I now remember it.

Mr. TAWNEY. There has been no request for any additional force in the office of the auditor; and so far as that work relates to the adjustment of these claims, it is very much less now than it has been heretofore. The auditor has always been very prompt in responding to any inquiry I have ever made. I consider him one of the most efficient auditors in the public service. I have never before heard from any source whatever as to the bureau not being able to answer letters addressed to it, inquiring about claims, when such letters were addressed by Members of Congress.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. There was some complaint in this letter to me, and because of what was said in that letter I have hesitated ever to inquire again.

Mr. GOULDEN. I will ask the gentleman if he has had many complaints of that character?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from New York that they are not complaints, except that it is an anxiety to have these claims settled after they have been filed in the department for a long time.

Mr. GOULDEN. What I mean is, has the gentleman had much trouble in securing replies from the auditor?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. In the early part of the time of the filing of these applications there was not any complaint, but after a while there came this letter to me, in which the auditor intimated that they did not want to be bothered by these inquiries, so that I have not asked him any more in reference to them.

Mr. GOULDEN. My experience has been the same as that of the gentleman from Illinois. If any additional force is needed, I think they ought to have it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Auditor for Interior Department: Auditor, $4,000; deputy auditor, $2,500; law clerk, $2,000; 3 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; 13 clerks of class 4; 16 clerks of class 3; 28 clerks of class 2; 29 clerks of class 1; 15 clerks, at $1,000 each; 10 clerks, at $900 each; 2 assistant messengers; 3 skilled laborers, at $720 each; 4 laborers; female laborer, $600; in all, $168,340.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I notice that this item is decreased a little more than $2,000 below what the appropriation was for the last year. I refer to the appropriation for the office of the Auditor for the Interior Department, on page 57.

I was much interested in what the gentleman said yesterday in relation to the alleged increased efficiency in business methods that obtain in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury at the present time, but I assume that appropriations are not reduced except where it is apparent that reduction may be made without injury to the service.

Mr. GILLETT. That is correct.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding is that this particular office shows that the appropriations for the past ten years have gradually been reduced, while the business itself has materially increased. I also understand from the report of the auditor, which I have here, that, in his judgment, it would be impossible to further reduce the appropriation for the office without injury to the efficiency of the service; and my purpose in making this inquiry is to ascertain whether the committee have been satisfied that this appropriation is sufficient to keep up the office in its present efficient state.

Mr. GILLETT. The only changes that have been made in this paragraph are three laborers, not a very tremendous change to affect the efficiency of the office.

The gentleman is mistaken in saying that the appropriations have steadily decreased for that office. On the contrary, they have been larger the last two years than they ever were before, and they still will be larger now than they ever were before 1908, if we leave them as we have appropriated. On the suggestion of the representative of the Treasury Department that it would not interfere in the least with the efficiency of the office we have appropriated as we have in this bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman manifestly is mistaken in respect to the facts relating to appropriations for this office. I invite his attention to the statement by Robert S. Person, Auditor for the Interior Department, in his report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1909, at page 11, under the subject, "Retrenchment of Expenses." This is what he says:

RETRENCHMENT OF EXPENSES.

In view of recent instructions to heads of bureaus in the Treasury Department directing them to "overhaul and reorganize" their offices with a view to effecting retrenchment in expenses, your attention is respectfully invited to the fact that the annual appropriations for salaries for this office are less now than they were twelve years ago, notwithstanding the fact that the volume of business transacted is materially larger than it ever was before. The following tabulated statement shows the number of employees of different classes and appropriations by fiscal years from 1897 to 1909, inclusive:

Number of employees of different classes and appropriations, by fiscal years from 1897 to 1909, inclusive, office of the Auditor for the Interior Department.

1908	4	12	16	28	28	15	10	....	6	6	1	....	126	167,380
1909	4	13	16	28	29	15	10	....	6	6	1	....	128	170,380

The following statement shows the amounts involved in settlements made in this office for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1898, to June 30, 1909, inclusive:

Amounts involved in settlements by the Auditor for the Interior Department for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1898, to June 30, 1909, inclusive.

1900	165,625,454.80
1901	176,187,769.03
1902	158,089,995.96
1903	201,309,949.61
1904	193,001,277.61
1905	180,896,019.58
1906	186,159,922.72
1907	[a] 187,666,562.43

It is apparent from the foregoing statements that the reduction in the appropriations amounting in the aggregate—by comparison with the appropriations for 1897 and prior years—to $106,780, covering a period of material expansion in the expenses of administration in nearly all other branches of the public service, is not due to a smaller amount of business transacted, and, furthermore, the clerks who do the higher grades of work now actually receive better compensation than they did when the gross appropriations were larger.

It is not practicable to show even approximately the real increase in the quantity of work performed. The methods now employed require a thoroughness in the examination of accounts which was unknown to the accounting system a few years ago. The requirements of Treasury Department Circular No. 52, series of 1907, relating to the assembling of disbursing officers' checks and vouchers and the verification of their balances, has increased the amount of work incident to the settlement of disbursing officers' accounts fully 25 per cent, and the work relating to Indian trust funds is due to a new order of things in the Indian Service. Until recently accounts involving large amounts of Indian trust funds annually were not settled and adjusted in the Treasury Department as required by section 236 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The fact that there has not been an increase in either the appropriations for this office or the number of clerks employed during the past twelve years is due to increased efficiency of the clerical force by reason of their greater industry, a classification of the work,[b] a material simplification in keeping individual records of pension payments, improved methods in rendering accounts by pension agents and other disbursing officers, and a general centralization of the administration of the bureau in contradistinction from division administration. By centralized administration clerks are detailed or transferred freely from one division to another, according to the needs of the service. This policy was not popular when first inaugurated, but it has resulted in increased efficiency among the employees and is now viewed with favor by the more ambitious clerks, as it provides a broader field for the development of talent and affords better opportunity for promotion.

Other retrenchments in the expenses of the office, amounting to many thousands of dollars in the aggregate, have resulted from the inauguration of simplified methods of business in the pensions division discussed in my annual report for the fiscal year 1901, at page 6, to which your attention is respectfully invited. The estimates of retrenchments made at that time have been more than realized. The retrenchment in salaries alone in that division amounts to $40,000 per annum at the present time. By the retrenchment effected in this division it has been possible to take care of the expansion in work in other divisions without increasing the appropriations for the office as a whole. It is safely within conservative limits to state that the retrenchment in salaries and other expenses for this office, by comparison with the fiscal year 1897, amounts in the aggregate for a period of twelve years to $400,000; and I think it can be easily established that the amount thus saved materially exceeds that amount.

[a] Prior to 1907 the records were so kept and the reports were so made that the amounts "involved" in the settlements of disbursing officers' accounts included balances brought forward in each succeeding settlement, so that there was of necessity repeated duplication. Accordingly there was no correct statement of the net amounts audited. The system of keeping records was changed at the beginning of the fiscal year 1907, and the reports for the years ended June 30, 1907, 1908, and 1909, show correctly the amount of audited expenditures. Prior to this time also there were no reports of advances made to disbursing officers for which accountable warrants issued. In 1907 these advances amounted to $168,743,532.59; in 1908, $188,092,725.28; and in 1909, $193,126,901.76.

Prior to 1901 the number of fiscal officers whose accounts were audited was not reported; in that year the number of such officers was 376, in subsequent years as follows: 1902, 378; 1903, 362; 1904, 406; 1905, 421; 1906, 472; 1907, 436; 1908, 517; 1909, 626.

It is manifest that these achievements, such as they are, in the way of simultaneously curtailing expenses and promoting the efficiency of the service, have not resulted from any one man's efforts. There have been willing and competent aids in chiefs of divisions and clerks in lower grades of service—indeed, some of the most valuable suggestions have come from those "in the ranks." Higher up there has been given the support without which accomplishment would have failed. In some instances the initiative in important matters was taken by the head of the department or one of his immediate assistants. In others the initiative was taken by subordinate employees. But from whatever source the initiative may have emanated the general policy which produced the results has had the unwavering support of the several Secretaries of the Treasury and all of their assistants without exception. The greatest aid, however, from any one source came from President Roosevelt when in 1906 he appointed his committee on department methods, popularly known as the Keep commission, of which Charles H. Keep, then Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was chairman. The activities of the commission made it possible to expedite the work of reorganization and readjustment which had been inaugurated and was in process of execution for several years prior to the appointment of the Keep commission. Mr. Keep's support, like President Roosevelt's, was given openly and publicly in the manner to be most effective.

There still exists necessity for further work in the line of readjustment to promote the highest degree of efficiency, but I do not believe the policy of retrenchment in appropriations for salaries of employees in this office can be carried further with advantage to the public service or in equity to the clerks. There are some inequalities in salaries to be adjusted, but this should be done by increasing the number of clerks at $1,800 and $1,600 and not by reducing the gross amount of the appropriation.

There is no branch of the Treasury service which requires a higher order of ability than is required of its accountants, yet for some reason—probably neglect—they receive less consideration than almost any other class of Treasury employees. Attention was invited to this unjust discrimination in my annual report for 1908, at page 7, from which I quote:

"It is important to both administrative and treasury interests that a higher order of ability should be attracted to the accounting offices. Treasury bookkeepers who simply record the work which accountants by laborious effort and the exercise of fine judgment, discretion, and skill prepare for them are generally paid a salary of $1,800 and $2,000, as against an average of about $1,400 and $1,600 for accountants."

It is important to adjust inequalities in salaries not only within bureaus, but also between them. The salaries of accountants and bookkeepers should be reversed or otherwise adjusted so that accountants should generally receive a materially higher salary than bookkeepers. The ability required to examine and state accounts is of a vastly higher order than that required simply to record the results of such examination. The accountant requires all of the equipment of the bookkeeper and in addition must possess the highly technical knowledge of an accountant, and frequently a knowledge of various branches of law is indispensable. It is manifest that bookkeepers in the Treasury are either overpaid or accountants deserve a material increase in salary. The Keep commission provided for an exhaustive investigation of this general subject, but the cooperation of the Congress is necessary to make the results of their investigations effective.

Respectfully,

ROBERT S. PERSON, Auditor.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

I invite attention to the fact that this office, showing a very material increase in business during the past ten years, has curtailed expenses for salaries alone during that time amounting in the aggregate to something more than $100,000; yet this bill proposes to make a still further reduction of $2,040 in this office in spite of the fact that this is the only accounting office—and probably the only office or division in the Treasury Department—that shows expenses for salaries to be less now than they were in 1898. I find that the appropriations for all of the accounting offices, with the single exception of the office of the Auditor for the Interior Department, have been materially increased since 1898.

And, furthermore, the auditor says it is his opinion that retrenchment in appropriations for salaries of employees in that office can not be carried further with advantage to the public service or in equity to the clerks employed. It looks to me like an injustice and the placing of a penalty on efficiency in administration. If officers and clerks are to be penalized for systematically curtailing expenses, promoting efficiency, and bringing the work up to date, I fear it will operate as a deterrent on that policy in the future.

As the gentleman [Mr. GILLETT] says, the reduction is made by dropping several employees in the lower grades. If their services are not needed, the amount of their salaries, $2,040, should be distributed by increasing the salaries of clerks of higher grades as an encouraging reward of merit.

For the information of the gentleman in charge of the bill I will furnish him with a statement showing the amount of appropriations for the offices of the several auditors for 1898 and for 1910, and the total amount of increases for the intervening period.

Office of Auditor for the Treasury Department:
Appropriation for fiscal year 1898	$141,900
Appropriation for fiscal year 1910	154,900
Total increase for period since 1898	114,700
Office of Auditor for the War Department:
Appropriation for fiscal year 1898	$322,500
Appropriation for fiscal year 1910	391,180
Total increase for period since 1898	1,131,460
Office of Auditor for the Navy Department:
Appropriation for fiscal year 1898	68,080
Appropriation for fiscal year 1910	151,140
Total increase for period since 1898	588,508
Office of Auditor for the Interior Department:
Appropriation for fiscal year 1898	174,940
Appropriation for fiscal year 1910	170,380
Total decrease for period since 1898	106,780
Office of Auditor for the State and other Departments:
Appropriation for fiscal year 1898	89,934
Appropriation for fiscal year 1910	121,420
Total increase for period since 1898	221,623
Office of Auditor for the Post-Office Department:
Appropriation for fiscal year 1898	566,040
Appropriation for fiscal year 1910	835,680
Total increase for period since 1898	1,742,040

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Treasurer: Treasurer of the United States, $8,000; Assistant Treasurer, $3,600; Deputy Assistant Treasurer, $3,200; cashier, $3,600; assistant cashier, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; 7 chiefs of division, at $2,500 each; 2 assistant chiefs of division, at $2,250 each; vault clerk, $2,500; principal bookkeeper, $2,500; assistant bookkeeper, $2,100; 2 tellers, at $2,500 each; 2 assistant tellers, at $2,250 each; vault clerk, Bond Division, $2,000; clerk for the Treasurer, $1,800; 24 clerks of class 4; 19 clerks of class 3; 15 clerks of class 2; coin clerk, $1,400; 32 clerks of class 1; 17 clerks, at $1,000 each; 36 clerks, at $900 each; 40 expert counters, at $900 each; 20 expert counters, at $800 each; 53 expert counters, at $720 each; 9 expert counters, at $700 each; mail messenger, $840; 8 messengers; 7 assistant messengers; 25 laborers; 6 messenger boys, at $360 each; 16 charwomen; compositor and pressman, $1,600; pressman, $1,400; silver piler, $1,000; in all, $385,660.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I reserve the point of order against the following language on page 59, found in lines 8 and 9:

Treasurer of the United States, $8,000

Is not that an increase of salary?

Mr. GILLETT. It is not. That is the present salary.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I was under the impression that that was an increase.

Mr. GILLETT. That was increased last year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have the gentleman in charge of the bill explain how it is that this committee had the assurance to reduce an appropriation in this paragraph from $462,000 to $385,000. What warrant is there on the part of the Treasury Department or the committee to reduce expenses? [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT. I am pleased to make the explanation. It is in the line of the reorganization which I spoke of yesterday, when the gentleman from Indiana was so good as to assent to it and withdraw his point of order. Here is one of the places where a large saving is made by the new Treasury administration. There have been dropped from this office about 100 employees of the Treasury Department because one whole division has been transferred to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where we are assured that the same work will be done that was done in the Treasury Department before, without any increase of force there.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman to say that we will get along with 100 employees less?

Mr. GILLETT. Less than we had before.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How are you able to do that? Have they been discharged or transferred?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know what will become of the employees. This does not take effect until the 1st of July, when the force is reduced. But by more efficient administration and consolidation the same work will be done with this largely reduced force.

Mr. COX of Indiana. They will not be retained in this department?

Mr. GILLETT. No; and it does not mean that their places are to be filled and their work done in any other department.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman know whether these employees will be put on the pay roll of some other department?

Mr. MANN. The employees will undoubtedly be transferred.

Mr. TAWNEY. Some will and some will not.

Mr. GILLETT. I have no doubt that there will be a disposition on the part of all departments where there are vacancies to employ these clerks that are dropped instead of new men, but there is no such provision in the law.

Mr. GOULDEN. How much of a saving does this make?

Mr. GILLETT. To be accurate, $76,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. That is effected by abolishing one department?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; and in another section of the bill that we have just passed, about which no question was asked, there was another saving of $75,000. That is in the officer of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department.

Mr. GOULDEN. That makes a saving of $150,000.

Mr. GILLETT. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars in these two departments.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think the answer of the gentleman to the question of the gentleman from Illinois ought to be satisfactory.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the force employed in redeeming the national currency (to be reimbursed by the national banks), namely: Superintendent, $3,500; teller, $2,500; bookkeeper, $2,400; assistant teller, $2,000; assistant bookkeeper, $2,000; five clerks of class 4; 7 clerks of class 3; 9 clerks of class 2; 25 clerks of class 1; 10 expert counters, at $1,200 each; 52 expert counters, at $1,000 each; 42 expert counters, at $900 each; 32 expert counters, at $800 each; 22 expert counters, at $700 each; 2 messengers; 4 assistant messengers; 4 charwomen; in all, $223,520.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I desire to reserve a point of order beginning at the word "ten," in line 21, page 60, and ending at the word "each," on line 25. Is not this an increase of salaries?

Mr. GILLETT. There is no increase of salaries, but an increase of the force.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Comparing it with the bill of last year, it would seem to be an increase of salaries.

Mr. GILLETT. I was under the impression that we did not increase the salaries, but we have largely increased the force. Let me explain why. Growth of the national banks in the last two years has very much increased the work of the Redemption Division, and consequently we were recommended to increase the force by 54 employees, which we have done in this section.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Is not this money reimbursable by the national banks?

Mr. GILLETT. I was coming to that. We have increased the force 54 employees. I think the gentleman from Indiana is right, and there is an increase of salary. New men are put in at a salary of $1,200 instead of $1,000, as they had before. Let me call attention of the gentleman to the fact that we can not always reduce the force in a growing concern like the United States Government. It grows, and the force and expense must grow, too. In the last two years there has been a very exceptional increase in all of the work under this division because of the increase of the number and the activity of the national banks. Therefore we have tried to meet that by giving them what they wished. Although perhaps it is not a fair argument in favor of the addition, yet it should be suggested that it is all paid by the national banks and not by the United States Government. Of course we do not mean to be any more extravagant for the national banks than we are for ourselves, but the department assures us that this force is needed, and we gave them what they asked. But the gentleman is right in saying that the salaries are larger than last year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Let me read from the bill of last year:

Forty-one expert counters, at $1,000 each; 31 expert counters, at $900 each; 21 expert counters, at $800 each; 11 expert counters, at $700 each.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman was right. The gentleman was reading and perhaps did not hear me. I have stated before that those are increases in the salary. I think we do give them $1,000 and $1,200, whereas before they had $1,000. The department assured us that it needed these men, and we followed the suggestion, and possibly we were more easy because the Government was not paying it, but the banks were.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman feel that this increase of these salaries, if it be an increase, is in the interests of economy in the administration of this bureau?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, I do not remember that that particular point was told to us by the department?

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the gentleman's opinion on that?

Mr. GILLETT. My opinion is that it is wise to give the department what they have asked, we following their suggestion exactly and having confidence in their opinion.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman base his opinion upon the opinion of the department, or is it based on what he individually thinks?

Mr. GILLETT. I base it entirely upon the opinion of the department. We did not question in detail about this particular point. The same person came before us as to this who came before us as to the other branches, and who showed himself intensely interested in economy and efficiency, and we took his suggestions here as we did where they directly showed economy.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does this increase any burden upon the United States Treasury?

Mr. GILLETT. None at all.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Life-Saving Service: General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, $4,000, and $500 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; assistant general superintendent, $2,500; principal clerk, $2,000; title and contract clerk, $2,000; topographer and hydrographer, $1,800; civil engineer, $1,800; 3 clerks of class 4; 5 clerks of class 3; 4 clerks of class 2; 5 clerks of class 1; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 clerks, at $900 each; 2 assistant messengers; laborer; in all, $46,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts why he leaves out a draftsman in the Life-Saving Service Office?

Mr. GILLETT. We were informed by the Secretary that he could be dispensed with without diminishing the efficiency of the office.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings, $59,286.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does this represent all of the money that is expended in the District of Columbia for rents of public buildings?

Mr. GILLETT. No; it certainly does not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What is the total amount expended?

Mr. GILLETT. About $450,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What does this item have reference to—simply the Treasury Department?

Mr. GILLETT. Simply the Treasury Department.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And the Treasury Department is renting, I presume, a number of buildings for the business that is being transacted in that department, because of lack of room in the Treasury building itself?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have had occasion to visit some of the offices connected with the Treasury Department in buildings other than the Treasury building, and it seems to me that the buildings are not suitable for the purposes for which they are being used. I certainly hope that the time is not far distant when authority will be granted and appropriations provided to erect buildings suitable for the transaction of the government business, not only to save the rent, but in the interests of the employees of the Government, as well as the safety of the files and public records. Buildings that are veritable fire traps are used for purposes of accommodating clerks and storing public records that are a reproach to the Government. If buildings must be rented for the accommodation of the clerical forces, I am in favor of renting up-to-date fireproof quarters. In addition to protecting the lives and promoting the welfare of its employees the Government would get a better service by housing them in modern, sanitary buildings with wholesome environments. It is false economy to pursue the present course, and Congress should not, by parsimonious appropriations or otherwise, be a party to its continuance.

This subject was presented to the Secretary of the Treasury in a forceful manner by Auditor Robert S. Person in his report for the fiscal year 1909, from which I read pages 8 to 11:

REMOVAL OF OFFICE FROM TREASURY BUILDING.

The deficiency appropriation act approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., 479), contained the following items under "Contingent expenses, Treasury Department:"

"For rent of the third and fourth floors of the Union Building, located on G street between Sixth and Seventh streets NW., Washington, D. C., including light, heat, janitor, and elevator service, and repairs, for offices of Auditor for the Interior Department, for the fiscal year 1909, $13,000.

"For shelving and transferring records, furniture, and files from the Treasury building, including the personal services of laborers and skilled mechanics in connection therewith, for the fiscal year 1909, $10,500."

On January 13, 1909, your predecessor in office, Secretary Cortelyou, wrote to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, requesting that the appropriation for the rental of the space provided for by the act approved May 30, 1908, supra, be authorized for use "without specifying any particular building, so that the Secretary of the Treasury would not be limited in his choice of suitable quarters." Failing to secure this legislation, on February 10 the Secretary urgently requested, in a letter addressed to the committee of conference of the two Houses of Congress, that he be authorized to use the third and fourth floors of the Union Building in his discretion "for the accommodation of any other Treasury bureau or office in lieu of the office of the Auditor for the Interior Department," and with that end in view requested that Senate amendment No. 102 to H. R. 23464, granting such authority, be agreed to in conference. But this request also was denied. The exigencies of the situation made it compulsory to obtain relief from congested conditions in the Treasury building, and accordingly the Pension Division of this office, comprising about 50 employees, with its great volume of files, was removed in February, 1909. Subsequently, in compliance with your directions dated May 12, 1909, the entire office of the Auditor for the Interior Department, with all of its files stored in the Treasury building, was removed to the Union Building.

In his report for the fiscal year 1908 the Secretary of the Treasury recommended the erection of a separate building for the accounting officers of the Treasury, so that they all might be housed together. While nothing was said about the location of such a building, it is presumed that the Secretary had in mind a location in close proximity to the Treasury building. Otherwise it is inconceivable that he would have recommended a separate building for auditors, especially to make room within the Treasury building for branches of the public service so artificially connected with the department as the Life-Saving Service, the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and the Office of the Supervising Architect. The accounting officers are inherently a part of the Treasury system. Their relation to the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants is close and continuous. Their relations with the Division of Public Moneys and the Treasurer of the United States are scarcely less so, and a separation of the auditors from the Comptroller of the Treasury by inconvenient distances impedes progress toward and is destructive of that uniformity of accounting which it has been assiduously attempted to promote during the past few years.

That it is not in the interest of good or economic administration to separate the accounting offices of the Treasury from these various branches of the Treasury Department by any distance which makes free intercourse between them inconvenient, is not a debatable subject. Indeed, it is indispensable to the public interest that all of the integral parts of the fiscal system of the Treasury Department shall be located with a view to maintaining their normal relations with each other without serious interruption or inconvenience. No other branch of the public service is so closely related to and of necessity so continuously in communication with so many branches of the Treasury Department as the accounting offices. There probably is not an hour in the day when it is not either convenient or necessary for an auditor, a chief of division, or an accountant to visit either the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants, the Division of Public Moneys, the office of the Treasurer of the United States, or the Comptroller of the Treasury, and vice versa.

To give a few illustrations of how awkward and cumbersome it is for this office to transact business in its present location, more than half a mile from the Treasury building, permit me to state that a bookkeeper's certificate is required from the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants for every account examined in this office (last year the number was 2,809); and every account and claim finally adjusted by the auditor (last year the number was 24,124) must be certified to the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants, and later each of these certificates must be returned to the auditor for permanent filing.

Each year there are many thousands of requisitions for the advance of funds to disbursing officers in the Interior Department. These papers are now first carried to the Treasury, then brought back past the Interior Department to the auditor, then returned to the Treasury for the issuing of accountable warrants, and then retransmitted to the auditor.

The revision of accounts by the Comptroller of the Treasury on his own motion, a practice contemplated by law, of necessity is greatly impeded.

The Treasurer of the United States requires frequent use of and access to the accounts filed in this office.

The bonds of fiscal officers are filed in the Treasury building, and it is impracticable to refer to them as frequently as careful accounting demands. (See report of committee appointed to investigate methods of accounting, July 31, 1903, at p. 14.)

The employees of the office are deprived, except with great inconvenience and loss of time, of the use of the law libraries in the offices of the Solicitor and Comptroller of the Treasury and the general reference library of the department.

The purely administrative relations between the bureau and the department suffer an interruption incompatible with good administration.

In addition to these more serious objections of a general nature that are inseparable from the housing of any one of the auditors in a building far removed from the Treasury building—with the exception of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, whose relation to the Treasury differs materially from that of all of the other auditors—there are specific objections peculiar both to the building in which this office is located and to its immediate environment.

It is not a fireproof building and therefore is not suitable for the storage of files of valuable papers and documents. In his annual report for 1908 the Secretary of the Treasury recommended the erection of a hall of records on a site (square No. 143, situated between Eighteenth and Nineteenth and E and F streets NW.) title to which had been acquired under authority and direction of the acts of Congress of March 3, 1903 (32 Stat., 1039 and 1212). In his report at page 88 he referred to his letter of March 7, 1908, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, which he published as a part of his annual report. In this letter he said:

"The condition of these uncurrent files is precarious in the extreme. * * * Some of them are stored in rented buildings which are not fireproof and liable at any moment to be destroyed by fire. * * * It must be borne in mind that reference is made to them almost constantly; that in most instances they pertain to questions of great importance; that they have been accumulating since the organization of the Government; and that their destruction by fire would cause almost irreparable injury, confusion, and delay in the transaction of the public business. * * * They are now inaccessible for reference except with great labor * * * and at the same time are daily exposed to loss, decay, and accidents, which may at any time destroy them in whole or in part."

The situation with respect to the files of this office is more hazardous now than when the Secretary of the Treasury made the report from which the foregoing excerpts are taken.

The building in which this office is now located is not in other respects a suitable office building. Two livery stables are adjacent to it and make an offensive approach to the building. Offensive smells from these stables and other environments equally obnoxious permeate the rooms where clerks are employed, especially during the heated season, and at repeated intervals during the short time the office has been in its present location have produced sickness among the employees. The building is not suitable for the accommodation of a high-class clerical force of genteel men and women, and the environment is depressing upon the esprit de corps of the office and seriously affects the efficiency of many of the employees.

The following observations in the editorial columns of the Washington Evening Star of January 14, 1909, apply with pointed force to the quarters now utilized for the accommodation of this office:

"There is too much use now made of old buildings by the Government in this city. Anything will answer for a public office, apparently. And once occupied by a division or a bureau, as a measure of economy or to solve a pressing problem of congestion, it remains a part of the Government's equipment indefinitely long after it passes the point of insanitation and insecurity.

"Without regard for the comfort or even for the health of the workers, and with none whatever for the dignity of the Government, quarters are utilized that most well-managed business corporations would regard as unfit for use."

In close proximity to the Treasury Department are several modern office buildings, accommodations in which could be rented until a new building suitable for Treasury requirements could be erected. Therefore I urgently recommend that the attention of the Congress be invited to the situation. The Government is now paying approximately half a million dollars annually for rents in the District of Columbia for the use of buildings mostly nonfireproof in structure, filled with equipment of a highly combustible nature, insanitary in their appointments, and a reflection on the dignity of the Government. About $8,000,000 have recently been expended in providing suitable quarters for offices for Members of Congress, and both Senators and Representatives are surely interested in the amelioration of conditions affecting the health and general welfare of employees of the Government who are required to live in the District of Columbia throughout the year. It is entirely probable that all that is necessary to obtain speedy relief from present conditions, involving both wasteful expenditures and the physical welfare of a large body of employees, is to get the facts thoroughly understood by the Congress. No better investment could be made by the Government than to employ a portion of the $471,377 now paid annually for rents in this city in the payment of interest on bonds to be issued for the purpose of providing funds for the erection of public buildings to meet the requirements of the executive departments.

I am personally familiar with the conditions discussed by Mr. Person in this admirable report, and I think he has been moderate, indeed, in his descriptions and statements. The wasteful policy of scattering bureaus of the Treasury Department is the least objectionable feature of the rent policy, for it does not necessarily involve the question of wholesome environment of employees or the safety of public records; but it is sufficient to require the attention of the economists both in Congress and in the department. In the report from which I have already quoted Mr. Person further says:

The condition of business with respect to the settlement of accounts for freight transportation is unsatisfactory. Close supervision of the work is impossible under present conditions and the work is in arrears, although the number of examiners assigned to it is disproportionally large. This unsatisfactory situation is due largely to the fact that the clerks who examine these claims and prepare the correspondence and statements of differences are, under Treasury Circular No. 14, dated March 31, 1909, assembled in the Treasury building, and therefore are separated from this office by a distance of more than half a mile.

The situation with respect to the examination of claims for passenger transportation is even less satisfactory. A large percentage of disbursements on account of passenger service is made by disbursing clerks and accounted for like other disbursements made by them. Under the present arrangement these items have to be transcribed and sent to examiners more than half a mile distant from the clerks who otherwise examine the accounts and prepare them for settlement.

The inaccessibility of a portion of the office files is reported upon as follows:

A considerable portion of the files of this office is located in a storage building at Nos. 920–922 E street NW., some distance from this office. They are scattered over three floors on shelving not adapted for their accommodation, and accordingly they are in bad condition. Employees who are required to work in the building complain of want of light, ventilation, and facilities for handling the bundles. The loss of time in handling the files in the E street building is a very important factor. It requires from two to six hours to obtain information from files in that building, which could be obtained in twenty to thirty minutes if the files were stored with the other office files here. * * * There are many calls daily for information by persons interested in records pertaining to the war of the Revolution that have to be denied for the want of facilities and help to get the information on account of their inaccessibility.

No respectable private corporation, Mr. Chairman, would tolerate such conditions in its business affairs in respect either to the welfare of its employees or the wastefulness of expenditures. The Government is paying as high as 20 per cent on their assessed valuation for the rent of buildings that would be tenantless but for the fact that the Government gives so little consideration to the welfare of its employees and the protection of its property. It is time for action, and I hope the programme for the erection of suitable public buildings to accommodate all requirements of all the executive departments will be expedited. The issuance of bonds for this purpose, as suggested by the officer from whose report I have liberally quoted, would be a wise and beneficent investment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAMPBELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution providing for the printing of extra copies of the Report of the Chief of Division of Militia Affairs, office of the Secretary of War, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909; and

S. J. Res. 37. Joint resolution requiring the printing of public papers and documents from foreign countries in the English language.

Also:

Senate resolution 199.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES BRECK PERKINS, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to join a committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. PERKINS, at Rochester, N. Y.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Vice-President had appointed as said committee Mr. DEPEW, Mr. ROOT, Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. CLAY, and Mr. OVERMAN.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 20.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of John C. Calhoun, presented by the State of South Carolina to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for the purity of his life and his distinguished services to the State and Nation.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of South Carolina.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia, telephone service, and other miscellaneous expenses incident to the collection of internal revenue, and for the purchase of necessary books of reference and periodicals for the chemical laboratory and law library, at a cost not to exceed $500, and reasonable expenses for not exceeding sixty days immediately following the injury of field officers or employees in the Internal-Revenue Service while in line of duty, of medical attendance, surgeon's and hospital bills made necessary by reason of such injury, and for horses crippled or killed while being used by officers in making raids, not exceeding $150 for any horse so crippled or killed, $100,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the paragraph, particularly against that part of the paragraph reading as follows:

And for horses crippled or killed while being used by officers in making raids, not exceeding $150 for any horse so crippie or killed.

I would like to have some one explain to me what moral or legal right there is to compel the Government to pay for the loss of a horse that some revenue officer may have had killed while he was doing his duty.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will remember his inquiry when some of these claim bills come up.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I will be right with the gentleman on that, I can assure him.

Mr. MANN. Because it is the invariable rule where the Government is not authorized—and sometimes it is not—to pay for a horse which a deputy has, for instance, rented and which gets shot under him, for him or somebody else to ask the Government to pay, and properly, it seems to me.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman see any more reason for paying for horses killed under these conditions than he can for compensating for a horse killed under a sheriff when he is serving a writ for some county or State?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the practice may be about that, but this is a very different situation. All I know about this is from the examination of various claims. It has frequently occurred that claims have arisen that could not be paid under this provision, where a deputy in one of the States hires a horse at a livery stable and in the course of his work the horse is shot, and, perhaps, the deputy also. Somebody has to pay for that horse.

Mr. TAWNEY. These are horses that are used only in making raids.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Suppose they are, what does that add to it? The sheriffs of the various counties throughout the United States frequently have to make raids.

Mr. TAWNEY. Take it in the moonshine States, where, in the detection of moonshiners——

Mr. COX of Indiana. With all due deference to the gentleman from Minnesota, that argument does not appeal to me, because the marshal, when he takes his oath of office, takes those things into consideration.

Mr. MANN. This work is not done by the marshal.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, it is done by the revenue officer.

Mr. MANN. It is done by a deputy collector, who is probably receiving a salary, in some cases, of from $2 to $3 a day, whom they may pick up. They may take any citizen.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Probably some of these raids are conducted by the marshals themselves.

Mr. MANN. But the evidence in reference to these claims presented here shows that condition. Now, it is perfectly manifest that if the Government needs a horse under such circumstances and a man is authorized to engage a horse, the Government is liable to a claim for damage for the nonreturn of the horse. It is perfectly manifest they can not conduct raids without obtaining horses.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman give me any information as to how much this item has cost the Government heretofore?

Mr. MANN. I can not give you any information on that subject.

Mr. COX of Indiana. No data whatever upon it?

Mr. MANN. Of course, I am not on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, can the gentleman in charge of the bill?

Mr. GILLETT. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue gives those facts, but I have not looked it up; but I will say to the gentleman that this has been in the law from year to year, and the gentleman will see, if he reflects a moment, that it is rather necessary for the efficiency and conduct of these raids, because the officer, when he starts on one of these raids, which is known to be a dangerous business, has no horse of his own, and he has to go to a livery stable and hire one, and, unless the stableman has some assurance that he is going to get back the price of the horse which is running this risk, he is not going to hire the horse to go on one of these raids, and the officer would not be able to prosecute the raids.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The stableman ordinarily takes the same chance when he lets the sheriff or a constable of the county have a horse.

Mr. MANN. But in that case he generally has a horse of his own, as the gentleman will recognize.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Not many constables in my country.

Mr. MANN. But sheriffs.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As a rule sheriffs have their own horses.

Mr. GILLETT. The conduct of this business is dangerous. The provision has been in the law every year, and my attention has not been called to it, hence I can not give the gentleman the detailed information.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman from Indiana approximate what it has cost the Government before?

Mr. GILLETT. It is in the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which I can get in a few moments; and, if the gentleman wishes, we will pass this matter for the present——

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed without prejudice until we get some information upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COX of Indiana. That this paragraph be passed without prejudice until we get some information.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to say to the gentleman in charge that if this is a meritorious item I do not propose to press the point of order.

Mr. MANN. There is no point of order, I think, the gentleman might make except——

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, little things make big things and——

Mr. MANN (continuing). I do not think it is subject to the point of order unless the limitation would be subject to the point of order. I am not sure about that. The appropriation is in order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is there any law for it in the current law?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly, there is a law providing for these raids.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the law provide for that item?

Mr. MANN. It does not provide for it specifically; it is not required to do so. The only thing in this to which the point of order might be made would be the limitation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I could not say whether there was such authority or not unless I had opportunity to read it.

Mr. MANN. I supposed the gentleman was making the point of order on the limitation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. No; I was making the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I am supposing the gentleman is perfectly willing to limit the damage to $150 instead of leaving the amount optional as to the amount of any claim which may be brought, which may be two or three hundred dollars. There is no question that these people have authority to go to the Court of Claims upon a claim against the Government unless there was some limitation.

Mr. GILLETT. We can not find the report immediately.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I am willing to pass it for the time being and return to it later.

Mr. GILLETT. We can not get it. I would like to close it up as we go along. It is not a matter of much importance. So I would ask the gentleman to drop it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of collecting the corporation tax authorized by the act approved August 5, 1909, "To provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," $100,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reserve the point of order in order to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the purpose of this tax is to include a sum that has been spoken of to make public the original, honest returns of corporations?

Mr. GILLETT. It is for the field work of collecting the returns. It is the same appropriation as for the last year.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would like to ask the chairman with regard to this $100,000. Does it require that much money for the purpose of employing agents to collect this tax?

Mr. GILLETT. That is the theory of the appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I thought this was collected through the Internal-Revenue Office?

Mr. GILLETT. That is what it is for—the deputies of the collectors which may be necessary——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It requires this amount of money?

Mr. GILLETT. It requires this amount of money to collect it.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDEPENDENT TREASURY.

Office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore: Assistant treasurer, $4,500.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What has become of that controversy?

Mr. MANN. The controversy is ended, and the paragraph is still there.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. GILLETT. I submit it is too late, Mr. Chairman, to do so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think it is.

Mr. KEIFER. We hardly got that far away.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late. The next paragraph has been entered upon.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know, but I can not offer it to the next one, because it is not pertinent to it. If it is too late it is too late; that is all there is to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES.

District of Alaska: Governor, $5,000; four judges, at $7,500 each; four attorneys, at $5,000 each; four marshals, at $4,000 each; four clerks, at $3,500 each; in all, $85,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the paragraph. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill if there is an increase of salary here for the judges and for the marshals?

Mr. GILLETT. No; there is none at all. It is changed since last year, because, you know, we have legislated since then, but this exactly accords with existing law.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How long has their salary been $7,500?

Mr. GILLETT. We passed a special bill last session providing it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. A special act?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Looking up the last legislative bill I find the salary there——

Mr. GILLETT. We have changed it since then.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, did the act of which you speak increase the number of judges from three to four?

Mr. GILLETT. I think so. We intended to follow exactly the existing law in all those cases.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And did it also increase the number of attorneys from three to four?

Mr. GILLETT. It did.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman tell the committee why the judges in the Territory of Alaska are paid $7,500 while the judges in Arizona and New Mexico are only paid $3,000? Why this great disparity?

Mr. GILLETT. The law was passed last year. Congress is responsible; we are not. We simply followed the law.

Mr. MANN. I might say the committee is partly responsible. I think the law provides for a higher salary than $3,000 in the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I did not quite understand the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The law, I know, provides for a higher salary in New Mexico and Arizona for judges or governors than is carried in the bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much does the law provide for the salary in Arizona and New Mexico for judges?

Mr. MANN. I am not sure whether it is the governors or the judges that under the law are entitled to $4,000. The bill gives $3,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. When was the act passed fixing the salary?

Mr. MANN. Passed last year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It must have been passed subsequent to the last legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. GILLETT. It was passed on March 2, 1909.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As I understand the gentleman, it is a separate organic law?

Mr. GILLETT. It is a separate act. That is the reason why it differs from the legislative bill of last year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this item of expense relating to the District of Alaska has grown very voluminously in the last few years. At present it carries an appropriation of $85,000. Last year the appropriation was $51,500. For this one item there is an increase this year of $33,500. Now, that may be a legitimate increase; I do not know, nor do I undertake to say.

Mr. GILLETT. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there was a deficiency last year of $33,500 in order to make it up.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But I can not refrain from commenting upon the great disparity in appropriations, so far as incidental and contingent expenses are concerned, relating to the government of Alaska, as compared with the same item of contingent and incidental expenses relating to the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. We have this item of $5,500 contingent and incidental expenses for the Territory of Alaska, and the same item for New Mexico is only $1,500, and I think substantially the same amount for the Territory of Arizona. But if there is an organic law by which these salaries are fixed—and I have no doubt there is, from the information I have obtained from the gentleman in charge of the bill—so far as the point of order I have reserved is concerned, I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For legislative expenses, namely: Furniture, light, telephone, stationery, record casings and files, printing and binding, indexing records, postage, ice, water, clerk hire, mileage of members, and incidentals, pay of chaplain, clerk, sergeants-at-arms, stenographers, typewriters, janitors, and messengers, $30,000: Provided, That the members of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii shall not draw their compensation of $200, or any mileage, for any extra session held in compliance with section 54 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, approved April 30, 1900.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is necessary to provide that the territorial legislature shall not have any compensation if there is an extra session. We have never made that provision about ourselves.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is to prevent them from having one.

Mr. GILLETT. We simply followed the statute of previous years. Just when it originated, I do not know.

Mr. MANN. It has originated this year.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no; it has been in from year to year.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether it had anything to do with the proposition now pending about special elections.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no; nothing at all.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of the Navy, $12,000; Assistant Secretary of the Navy, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,000; private secretary to Secretary, $2,500; clerk to Secretary, $2,250; clerk to Assistant Secretary, $2,000; disbursing clerk, $2,250; 4 clerks of class 4; stenographer, $1,800; clerk of class 3; 4 clerks of class 2; 5 clerks of class 1; stenographer, $1,200; clerk, $1,100; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; telegraph operator, $1,100; 2 copyists; carpenter, $900; 4 messengers; 4 assistant messengers; 3 laborers; 3 messenger boys, at $600 each; messenger boy, $420; messenger boy, $400; telephone switchboard operator; assistant telephone switchboard operator; in all, $73,460.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order on this paragraph, in order to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. I refer to page 104, line 2. My information is that there were only two laborers provided for last year in the legislative bill for the Secretary's office. I see there are three provided for here.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman to explain that, and state whether or not the additional laborer provided for here is authorized by existing law.

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman is looking the matter up, I will state that it takes an extra laborer to do the work of repairing these additional battle ships costing from $15,000,000 to $50,000,000 apiece.

Mr. LANGLEY. But that does not answer my question. It strikes me that it might be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to the point of order at all. An increase in the number of clerks or laborers in a department is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. If it is not provided for by existing law, or is in excess of the number authorized by law, it is. That is the point I am trying to get at.

Mr. MANN. The department is provided for by existing law, and the authority to increase the clerks and employees is with Congress. An increase in the clerks of a certain class is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, even if the gentleman is correct about that, I would like to know anyhow why there is an increase proposed over the number provided for last year?

Mr. GILLETT. It is because the Assistant Secretary of the Navy stated he had just one in his own office, and the man he had now was there from 8 o'clock in the morning until 6 or 6.30 o'clock in the evening without intermission, and then he had to clean up the office. He thought he needed two, and with some hesitation the committee gave the extra man to him. I do not think it is very important, one way or the other.

Mr. LANGLEY. It is in there nevertheless, and appears to have been of enough importance for the Secretary to ask it and for the committee to hesitate before allowing it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the solicitor: Solicitor, $3,000; law clerk, $2,500; law clerk, $2,250; law clerk, $2,000; clerk of class 4; clerk of class 3; clerk of class 2; clerk, $840; and messenger boy, $600; in all, $15,990.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LANGLEY. I was just about to reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking a question. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why the salary of the solicitor is changed from what it was last year?

Mr. MANN. You mean this solicitor?

Mr. GILLETT. That is a change. A year ago the solicitor received $4,000. We have provided in this bill that the solicitor shall receive $3,000. The fact is this: Formerly the salary of the solicitor was $2,500, but there was a provision that as long as the then present occupant held the office he should receive $1,500 additional. The solicitor died during the past year, and so the salary reverted to its old amount, which, as I say I think, was $2,500. The Secretary urged upon us very strongly that the solicitor does exceedingly important work; that he has to pass upon all the contracts of the department, which run up into many millions of dollars—$50,000,000 or more a year—and while the preceding officer received $4,000, he thought this man should receive $3,000, and the committee agreed with him and recommended $3,000. I will admit that it is subject to a point of order, because by law he is only entitled to $2,500.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will make the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. I will ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order for a moment. The Secretary of the Navy has stated to the Naval Committee that when the incumbent of this office of solicitor died, it was impossible to secure any lawyer of sufficient attainments to discharge the duties of that office at the salary of $2,500 per year, and it seems absolutely that there should be some increase in that pay in order to secure a man who knows enough of the law to be of any assistance whatever to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a fact, is it not, that the solicitor of the Navy Department prepares or passes upon all of the contracts for naval construction authorized in the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. ROBERTS. I so understand.

Mr. MANN. He does not prepare them. He passes upon them.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the fact.

Mr. ROBERTS. The solicitor passes on all contracts.

Mr. LANGLEY. In view of the explanation about the importance of his duties, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. As I reserved the point of order, I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Equipment: Chief clerk, $2,000; expert in wireless telegraphy, $3,000; draftsman, who shall be an expert in marine construction, $2,000; bookkeeper and accountant, $1,800; clerk of class 4; two draftsmen, at $1,700; electrical expert and draftsman, $1,600; clerk of class 3; clerk of class 2; clerk, $1,300; 2 clerks of class 1; draftsman for work in connection with depots for coal, $1,200; four clerks, at $1,000 each (four transferred to Bureau of Supplies and Accounts); 2 copyists; assistant messenger; messenger boy, $600, blueprinter, $600; messenger boy, $360; and 2 laborers; in all, $32,900.

Mr. GILLETT. I wish to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 106, in line 9, after the word "dollars," insert the word "each."

Mr. GILLETT. That is a typographical amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a monthly Pilot Chart of the North Pacific Ocean, showing graphically the matters of value and interest to the maritime community of the Pacific coast, and particularly the directions and forces of the winds to be expected during the month succeeding the date of issue; the set and strength of the currents; the feeding grounds of whales and seals; the regions of storm, fog, and ice; the positions of derelicts and floating obstructions to navigation; the best routes to be followed by steam and by sail; expenses of communicating and circulating information; lithographing and engraving; the purchase of materials for and printing and mailing the chart, $2,000.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. My recollection in reference to this matter is that this paragraph was stricken out one year on a point of order which I made. There is no authority of law for it. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether he regards it as a matter of importance to remain in the bill? It is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; I consider that it is a matter of importance.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the paragraph just read. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars" all that appears in the bill, on page 110, beginning with line 19, down to the end of line 8, on page 111, to make that a part of the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. ROBERTS. I reserve a point of order on the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert after the word "dollars," in line 12, on page 110, the following:

"Hereafter there shall not be detailed to or employed in the Hydrographic Office more than one naval officer at any one time; and hereafter the pilot charts prepared in said office shall have conspicuously printed thereon the following: 'Prepared from data furnished by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and by the Weather Bureau, of the Department of Agriculture, and published at the Hydrographic Office under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy;' and Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, and published at the Hydro- Department of Agriculture necessary for and of the character of such information heretofore used in the preparation of the pilot charts shall continue to be furnished with all possible expedition to the Hydrographic Office for use in the preparation of said charts."

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to state that the paragraph which is proposed to be amended has been held to be out of order on a former occasion. There is no doubt that this amendment which I have offered, considered as a separate proposition, would be subject to a point of order; but the paragraph which I propose to amend, itself being subject to a point of order, having been passed and no point of order being made against it, it is entirely competent under the rules to amend that paragraph by an amendment which itself would be obnoxious to the rule, provided the amendment relates to the same subject-matter and is germane.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph to which the gentleman offers the amendment relates only to the preparation of a pilot chart of the North Pacific Ocean, while his amendment relates to the entire work of the Hydrographic Office, including all the charts of all the oceans prepared by that office; and it also relates to the Weather Bureau, which the paragraph sought to be amended has no connection with. It also makes provision for the Department of Agriculture to furnish certain information to the Hydrographic Office for general use, not for use in making a pilot chart of the North Pacific Ocean.

I would submit further, Mr. Chairman, that even if the paragraph which is about to be amended might be subject to a point of order, yet the amendment to that paragraph may then be subject to a point of order, particularly if it is legislation, and this amendment offered is legislation, every line of it. The first section is a limitation on the power of the Secretary of the Navy to detail navy officers to such duty as he sees fit.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why should not it be limited?

Mr. ROBERTS. Because there is no law authorizing a limitation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Here is one.

Mr. ROBERTS. It is a new provision, and it is legislation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But it is not necessarily bad because it is new.

Mr. ROBERTS. But it is creating a law where none has heretofore existed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that when he takes a position like this against a paragraph of this importance and knocks it out, it will go to the other end of the Capitol, and then come back here——

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, let me say to the gentleman that you do not save a cent by this provision. If this is the best information the Committee on Appropriations has as to the effect of their provision, it is not worth a cent. The naval officers draw their pay whether they are in the Hydrographic Office or not.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They do not draw active pay.

Mr. ROBERTS. The difference between the active pay and the retired pay is not sufficient to offset the crippling of the preparation of the pilot charts, the most important work of the Hydrographic Office, upon the accuracy of which depends the safety of not only the naval vessels, but the vessels in the merchant marine.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The naval officers do not deserve a bit of credit for the preparation of these charts or any part of it.

Mr. ROBERTS. I know what the Navy Department says, that it is an exceedingly important work that these charts should be prepared under the supervision and inspection of the naval officers in the Weather Bureau.

Mr. GILLETT. What does the gentleman think these pilot charts are?

Mr. ROBERTS. They contain soundings——

Mr. GILLETT. Not at all.

Mr. ROBERTS. I am not certain what they show exactly, but I know what the Navy Department says, that they ought to be prepared under the supervision and inspection of naval officers.

Mr. TAWNEY. We are not disturbing any chart work in the Hydrographic Office, not even the pilot charts.

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman state what the pilot charts do show?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The feeding ground of whales. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is a fact.

Mr. ROBERTS. I have seen these charts on vessels in actual use, and they showed soundings and sailing courses; these are charts for the use of the merchant marine.

Mr. GILLETT. The pilot charts show the direction and forces of the wind, the currents, and general meteorological information prepared in the Weather Bureau under the Agricultural Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question for information. What does he want to have the paragraph taken out of its place for and attached to another paragraph?

Mr. ROBERTS. Because they are trying to evade a point of order under a technicality.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not think they can do that.

Mr. ROBERTS. Nor do I. The gentleman from Illinois reserved the point of order on that paragraph, thinking they would avoid a parliamentary situation when the gentleman from Minnesota takes up later language of the bill and seeks to put it onto this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I prefer that the gentleman should not state what I think.

Mr. ROBERTS. I did not impute any thoughts to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. ROBERTS. I was imputing a certain action to him.

Mr. MANN. You do not impute action to men, you impute motives; but we will not debate about that. When the gentleman from Massachusetts gets through arguing the point of order, I want to be heard.

Mr. ROBERTS. I have no more to say on the point of order at present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph at the top of page 11 has heretofore been ruled upon and was ruled out on a point of order several years ago. It provided for a monthly pilot chart of the north Pacific Ocean. It is the only provision anywhere in the law providing for a monthly chart of anything issued by the Hydrographic Office. That pilot chart is required to show the direction and forces of the wind to be expected during the month succeeding the date of issue; the feeding ground of whales and seals. I might remark, in passing, that if the Hydrographic Office or any other branch of the Government has discovered the feeding ground of whales and seals it is of immense importance, because that branch of the Government that deals with seals has never been able to discover their feeding ground. It provides for showing the regions of storm, fog, and ice; the position of derelicts and floating obstructions to navigation, doubtless thinking that a floating obstruction to navigation in the Pacific Ocean is tied fast to the bottom of the sea, so that it remains in the same position all the time.

Here is a proposition which provides for a monthly pilot chart of the north Pacific Ocean. It is the only specific provision providing for monthly pilot charts anywhere, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] offers an amendment to provide that hereafter the pilot charts prepared in that office shall have conspicuously printed thereon the following: How they are prepared, the information from which they are prepared. Mr. Chairman, if we have legislative authority, without a point of order being made, to provide for the pilot charts at all, we have the right as a germane amendment to say what the pilot charts shall contain. If the paragraph providing for these monthly pilot charts is subject to a point of order, and that is not made, so that the paragraph is in order, of course any germane amendment to it is in order, and this amendment is simply one providing what this pilot chart shall show; and in connection with the preparation of the pilot charts it provides that the meteorological information received by the Weather Bureau heretofore used, and so forth, shall continue to be furnished with all possible expedition. That is a germane amendment relating to the issuance of the pilot charts, and if this amendment is added to the paragraph which was just agreed to or which is before the House, it will provide simply how these pilot charts shall be prepared and what information shall be furnished for their preparation. I do not see how it can be questioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear what the gentleman has to say about the first sentence of this proposed amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I was about to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman from Illinois carefully steered around that in arguing his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. The gentleman from Illinois knows the point of order, or tries to, when he sees it. I think the expression "that hereafter there shall not be detailed to or employed in the Hydrographic Office more than one naval officer at any one time" is subject to the point of order as not in itself being a germane amendment to the balance, but, doubtless, if that is the only thing that is subject to the point of order, the rest of the amendment will be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair to one thing. The section which is sought to be amended, to wit, the first twelve lines on page 110, provide for compiling a pilot chart of the north Pacific Ocean. Now, under the guise of an amendment to that provision for a specific chart of the north Pacific Ocean, they are seeking to put on legislation which prohibits the detailing of more than one naval officer to the Hydrographic Office for any kind of work connected with that office, and I want to say for the information of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that the officers detailed to the Hydrographic Office are not concerned alone with the preparation of pilot charts, but with navigational charts, pilot charts, and sailing orders, from 20,000 to 30,000 copies of which are issued annually to merchant vessels and marine organizations.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware of the number of commanders and lieutenant-commanders who have been detailed to the Hydrographic Office and are now serving in that office?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I have the list here.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are four, are there not?

Mr. ROBERTS. I have their names and rank, and just where located. There are 7 naval officers on the active list, 4 of them in the main office, 3 in branch offices; there are 10 on the retired list, 1 in the main office and 9 in the branch offices, and they rank from ensign and boatswain to——

Mr. TAWNEY. But this has nothing to do with my question. How many are employed in the office here that are affected by this amendment?

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, I can answer only one question at a time. The highest office is the lieutenant-commander, detailed for this work. That is one answer to the gentleman's question. Now, what is the other question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I asked the gentleman but one question, and that was to state how many naval officers are employed in the Hydrographic Bureau of the Navy Department here at Washington.

Mr. ROBERTS. I do not know, and that does not have any bearing on this question at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has a great deal of bearing. There are four.

Mr. ROBERTS. The Navy Department say in a communication that they need the services of these officers in this particular Hydrographic Bureau.

Mr. TAWNEY. How long has it been since this department had a naval officer in charge of map construction?

Mr. ROBERTS. I am not able to answer that question, and it is immaterial.

Mr. TAWNEY. Nineteen hundred and eight; and up to that time they never had a naval officer in charge of map construction. The work of that division is purely the work of a civil engineer and draftsmen, and the work was under the charge of an engineer up until 1908. Since then they have detailed naval officers, even commanders, to the position of chief of division in the distribution of maps or charts, who serve as commander at $5,700 a year shore pay. Think of it, Mr. Chairman! A commander chief of a division charged with the responsible duty of mailing the charts to observers, mariners, and naval officers. A man on the active list, who ought to be serving on a ship or on the sea, where the Government educated him to serve, is serving here as chief of a little division, charged with the duty and responsibility of distributing the charts that are manufactured and printed for the Hydrographic Office—a service an office boy with ordinary intelligence could perform.

The same is true of every naval officer in that bureau except the hydrographer. This matter, Mr. Chairman, because of the lobbying of the Hydrographic Office, has occasioned more excitement throughout the country than any other provision in any appropriation bill we will consider at this session of Congress. The Hydrographic Office here at Washington conceived the idea that the Committee on Appropriations proposed to consolidate——

Mr. ROBERTS. I yielded to answer a question, and now the gentleman has started in to make a speech.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wanted to make a statement in regard to the necessity, or rather the want of necessity, for the employment of these naval officers in the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. ROBERTS. Well, take it in your own time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought I was speaking in my own time; I thought the gentleman had finished.

Mr. ROBERTS. No; I yielded merely for a question. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not able to state the specific duties of these naval officers who are detailed to the Hydrographic Office, but I do have here a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, dated March 12, to-day, in which he says that it is essential for the proper preparation of the navigational charts, pilot charts, and sailing orders, both for the navy and for the merchant marine, that they have sailor men in charge, not perhaps to do the actual construction work of making the maps, but men who can instruct the civilians how that information should be utilized to the best advantage for both the merchant marine and the naval service.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will you give us the name of the assistant secretary?

Mr. ROBERTS. If the gentleman does not know the name of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, I will give that piece of naval information; it is Mr. Beekman Winthrop.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I wanted to know which one.

Mr. ROBERTS. There is only one assistant secretary; I will give the gentleman that further naval information.

Mr. MANN. They change so fast that we can not keep track of them.

Mr. ROBERTS. They have not changed so fast under the present administration.

Mr. MANN. It has not been in long enough.

Mr. ROBERTS. It has been in about one year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman state to the committee how that letter came to be written—whether it was in response to a request of a committee or is it a voluntary letter from the department?

Mr. ROBERTS. It was not in response to a committee request. The Navy Department noticed that provision in the bill. They claimed they had not been consulted as to the propriety of putting that in, and they asked me, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to seek to strike it out as detrimental to the best interests of the Navy Department and the navy itself.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then it is a voluntary action on the part of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, I do not know what the gentleman calls voluntary; but it is official.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not care whether it is official or unofficial. I wanted to know whether it was upon the committee's request.

Mr. ROBERTS. You have the information.

Mr. SHERLEY. All right, then; as I understand, it is of their own volition.

Mr. ROBERTS. It is of their own volition.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what I wanted the gentleman to say.

Mr. ROBERTS. Is there any reason why, when legislation is proposed hostile to the interest of a great department, that any of the superior officers of that department should not call that fact to the attention of Congress before such legislation is enacted?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is a good deal of reason why they should call it to the attention of Congress in the proper way.

Mr. ROBERTS. Does the gentleman mean to say it is an improper way to ask a Member of Congress to call the attention of the House to this fact?

Mr. SHERLEY. I mean to say that this matter has been known to the Navy Department for several weeks, and that it would have been very easy for them to have appeared before the committee having it in charge and properly and orderly presented their views.

Mr. ROBERTS. I do not know what knowledge the Navy Department had of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do.

Mr. ROBERTS. I am told they were not asked to come down.

Mr. SHERLEY. If they were going to volunteer, that was the place to volunteer, where they would be subject to examination as to the reason for their views.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that they were before the committee on this very proposition.

Mr. ROBERTS. Somebody from the Hydrographic Bureau, yes; and from the Weather Bureau, yes. It is a very easy thing, as any member of this committee knows, to call before a committee of Congress some subordinate officer and get from him any sort of information wanted.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman find that to be the case in the Naval Committee?

Mr. ROBERTS. I have had the same experience that other Members have had.

Mr. MANN. It is not the experience that I have had. I wondered if that was the experience of the Naval Committee in calling various subordinate officers of the Secretary of the Navy and getting any opinion contrary to the opinion of the Secretary.

Mr. ROBERTS. That is a very easy thing to do, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. MANN. I have never found it easy. I found it just the other way.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is easy to write a letter and express views in that letter, when the writer is not subject to cross-examination.

Mr. ROBERTS. Would it not have been a proper thing for the great Committee on Appropriations, when it proposes to put by law a limitation on the power of the Secretary of the Navy to administer the duties of his office, to have had the decency to call him down there? Was he cross-examined on that point?

Mr. GILLETT. I think he was.

Mr. ROBERTS. When you are splitting straws, it seems to me that you had better get the mote out of your own eye before you try to take beams out of the eyes of anybody else.

Mr. SHERLEY. If you want me to answer the question, possibly I can.

Mr. ROBERTS. I have not asked the gentleman a question. At least, I am not aware that I have.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you not know that the Secretary of the Navy was invited to appear before the subcommittee on these various estimates, was courteously invited to appear, and he chose to send down the hydrographer and other chiefs of bureaus to answer inquiries concerning his estimates? That is the fact.

Mr. ROBERTS. I still maintain that had the Committee on Appropriations, which is presumed not only to have particular knowledge of naval affairs, but apparently has all knowledge on all affairs, proposed to put such a serious limitation upon the powers of a Cabinet officer, they should at least have consulted him personally, even had he in the first instance sent down a subordinate. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand the Chair is ready to rule. I am ready for the ruling.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to know whether the gentleman and the other members of the Naval Committee had any trouble in getting information from subordinates with reference to the reorganization of the navy, and whether they got the subordinates into trouble by reason of obtaining that testimony.

Mr. ROBERTS. That is a matter of inference; but I have heard of nobody getting into trouble by reason of information they gave, as yet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why do you emphasize "yet?"

Mr. ROBERTS. I am speaking as of the present time, not with any knowledge as to the future, as the gentleman from New York seems to have.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota proposes the paragraph, beginning at the bottom of page 110, as an amendment to the paragraph on the top of page 110. The paragraph to which the amendment is offered is clearly subject to a point of order; but no point of order being made, it is subject to amendment by any matter that is germane thereto. The Chair does not think it necessary to cite the precedents that sustain this rule, although there are a great many of them. They have been well decided in reason, and need no argument to justify them. The paragraph proposed to be amended relates to "pilot charts." The paragraph offered as an amendment also relates to the same subject, and is therefore germane, except as to the first sentence. That first sentence of the paragraph is:

Hereafter there shall not be detailed to or employed in the Hydrographic Office more than one naval officer at any one time.

Clearly, in the opinion of the Chair, that is not germane to the paragraph to which the amendment is offered, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the Chair permit me to call his attention to the fact that the part of the paragraph the Chair indicates as not in order, because not germane, the first part of it—I think the Chair fails to appreciate the fact that while the paragraph itself, which is not in order, relates to and authorizes the pilot charts, the first part of the paragraph which we propose relates to the office in which the chart is manufactured, to the personnel of the office in which the chart is manufactured. It seems to me that that is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair to be an entirely different subject. One is the charts and the other is the administration of the office in which they are made. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I offer as an amendment to this paragraph the following, beginning with the word "and," in line 21, down to and including "charts," at the end of line 8, page 111.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 110, after the word "dollars," insert "and hereafter the pilot charts prepared in said office shall have conspicuously printed thereon the following: 'Prepared from data furnished by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and by the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, and published at the Hydrographic Office under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy;' and all meteorological information received by the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture necessary for and of the character of such information heretofore used in the preparation of the pilot charts shall continue to be furnished with all possible expedition to the Hydrographic Office for use in the preparation of said charts."

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment. It has been offered in substance, and is simply a repetition of what has already been ruled out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to argue the point of order. This is certainly germane to the paragraph to which it is proposed, and differs from my former amendment to the extent that it contains only such matter as the Chair, on the point of order, held to be germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a moment. The gentleman from Massachusetts has indulged in a great deal of wild talk in regard to the functions of the Hydrographic Office and the discourteous treatment which he says the Committee on Appropriations gave that office and the Navy Department in not calling them before it. If there is anyone who has cause for complaint of mistreatment it is the membership of this House, and especially the membership of the Committee on Appropriations, on account of the treatment they have received at the instance of the Hydrographic Office and the Navy Department; for the moment that our committee commenced to investigate the question of duplication of service in the Hydrographic Office and the Weather Bureau, that moment the wires were made hot by the Hydrographic Office, communicating with the branch hydrographic offices all over the United States, and also with the maritime interests of the United States and foreign countries, urging them to protest against the consolidation of the work of the Hydrographic Office with the Weather Bureau of the Agricultural Department. They did not know exactly what was going to be done, nor did they inquire; they imagined their bureau, being a civil and not a military bureau, that it was our purpose, in order to avoid this duplication in the publication of the pilot charts, to consolidate the bureaus. Thereupon, or soon thereafter, the Committee on Appropriations and Members of the House began to be flooded with protests against an imaginary consolidation, something that was not even in the mind of any member of the committee; our only purpose when we commenced this investigation was to find out the facts in regard to the duplication of the service of these two bureaus. We soon discovered that the Hydrographic Bureau of the Navy Department and the Weather Bureau of the Agricultural Department were preparing, printing, and distributing identically the same pilot charts. The Chief of the Weather Bureau Service, when he was before us, frankly and manfully said that this was a duplication of service; that his bureau was required by law to furnish to the Hydrographic Office the meteorological information printed on the pilot charts; and that if Congress would provide that this work should be done exclusively by the Hydrographic Office he would cheerfully acquiesce.

The information in regard to currents and in regard to derelicts and sailing routes is furnished by the Hydrographic Office. Both were printing identically the same charts, and printing them monthly, and then they were distributing the same charts to the same observers who furnished these bureaus the information from which the charts are prepared. In that investigation we found that there were four naval officers detailed for service in the Hydrographic Bureau. There is an excuse for the hydrographer being a naval officer, because it is necessary to connect this civil institution with the navy and the merchant marine, but the Hydrographic Office is no part of the navy. The duties of those employed there are the duties of civilians; but notwithstanding that fact, we have four men in that office doing civil duty, doing the duty that $1,800 clerks are doing in other bureaus, and we are paying them from $5,000 to $5,700 a year. That is why the Committee on Appropriations, in reporting this provision, limited the number of officers to be detailed for duty in the Hydrographic Office to one, and that one the hydrographer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to have just a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman's time will be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. In this amendment that was ruled out did the employment of one naval officer relate only to the bureau in Washington?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is all. It does not relate to the branch offices at all; but the Hydrographic Office, in order to work up sentiment against this provision, made everybody think that it limited the employment of naval officers in the branch offices. This provision relates only to the office here in Washington.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have in the Committee on Appropriations a stack of petitions and protests 12 inches thick that have been sent here at the instance of this bureau for the purpose of influencing Congress in this matter. This has been done because the bureau conceived the idea that Congress was about to curtail and limit its functions.

A better illustration of the difficulty that Congress or any commission appointed by Congress will encounter when they undertake to reform the administrative methods was never given to the House than we have in the activity of the Hydrographic Office to prevent any curtailment even of naval officers to be detailed for service in that bureau. To show you the extent to which they have gone, I want to read a letter-press copy of the most impudent letter I have ever read or know to have been written about the action or proposed action of Congress. The letter is written by the hydrographer, Commander John J. Knapp, who personally is a splendid man and a personal friend. It is marked "Personal," and reads as follows:

(Personal.)

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE,
Washington, March 8, 1910.

MY DEAR HUNT: I have learned that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is holding up the bill in order to prevent any combinations being made against it. Due to this it has been impracticable to get a copy of the bill, as it has not yet been given out; but I was informed from a very reliable source that the objectionable clause was in the bill, and I do not think there is any question about it, although I can not so state officially.

Very respectfully, yours, JOHN J. KNAPP.

The methods employed by the Hydrographic Bureau to prevent the enactment of any legislation intended to effect economy in the service should impress upon Members of the House and the country the impossibility of accomplishing any reform in departmental methods when such reform involves reduction of force or the loss of desired positions.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations here proposes to reduce the number of naval officers drawing high salaries in this civic bureau.

Mr. MADDEN. Who is John J. Knapp?

Mr. TAWNEY. He is the hydrographer, the naval commander in charge of the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. ROBERTS. Who is Hunt?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know who Hunt is. He evidently resides in some maritime city.

Mr. ROBERTS. How did you get a copy of a personal letter to him?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was handed to me this morning on this floor by a page, in an envelope.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman probably got it in the same way that the hydrographer got information about the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was handed to me by a page boy. Who got the copy I do not know. But here is a proposition to reduce the number of naval officers whose services are unnecessary in the Hydrographic Office, whose services otherwise would be employed on ships at sea, performing the duties that the Government of the United States has educated them to perform.

We could maintain the Hydrographic Office with all of the service necessary, including the chiefs of divisions and all other employees, without the aid of any naval officer; but in order to connect the work of this office with the navy and maritime interests, a naval officer was provided for as Chief Hydrographer in the law creating the bureau. That is the only naval officer the law authorizes in this bureau. The others are detailed for service in this bureau for the purpose of giving naval officers a soft shore berth at increased compensation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if Members of Congress do not see fit to aid in bringing about the reforms in methods of administration, no complaint can be made against those who recommend the proposed legislation. This service, I repeat, is not a military service. There is one man, the commander, in charge of the division distributing charts. He draws $5,700 a year to perform civil duties—duties that a $1,600 clerk could perform just as efficiently as this naval officer.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that shore duty is always more attractive to naval officers than sea duty, because when on shore they receive more pay than they do when on sea duty, and whenever there comes an opportunity to give them employment on shore that opportunity is availed of and the officer is assigned to that duty.

Mr. ROBERTS. He does not get more pay on shore than when at sea.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, he gets more compensation.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood the gentleman from Minnesota to say that he had a letterpress copy of a letter from a Mr. Knapp to one Hunt; that it was handed to him anonymously. How does he know that it is a genuine letterpress copy, and if he does know it, how does it happen that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is dealing in purloined correspondence and is exposing to the public personal communications? My only inference is that the gentleman must be a subscriber to the Hearst syndicate. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there can be any such thing as personal correspondence as differentiated from official correspondence by a department officer on a matter pending in Congress?

Mr. ROBERTS. I know nothing about the circumstances under which the letter was written or is supposed to have been written.

Mr. MANN. We know what it purports to be.

Mr. ROBERTS. If it was an answer to a personal inquiry from a personal friend, I can conceive of his sending the reply marked "personal" to differentiate it from an official letter.

Mr. MANN. He might send it marked "personal," but it would be official all the same.

Mr. ROBERTS. The main part of the argument of the gentleman from Minnesota was devoted to saving expense in the Hydrographic Office by cutting out the number of officers detailed there. As I understood the amendment, which the chairman said was in order, he has eliminated that limitation upon the Secretary, so that as the matter would stand if the amendment was adopted, no expense in the matter of official salary to naval officers will be saved by his amendment. But what will be accomplished?

The gentleman from Minnesota is very anxious to save duplication of work on charts by the Weather Bureau and the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department. You may look all through this appropriation bill and you will not find a single line preventing the Weather Bureau from duplicating the meteorological charts now published by the Hydrographic Office. Oh, no! The Weather Bureau is not to be limited. It is the Hydrographic Office that is to be limited in this great effort for economy on the part of this committee.

Now, what is the meat in the cocoanut here? It is simply to allow this great Weather Bureau to reach out and have its name printed on all the charts that go out, so that it can get more credit whether it justly belongs to it or does not belong to it. It is to have credit for the work done by the Hydrographic Office. It looks to me as though it was a petty squabble between the Weather Bureau and the Hydrographic Office, in the form that the amendment has taken, and as far as I am personally concerned I do not care a cent which way the committee votes it, the main thing being that they have stricken out of the amendment the limitation on the power of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Add to the amendment the following:

Provided, That no moneys appropriated in this bill shall be expended for any pilot charts prepared in a hydrographic office in which there are detailed or employed more than one naval officer at any one time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, before that is considered I want to call attention to a verbal change which is necessary in the amendment that I offered. The word "said" is used where it refers to the Hydrographic Office in the preceding sentence, which was stricken out. In order to make the amendment read correctly, instead of the word "said" being there it should be stricken out and the words "the Hydrographic" inserted before the word "Office" in line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the change will be made in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order on that amendment. That is not a limitation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, it is too late to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to make a point of order after the amendment has been discussed. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota what work these naval officers are assigned to in the Hydrographic Office?

Mr. TAWNEY. One is in charge of map construction, another is in charge of the distribution of charts.

Mr. PARSONS. We have heard a lot about him, but what about the other two?

Mr. TAWNEY. The other is chief of a division that has charge of preparing the data that is used in making the plates used in the manufacture of the charts. It is purely routine work. None of the work is military or naval at all.

Mr. PARSONS. Some of it is maritime?

Mr. TAWNEY. Of course. The whole subject relates to the maritime service, but the actual work does not require special knowledge or naval or military science.

Mr. PARSONS. Are these all officers who are on the active list?

Mr. TAWNEY. All but one, and he is drawing active pay, because he is on active duty.

Mr. PARSONS. This would exclude any man on the retired list of the navy?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; it would not. There is one included who is on the retired list, who is drawing the pay of an active officer.

Mr. PARSONS. Can he still be detailed to this work if the gentleman's amendment is adopted?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; unless he is detailed to the position of hydrographer.

Mr. PARSONS. In addition to the officer who is on the active list?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I do not think he could.

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes; they can still be detailed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman's amendment propose to do away with the services of officers entirely?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no. The amendment that has just been adopted limits the number of naval officers that can be detailed to these several bureaus to one.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How many are there now?

Mr. TAWNEY. There are four, including the hydrographer; four or five.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Somebody will have to do the work now done by these officers.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is expressly provided for in the legislative bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If they are not permitted to do the work, somebody would have to be put in their place and receive another salary.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. The chief of a division receiving a salary of $1,800 per year will perform the services now performed by the naval officer who is drawing $5,700 per year, and that naval officer can go to sea where his services are required.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand he is not detailed on land when his services are required at sea, and he does not draw any more salary whether on sea or on land. The Government expends $5,700 a year for that officer, and if you take him out of this place, he will continue to draw his $5,700 a year salary and some other man will be put in his place—a new man—and an additional $1,800 will be taken out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. We are told that about half the vessels of the navy are out of commission to-day because they have no officers to man them; and if that is true, then, to the extent that we have officers here doing civil duty when $1,800 clerks could perform the same services, we are responsible for not having a sufficient number of officers for the navy.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter the pilot charts prepared in the Hydrographic Office shall have conspicuously printed thereon the following: "Prepared from data furnished by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and by the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, and published at the Hydrographic Office under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy;" and all meteorological information received by the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture necessary for and of the character of such information heretofore used in the preparation of the pilot charts shall continue to be furnished with all possible expedition to the Hydrographic Office for use in the preparation of said charts: Provided, That no moneys appropriated by this bill shall be expended for any pilot charts prepared in a hydrographic office in which there are detailed or employed more than one naval officer at any one time.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I want to be recognized on this amendment. I think this House has gotten decidedly mixed on this whole proposition. You have here a proposition providing for publishing a pilot chart of the north Pacific Ocean, and you are mixing it all up with the special employment of naval officers in the Washington office, and I submit the way the amendment now stands the amendment simply affects the San Francisco hydrographic office and has nothing to do with the Washington office whatever, and makes a complication, so that this House does not know where it is at, and in all due respect to this committee, I ask that you vote the amendment down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota as amended by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter there shall not be detailed to or employed in the Hydrographic Office more than one naval officer at any one time; and hereafter the pilot charts prepared in said office shall have conspicuously printed thereon the following: "Prepared from data furnished by the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department and by the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture, and published at the Hydrographic Office under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy;" and all meteorological information received by the Weather Bureau of the Department of Agriculture necessary for and of the character of such information heretofore used in the preparation of the pilot charts shall continue to be furnished with all possible expedition to the Hydrographic Office for use in the preparation of said charts.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Observatory: For 3 assistant astronomers, 1 at $2,400, and 2 at $1,800 each; assistant in department of nautical instruments, $1,600; clerk of class 4; clerk of class 2; instrument maker, $1,500; electrician, $1,500; 3 assistants, at $1,600 each; 3 assistants, at $1,400 each; librarian, $1,400; 2 assistants, at $1,000 each; stenographer and typewriter, $900; foreman and captain of the watch, $1,000; carpenter and engineer, at $1,000 each; 3 firemen; 6 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; and 9 laborers; in all, $43,240.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 22643, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 79. Joint resolution providing for the printing of extra copies of the report of the Chief of Division of Military Affairs, office of the Secretary of War, for fiscal year ended June 30, 1909—to the Committee on Printing.

S. J. Res. 37. Joint resolution requiring the printing of public papers and documents from foreign countries in the English language—to the Committee on Printing.

ACCEPTANCE OF STATUE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 20.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of John C. Calhoun, presented by the State of South Carolina to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State for the contribution of the statue of one of the most eminent citizens, illustrious for the purity of his life and his distinguished services to the State and Nation.

Second. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of the State of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] will take the chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read the following communication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Columbia, March 12, 1910.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

It gives me great pleasure, as governor of the State of South Carolina, to present to the Congress of the United States a marble statue of John C. Calhoun, a native of South Carolina, and one whose name is honored wherever known.

John C. Calhoun was one of the greatest men that this country has produced, and a statesman of renown, who has left his impress upon this Nation, and whose name is indelibly inscribed upon the pages of history, both national and State.

The State of South Carolina begs now to present through me, as her governor, to the Congress of the United States, as the representative of the people of the United States, this beautiful statue of a great and good man.

Respectfully,

M. F. ANSEL,
Governor of South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have arisen from a sick bed in order that by my presence at least I might attest my appreciation of the most distinguished man that South Carolina has produced. Although sickness has prevented any preparation, I feel constrained to submit a few observations upon this illustrious man, but I shall not give a biographical sketch of his life. Other gentlemen, who have made that full preparation which the subject and the occasion demand, will go with sufficient minuteness into all dates and events of his great career. He is the one man in American history who needs no flattery. The simple truth will establish his fame among men. He is not understood. He has been more harshly and unjustly criticised than any other man in our public life.

That is due to the fact that one of the great constitutional principles for which he stood preeminently above all of his fellows became involved in a great moral question, which was answered not by logic but by the passions and the power of numbers. It is well to remember that John C. Calhoun was not the author but the tragic victim of the institution of slavery. He was a man of transcendent ability. This is evidenced by the fact that born and reared in a sparsely settled country with few school facilities, yet in two years from the time he entered a country academy and began to study Latin grammar he was prepared to enter the junior class in Yale College.

Two years thereafter he was graduated from that institution with distinction. The eminent Doctor Dwight, who differed radically from him in his political convictions, admired greatly his intellect, and expressed the opinion that Calhoun had the capacity to be President of the United States, and predicted that he would be.

I have said that Calhoun is misunderstood and unjustly criticised, many people believing that the only great question that he ever discussed was that which was swallowed up in the civil war. In truth he investigated, mastered, and discussed every important question of legislation and administration from 1810 until March 30, 1850, when his great soul took its flight, his eloquent tongue was silenced, and the master brain, which for analysis had had no peer since Paul the Apostle, ceased its activities.

When he came here, in 1810, between the oppression of France on the one hand and England on the other the independence of the United States was nominal only. He took his place as the leader of that set of young statesmen who brought on the war of 1812, which gave us real independence on the land and on the sea and finally settled our place among the nations of the earth. His first great speech in the House of Representatives was made in reply to John Randolph, of Virginia. He spoke upon a resolution which he had presented from the Committee on Foreign Relations. By that effort he at once established himself as one of the great thinkers of the age, and the Richmond Dispatch of that day gave him credit for being one of the most prominent and promising young men in public life.

He was intimately identified with all legislation growing out of the war, and after the war was over and our finances and currency were in miserable plight, he was made chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. He investigated the currency and the finances from every possible standpoint, and was more instrumental than any other man in getting the finances properly adjusted and the country brought to a specie basis.

In 1817 he passed from the House of Representatives into the Cabinet of Mr. Monroe as Secretary of War, a position which he held until he was elected Vice-President of the United States. He took charge of the War Department and brought system out of chaos.

In 1825 he became Vice-President of the United States, and was again elected in 1828, but subsequently—1832—he resigned as Vice-President to become a Senator in Congress from South Carolina. And here I may remark, in passing, lest I forget it, that there never was a day when there was not a seat in the Senate of the United States for John C. Calhoun if he desired to occupy it. Whether he occupied a place in the Cabinet or as presiding officer of the Senate, the moment he indicated his willingness to resign there was an immediate resignation of some Senator from South Carolina in order that Calhoun might have the seat. That has happened in the life of no other man in the history of this Republic. I may say, in this connection, that only one time in all his public life did he meet with serious opposition at the hands of the electorate in South Carolina.

In 1824, after he had voted to give Members of Congress a yearly compensation, on returning to South Carolina he found his vote exceedingly unpopular. Most of the Members of Congress who voted for that measure were never returned. Calhoun's friends urged him to apologize to the electorate of his district and acknowledge that he was wrong and ask their indulgence. But that he refused to do. Not believing that he was wrong, he could not apologize. All he desired was to be heard by the people. He went upon the stump, and he presented with that precision and that logic for which he was noted his reasons for his vote, and was triumphantly elected to Congress. That was the first and only time, Mr. Speaker, in all his forty years of public life that he ever met opposition at the hands of the people of South Carolina.

When he retired from the Vice-Presidency he entered the Senate in what is characterized as the "debating era" of this Government. There he found as colleagues Thomas Hart Benton, Henry Clay, and Daniel Webster. Even the names of many of the men in public life at that time have passed from recollection, but these great intellectual giants stand out preeminently in our history and are known to every schoolboy. It is not necessary to say that as Calhoun had taken the lead in the House of Representatives in that set of young statesmen who brought on the war of 1812 and established our independence upon the sea, in fact as well as in name, in the other end of the Capitol he was likewise among the foremost.

As I have already said, he discussed all the great questions from 1810 to 1850; and while his life went out as a great tragedy, his place in history is secure.

It is a remarkable coincidence, Mr. Speaker, that just a hundred years after John C. Calhoun was elected a Representative in Congress, the people of South Carolina, through the general assembly, accepting the invitation of Congress to place in Statuary Hall in bronze or marble the effigy of one of her most eminent citizens, has sent to this place the immaculate Calhoun. Pure, white, and spotless as is the marble statue which was this day unveiled, it is not whiter, it is not purer, it is not more spotless than was John C. Calhoun as he tabernacled in the flesh. [Applause.]

And so, Mr. Speaker, South Carolina presents to the American people in lasting, enduring form, the statue of her greatest citizen; and as I heard an eminent scholar in another body say to-day, that of itself is no small compliment, for in war or in peace she has always occupied a conspicuous place in our history. She presented in 1810, and has presented in every period of our history, some of the most eminent men in the life of the Republic.

Mr. Speaker, I have not the time to dwell upon and develop the thought, but I wish to mention it in passing, that South Carolina has come to be the greatest cotton manufacturing State in the Union save Massachusetts; but the protection sentiment in that State is negligible. What an eloquent tribute is this to John C. Calhoun!

Take our greatest and most eminent citizen in spotless marble as the heritage of all the people, and let his pure life be an inspiration to pure living and high thinking.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, Statuary Hall is, somewhat ambitiously, I think, often called our national Pantheon, where a place is given to the statues of the great men of the Nation. The collection doubtless belongs to the Nation, but in no other sense except in a peculiar one can it be called a national gallery. The selections are made by no national authority, but by the separate States, which are given the equal right to choose two men whose statues shall appear there. The hall is thus primarily a gallery for the States, and that fact must be borne clearly in mind in order to understand the meaning of the collection. The States have usually done themselves justice, and, with very few exceptions, have made the best selections they could make, but as they are far from equal in fertility as mothers of great men it is inevitable that there will be far greater men not represented in the collection than some of those who are there. Virginia, for instance, is a very nurse of lions. She has already presented her two statues, and yet, if she were given the right to add to the number, she has in reserve Patrick Henry and Thomas Jefferson and John Marshall and James Madison, any one of whom many of the States would be proud to make their first choice. It is then a gallery of the great men of the States rather than of the Nation.

But it is fortunate that we have a collection formed in this way, because of the breadth of the portrayal which it really gives to our history. Instead of witnessing there a single historical tone, as we should if the gallery were filled by the choice of New England, or the West, or the South, or possibly by some central authority, we have the local and sectional coloring; the choice of the different States gives us a blending of characters standing for different and even opposite shades of thought, and we see there side by side the men out of whose conflicts with each other has been evolved the America of to-day. [Applause.] How vastly better and broader this than to have none but safe and orthodox statues illustrating a single constitutional school, statesmen who advocated the same doctrines, soldiers who always fought the same battles, with no suggestion of the fierce internal struggles by which the Nation was molded. Statuary Hall thus has a high value as a gallery of history with the different sides of our great struggles represented. It is perhaps too much to hope that it should also be a gallery of art.

The pending resolution formally accepts from the State of South Carolina the statue of John C. Calhoun and thanks the State for the gift. I think in this gift that she has done herself full justice, and is presenting the statue of her most distinguished son, who played a great part in the development of our national history. He was born and educated in the State and was identified with her throughout his whole life. For nearly forty years he was connected with the Government of the Nation in the most responsible positions. He held the offices of Representative and Senator from South Carolina, of Secretary of War and of State, and of Vice-President. He was practically in continuous service from 1811 to 1850, when he died in Washington while a Member of the Senate. In point of intellect and in purity of character he ranks among the very greatest of our statesmen, and, although his name is more conspicuously identified than any other name with the theory of nullification, a theory to which his extraordinary power of logic gave practical force as a political principle, more than once in critical times he devoted himself to the work of preventing a rupture between the central and the state governments and of maintaining the Union. He was throughout his whole life devoted to his native State. His first recollection was of South Carolina as a completely sovereign republic except for the Articles of Confederation which had little or no binding force. He was nurtured in the idea that his State was his country, and in his political philosophy his primary allegiance was to her, and through her he derived his more remote and less affectionate relations with the Federal Government.

He was fortunate in his education, considering the times. His early boyhood was taken up with the reading of a very few good books. For two years, which seems to have been almost the entire time of his schooling in South Carolina, he attended a famous school which was held in the woods with the boys living in log cabins and farm houses near by, and every morning at sunrise the master would summon them to work with a blast upon a hunter's horn. He was a serious-minded boy, and remained of a serious temperament throughout his life.

His biographer, Mr. Hunt, tells us that he rarely read poetry, and that when he once essayed to write some verses every stanza began with "whereas." His two years spent in Doctor Waddell's school fitted him for the junior class at Yale College, from which, after two more years of study, he graduated. He then took a two years' course in a law school in Connecticut. Thus, of six years spent at school, he was for four years in the North. We should expect that his residence there would have affected his views upon the great constitutional question with which he was afterwards identified. And this is not at all unlikely, for the theories that were kindred with nullification were probably as rife at that day in Connecticut as they were in South Carolina. And there is evidence that one of his law teachers was of opinion in 1804 that the time had arrived for New England to separate from the Union.

When he entered Congress nearly all the leaders of the Revolutionary period had passed from the stage and the affairs of the Nation were soon to be directed by men of the next generation. During the next forty years Congress was to be largely dominated by three men—or, at least three men stood out so conspicuously from their associates as to form a class by themselves; they were of such heroic proportions as to cause us even to this day to look back upon that period of our congressional history as upon a golden age. Calhoun was one of that triumvirate, and the others, it is hardly necessary to add, were Daniel Webster and Henry Clay.

Calhoun's service at Washington divides itself into two periods. From 1811 to 1828 he was a national statesman. He declared in the House of Representatives that he was not there to represent a State alone, but that he would contend for the interest of the whole people. It was a theory of his at that time that the "Constitution is not a thesis for the logician to exercise his casuistry on." He declared that woolen and cotton manufacturing should have a moderate but permanent protection. In his first term in Congress he brought in the resolution for war against Great Britain, a war which, except for the brilliant success of our few ships, was neither a glorious nor a decisive war. As Secretary of War he was a member of the same Cabinet as John Quincy Adams, and worked with that critical statesman in a way to gain his admiration. With the possible exception of Henry Clay, he was as thoroughgoing a national statesman as could be found in Washington during his first fifteen years of service.

We now come to the second period of his service, and in what I shall say concerning this period I shall confine myself to a few observations upon the subject which presents the most important aspect of his career. He was by far the foremost representative of the idea of state sovereignty and of the right of a State to veto national laws, and it is in that relation that he becomes a great historical character, imperishably associated with the overshadowing constitutional struggle of our history. His position upon this issue was first clearly apparent in 1828. The operation of the protective tariff had proved burdensome to South Carolina, which was almost purely an agricultural State, with a system of slave labor unfavorable to the development of manufactures. Extreme hostility to the tariff led, under the loosely formed constitutional notions of that time, to the development of the nullification programme.

Calhoun found a sentiment of opposition to this unpopular law widely prevalent in his State, and was influenced by it, but that alone was not responsible for his position. He believed the State to be sovereign. Our history at that time was full of instances, which might serve him as precedents, where the authority of the Central Government, as against the States, had been questioned. The Virginia resolutions, which had been drawn by Madison, one of the fathers of the Constitution; the Kentucky resolutions, which were the work of Jefferson; the proceedings of the Hartford convention, which had been participated in by nearly all of the New England States, gave basis for the claim that the States might nullify an unconstitutional law of the Nation. Calhoun attempted to justify the attitude of his State in its hostility to a national law, and drew up the famous exposition of 1828, which strongly asserted the doctrine of nullification and attempted to give it constitutional form.

He declared that each State might nullify a national law which it regarded as in violation of the Constitution, and that the State itself was the judge whether a law was constitutional or not. It is probable that at that moment Calhoun was rather a follower than a leader, and that he reluctantly accepted an opinion that was rapidly acquiring revolutionary force. The State definitely took its place as the leader of nullification, and there was never afterwards within her borders a real division upon that question. The court of appeals, which held the official oath unconstitutional because it did not include the National Constitution, was legislated out of existence, and the great union leaders were driven into exile and identified themselves with other States.

Calhoun resigned the Vice-Presidency and took his seat in the Senate in December, 1832, and in the following February he made perhaps his most remarkable speech, occupying two days, in which he amplified the doctrine of nullification with a remarkable power of statement and analysis and with an intense and remorseless logic, pressing to conclusions from which it appears difficult to escape, but from which one instinctively recoils. He declared that the Constitution was a compact between the States, which remained sovereign, and that the Central Government possessed none of the attributes of sovereignty, but only exercised powers delegated to it by the States; and that upon the question whether the National Government had encroached upon the reserved rights of the State, the latter alone was the rightful judge. He argued that to permit the National Government to decide finally upon the constitutionality of its own laws would be ultimately to destroy the States. Yet in its practical effect it was clear that his doctrine that the States were the rightful judges of the constitutionality of national laws, which they assumed the power to nullify, would as effectively destroy the National Government or reduce it to a mere shadow. To this speech a reply was immediately made by Webster, who showed the chaos that would result from the application of the theory, and who maintained that the basis of the National Government was not a compact, but a Constitution binding all the States and the people within its sphere and forming a union which revolution alone could overthrow.

The theory of nullification, however, had received in the speech of Hayne in the Senate its most popular presentation while Calhoun was yet Vice-President, but after South Carolina had adopted the exposition which codified it and for the first time gave it a definite form. That speech was one of the most brilliant in the annals of our Congress. It was not so philosophical nor so closely reasoned as were Calhoun's speeches, but it presented the theory with great force, and it contained a slashing attack upon New England and upon some of her public men. It was a brilliant fighting speech, worthy of the place it holds in our greatest debate. Hayne rendered his country a real practical service in the personal and sectional passages of his speech, because they served as a whip to arouse the combative instincts of one of the statesmen of New England. Daniel Webster was then a member of the Senate. He doubtless would have made a great constitutional argument if he had been attempting to reply to a coldly constitutional and logical speech, such as Calhoun would have made, for Webster had at that time won the place which he held unchallenged for a quarter of a century as the leader of the American bar. But the dashing personal and sectional attack which Hayne had delivered moved the large and somewhat sluggish nature of Webster to something more than a constitutional argument. It thoroughly awakened him and kindled his passion so that while his reply vindicated the cause of the Union and the supremacy of the National Constitution with amazing power, it did much more. It glowed with the warmth of passion, it displayed a superb irony and invective; in the declamatory passages it spread out the colors of a gorgeous rhetoric; in brief, it presented the great argument in a popular form, something that gave it much of the tremendous influence which it was destined to exert in molding popular opinion. This speech planted the idea of nationality broadcast, and it was time that that was done. There was scarcely a school boy in the North in the quarter of a century before the civil war who did not declaim it. It built up, if it did not create, the sentiment of nationality. Much has been said about the decisive battles of the world. One needs to be cautious in using the superlative, but I think it can at least fairly be said that this speech of Webster's is one of the very few decisive speeches of the world, and that it is largely due to it that the cause of union finally triumphed.

The oratorical duel to which I have referred between Calhoun and Webster in 1833, while not so dramatic nor of nearly so popular a character as the debate between Webster and Hayne, gave the most complete discussion of the question that it ever received. While much was afterwards spoken upon the subject, but little, if anything, was added to the argument.

Calhoun died in 1850. There was after all a warm spot in his heart for the Union, and in the last days of his life he was struggling to compromise the situation and to keep the Union running, although he was profoundly pessimistic as to the outcome. At the same time, Webster was setting the Union above everything else and alienating many of his friends at home by the sacrifices which he was willing to make for it. Neither of them lived to witness the final appeal to the tribunal of war. That tribunal rendered a decree, the justice and wisdom of which are beyond question, in favor of nationality, and it decreed also that as we have an indestructible Union, so, in the lofty language of the Supreme Court, spoken since the civil war, it is an indestructible union of indestructible States. [Applause.] Unless by new amendments the powers of the National Government can be augmented only by usurpation, which would be no less repugnant to Webster's constitutional theory than was nullification itself. There is danger that we may forget the fundamental importance of maintaining the balance established between the States and the National Government. Undoubtedly the tendency of our time has been toward the absorption by the National Government of the reserved powers of the States. We are tugging at the fetters of our written Constitution as at a chain, and by a species of governmental hypocrisy we have more than once pretended to exercise a power which is granted in order really to wield some power which is not granted. It is for us to see to it that the system, which secures union while it safeguards liberty, and which war and argument have done their best to establish, shall not be disturbed by state nullification on the one hand nor by national usurpation on the other. [Applause.]

But we of to-day are separated from their time by one of the most colossal of wars. While they had their fears, they did not know what was to come. They were struggling in a peaceful forum for the conflicting views of our system. And as the realism of art perpetuates the past and projects it vividly into the present, so in a hall in this Capitol, which more than once rang with their eloquence, the foremost champion of nullification and the great defender of the Union may still be seen contending with each other and fighting over again in marble the great battle of the Constitution. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, tender as a mother in solitary vigil over her first born, for more than half a century the State of his nativity has kept loving watch over the sepulchered ashes of her most illustrious citizen. For forty years she intrusted him with a confidence akin to idolatry, and the vicissitudes of two generations of men and measures have not sufficed to lessen that veneration nor to bring disloyalty to his memory. His influence upon the standard of political morality and official purity in his State is as vital to-day as when he drew the drapery of his couch about him and laid down to pleasant dreams.

The auspicious events of this day, recording the verdict of exact and impartial history, mark the consummation of tribute of a reunioned people. The Nation, removed from the bitterness, strife, and misunderstanding of his distinguished activities, here welcomes the opportunity to join South Carolina in canceling a long-standing debt of gratitude, in paying proper homage to his loyal and unselfish patriotism. The Nation honors itself; the fame of John Caldwell Calhoun, always secure, now happily commands its national recognition.

Our Hall of Fame, filled with the testimonials of a people's love and gratitude to their great dead, holds none which deserves them more than that unveiled to-day. No encomium the Nation may pay him can compensate for the life he devoted to her service. The matchless probity of his imperial character, his undoubted love for the institutions of his country, are a lesson and an inspiration inestimable in influence upon generations yet to come. To quote the measured language of Mr. Webster, his greatest compeer, Mr. Calhoun was "a man of undoubted genius and commanding intellect, of unspotted integrity, of unimpeached honor." "He has lived long enough, he has done enough, and he has done it so well, so successfully, so honorably, as to connect himself for all time with the records of his country." Aye, in truth, his endeavors alone have builded a monument imposing beyond the power of man to devise. His other great compeer, Mr. Clay, refers to his "transcendent talents; clear, concise, compact logic; his felicity in generalization surpassed by none." In like vein spoke all of his great contemporaries, each eulogizing him as a man of spotless character, unsurpassed genius, unalloyed devotion to duty and country. Mr. Blaine, himself the most dazzling political leader of his time, in his admirable work, Twenty Years of Congress, pays him the tribute, "History will adjudge him to have been single-hearted and honest in his political creed." "His life was eminently pure, his career exceptional, his fame established beyond the reach of calumny, beyond the power of detraction." This prophecy is fulfilled; history has adjudged; its decree is writ; imperishable is the fame of the the great South Carolinian! [Applause.]

The most vital period in a nation's history—a nation whose institutions rest upon written constitutions—is that which may be called "the period of interpretation." In the annals of time no assemblage of men contained more wisdom, more devoted patriotism, more comprehensive reach into the future than that which framed our Federal Constitution. Even it builded wiser than it knew. A broader, more pregnant, and all-embracing instrument was never conceived in the wisdom of mankind. Out of it has grown the glory of the Nation and upon it is predicated her greatness for the future. This, "the work of the ages, chief classic in the literature of freedom," stands without parallel in the history of human government as man's greatest work for freedom of men. [Applause.]

The inherent potentiality of a written instrument is measured by the wisdom of its interpretation. As through the centuries the destiny of England has been shapen in her traditions the course of these United States is mapped in the interpretation of its written Constitution. The searchlights of ships, breaking the gloom of the trackless deep, point the pathway of safety; interpretation, illuminating the dark, pathless way of the ship of state, marks her course for weal or woe.

The interpreters of the Constitution have exerted an influence greater, certainly not less, than its framers in determining the character of our institutions. Free government is a growth, a development, a process of evolution, the resultant of wise interpretations as well as correct and sound fundamentals. The Constitution was but dumb, unliving parchment until touched by the genius of interpretation. In hallowing the sages who wrought it into form let us not forget the services of the philosophers and prophets whose transcendent intellectualities infused into it life and power by the masterful sagacity of their interpretations.

During this period, the building upon the foundation, the transition stage, the most perilous of all others, the rock fatal in the career of republics, the combat of giants, the charge and recoil of master spirits, the sons of South Carolina shone brightest in the firmament of national ideals and carried her flag furtherest to the front in the field of thought and influence. No State of this Union ever contributed, at any one time, a greater array of brilliant leaders than did South Carolina, in her William Lowndes, Langdon Cheves, Robert Y. Hayne, William C. Preston, George McDuffie, John C. Calhoun. [Applause.] Great as were all these great characters, powerful as was the impress of each upon the thought of his age, popular in State and Nation as they were, preemient in learning and eloquence, devoted and unswerving to country and a high sense of duty, Mr. Calhoun stands above and beyond them all in the completeness of his character, the fullness of his wisdom, the matchless splendor of his mind. In moral and intellectual grandeur he was without peer among all these great men, whose brilliant accomplishments have brought so rich a luster to the history of South Carolina.

From his entrance into her legislature to the day of his death his power in the State was substantially absolute. Her destiny she willingly committed to his keeping. And out of this arose the charge that his predominance in her affairs had crushed the spirit of her independence, moving the celebrated ex-Governor Perry to say:

I thought, after the death of Mr. Calhoun the people of South Carolina could think more independently.

What higher tribute can be paid any force of character or power of intellectuality than to admit they held so complete and welcomed mastery over so proud and independent a people!

The power of Mr. Calhoun in the State was the indirect effect of his commanding preeminence in the affairs of the Nation. It was in this forum that his great wisdom, his wonderfully acute analytical powers, his marvelous grasp of public questions, his prophetic vision, his personal and political integrity, gave him a place enjoyed by few—surpassed by none—in this most important pivotal period of interpretation. From his advent into the national arena until the close of his momentous life the impress of his mighty mind, in conjunction with those only who ever approached him in intellectual force and influence—Webster, Clay, and Benton—stamped itself upon every page of the history of that period.

Calhoun, Webster, Clay, Benton, each greater, each less than the other, this roll call sounds the depth of the Nation's intellectual pride. [Applause.] The legislative history of civilization fails to furnish a quartette comparable with this in the variety of its talents, the magnitude of its genius, the wisdom of is leadership, and the clearness of its prophecy. England's masterful triumvirate—Burke, Fox, Pitt—measured by the standard of comparative abilities and attainments, must give place to our more masterful four.

In no other country has any like combination of men commanded a firmer grip upon or a more thorough conception of the problems of the present, nor exerted upon those of the future a greater or more lasting influence. During all their long service none arose powerful enough to dispute their dominancy in the forum of their activity. In this field they were supreme, all-powerful, overshadowing every other and all others—history's greatest Senators. Here they were the embodiment of the thought, policies, ambitions, and prophecies of the Nation. Their lives are the history of that generation; their philosophy, teachings, and interpretations the bases upon which the institutions of government rest even to this day.

Of this splendid galaxy, this inseparable quartette of political philosophers, none eradiated a more conspicuous and constant brilliancy than Mr. Calhoun. It is true he did not possess the enormous knowledge of Mr. Benton, nor the highly developed perception and penetration of Mr. Clay, nor the rich imagery and almost divine prophecy of Mr. Webster; but in the domain of speculative philosophy and metaphysics he was greater than all combined. He was not so practical as Mr. Benton, nor so dashing a parliamentary leader as Mr. Clay, nor so incomparable an orator as Mr. Webster; but as a logician he is unrivaled among the sons of men.

Mr. Calhoun was not a great orator. He was a great speaker and an unerring analyst. He addressed the intellect, not the emotion. The marked characteristic of his mind was its power of analysis, a faculty which when fully developed constitutes the highest order of human genius. His was not the meteoric genius that dazzles only to blind, but the kind which resolves abstrusest problems into simplest elements. No mind was ever better equipped for the peculiar task which engaged it than was his in unfolding the novelty of an untried democracy. The paucity of precedents of that day forced its statesmanship upon its own resources and opened the most inviting field for the philosopher and the metaphysician. The Constitution gave only general principles to be resolved into their constituent parts, each to be applied to existing circumstances. The wisest and most original thinker could only speculate as to the results. It was the period of interpretation, the especial field of the analyst.

The stage setting, actors, the drama itself, conspired to provoke the fullest exercise of Mr. Calhoun's characteristic talents, and he played the rôle of interpreter as no man in our history ever played it save Mr. Webster alone. Mr. Webster did not excel him. Upon the intricate questions of this time, so full of complexities, he brought to bear his great power of simplification, direct thinking, resistless deduction, sustained concentration. In such circumstances his power of reasoning, of breaking the mass of things into self-evident first principles, of bringing order out of chaos, of illuminating for others, with the mighty light of his own intellectuality, the dark and apparent impenetrable, gave him first rank among the master minds of this important epoch.

It was this power of concentration, this ability to see beyond the intervening rubbish the one object for investigation, this almost superhuman directness of perception, that was his greatest strength and yet his greatest weakness. In the telescopic operations of his great mind, the subtle precision of his reasoning, the complete absorption of all his faculties in the subject of immediate investigation, it is said, caused him at times to overlook the present correlated influences or to appreciate their ultimate effect upon the practical results of his final conclusions. Within the limits of his vision he was without peer; but it is asserted that the safety of his leadership and the soundness of his theories were impaired by the narrowness of that vision.

He saw the ship of state swinging down the encliffed channel of the future, saw it with a clearness approaching the supernatural; saw the placid waters upon which it floated; saw the hidden rocks, the dangerous shoals, the roaring cataract; saw them as no other man of his time saw them, and devoted his energies, his wonderful powers, his life itself, to giving her safe voyage. For him the Constitution had marked that channel, for him the Constitution was that ship's compass; beyond that he could not and did not see—the pilotage of none other would he trust. In his own language, "To restrict the powers of this Government within the rigid limits prescribed by the Constitution," this was the chart of his interpretation, the embodiment of his attitude. By this he followed his course, formulated his policies, directed his activities, predicated his prophecies. All other considerations were subservient, to keep "within the rigid limits prescribed by the Constitution," was the supremest thought of his mind, the dearest object of his heart. If to follow the teachings of the fathers is weakness, who but glories in the charge?

"The rigid limits prescribed by the Constitution"—words how full of meaning, how pregnant with the combat of master minds, with history, with destiny itself! They hold the long, illustrious life story of John C. Calhoun. They contain his doctrine of nullification—the word he wished inscribed upon his tomb—they comprise the tragic events of secession; they embody the doctrine of states rights, which yet lives in its virgin strength, shedding its beneficent influences upon the statesmanship of this generation. To him these words meant liberty, union, and the Constitution, one and inseparable, if that might be; but liberty and the Constitution inseparable forever.

To the preservation of these he concentrated his abilities with a devoutness bordering upon fanaticism. Considerations of self were buried in the unflinching struggle. Ambition was sacrificed upon the altar of principle to keep intact and pure these priceless jewels. In the zeal of his guardianship is found explanation for the seeming inconsistencies of his career. Viewed in the light of this indisputable history, the mists of misunderstanding which for two generations have dimmed the splendor of his character begin to roll away and unveil him to us the purest, most unselfish, most devoted patriot.

A course moved by such ends necessarily brought maledictions upon him and necessitated that independence of party trammels which have made those who love a man admire him most. He refused to bow to the caprice of unthinking constituencies, ready at all times to relinquish his commission to those whom he honored to represent. Others might compromise their convictions for the commendation of the hour, others might swerve from the path of duty to avoid its dangers, others might flee from the wrath of public opinion, others might be deaf to the pleadings of the seers, others might quail before the lightning flash of the hastening storm, others might temporize and hesitate, but not this man of rugged courage and iron independence.

> He, like a solid rock by seas inclosed,
> To raging winds and roaring waves exposed,
> From his proud summit looking down disdains
> Their empty menace, and unmoved remains.

[Applause.]

Upon his monument, in historic St. Phillip's churchyard, are engraven the words, "Truth, justice, and the Constitution." Fittingly they comprehend the ideals for which he wrought. In his toilsome pursuit of them, he disdained the allurements of ambition, scorned the groveling practices of smaller men, endured without murmur the darts of misunderstanding, the shafts of misrepresentation, and the malignant arrows of fanatical hate. Unawed and unmoved by the fury of conflicting ideals, unterrified by the menace of lowering clouds, unseduced by the beckoning hand of preferment, he strode forward, sometimes the popular idol, sometimes alone, always self-reliant in the strength of his mighty gianthood—the defender of truth, the champion of justice, the protagonist of a strict and literal interpretation of the Constitution. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Speaker, the occasion which has today brought together this concourse of patriotic citizens is one which has found its precedent in history, from the first gray dawn of civilization down to the present day.

Excavators have discovered on the banks of the Tigris, where they have been buried for ages, slabs of alabaster which exhibit in relief the forms and faces of the men who governed the East in that remote period.

It has been the custom of most nations to erect bronze or marble statues in commemoration of their great men.

There is the fond desire, always in the hearts of the living, to perpetuate the forms of those who have been distinguished in the service of God and man, or of those whose hearts have beat in unison with our own, and we seek to express this desire in the immortality of art.

The great Carolinian, to honor whom we come to-day, sleeps in his own loved Dixie. The stately pines lift their heads proudly around his tomb and whisper to each other the story of his pure and patriotic life. His fame is secure, for it is guarded by his own good works. We know that we can add nothing to that fame, for—

His grandeur he derived from Heaven alone,
For he was great ere fortune made him so;
And strifes, like mists that rise against the sun,
Made him but greater seem—not greater grow.

[Applause.]

But the spontaneous love of southern hearts has placed this statue in the halls which have echoed to the words of his eloquence, because they desire to have their children and their children's children know how South Carolina loves and honors her greatest son—John C. Calhoun. [Applause.]

This is not the hour in which to measure his labors or interpret his ideas. Looking back through the years we realize that his large experience and broad forecast gave him notice of national dangers as the wires of the telegraph flash news of startling import unknown to the slumbering villages through which they pass.

With Calhoun there was never a thought of self. His great heart was filled to overflowing with love of his State, and without hesitation he gave up the second, and surrendered all hope of the first, office in the country to defend South Carolina in her solitary attitude of opposition to protective policy. [Applause.]

The grandeur of his intellect, the purity of his patriotism, and the blamelessness of his life were appreciated fully by his great rivals in the Senate, and his glory only shines the brighter in conjunction with those rivals.

Calhoun, Clay, and Webster—what a triumverate! Everett says:

They can but be named in alphabetical order; what other precedence could be given them? Calhoun, the great thinker; Clay, the great leader; Webster, the great orator.

Distance can not destroy nor time diminish the simple splendor of Calhoun's life. It shines, and is a guidance to admiring posterity.

And now, when the grateful task of placing here this statue is complete, we hand it over as a gift to the Nation.

The stranger approaching this sacred spot shall linger and gaze upon the form of South Carolina's greatest son, and shall realize that he still lives in the hearts of his people and the history of his State. [Applause.]

May this statue stand firmly upon its pedestal as long as the Dome of the Capitol rises in grandeur above it.

May it inspire in youthful hearts the desire to give the best that is in them to the service of their country, even as did John C. Calhoun. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, my friends and colleagues from South Carolina have requested me to present some views on the life and character of John C. Calhoun. I wish their choice had fallen on some abler and less busy member of the Virginia delegation, for Virginia's estimate of the noble South Carolinian deserves a better tribute than I am able to pay in the limited time I have had for preparation, as well as the time that due regard for the proprieties of the situation warrant me in using on this occasion.

In Virginia we regard John C. Calhoun as a grand son of the Old Commonwealth—for his father, of revolutionary fame and achievement, emigrated from Ireland before the revolutionary war, and settled in what is now Wythe County, Va., where he married a lady of the name of Caldwell, the mother of John C. Calhoun, and whose family also came from Ireland. Patrick Calhoun was driven by the Indians from the western part of Virginia. In 1756 he removed to Abbeville District, in South Carolina, where John C. Calhoun was born on the 18th of March, 1782, being the youngest of five children—four sons and one daughter.

He was named for his uncle, Maj. John Caldwell, who was assassinated by the tories in the Revolutionary war. Stories of this Revolutionary hero were told me around the fireside in my childhood, and a graphic recital of his encounter with and slaying a Cherokee chief that came to my notice only two days ago recalled the history of Virginia and South Carolina as taught me by my father about the time of the death of John C. Calhoun. Perhaps of all these who will to-day speak of this patriot and statesman I am the only one who recalls his death and the tribute that was paid to his life and character by Virginia, as well as South Carolina. I shall never forget the comments made by my father and his neighbors, and the tributes the Virginia papers paid to his memory.

None can question the selection by South Carolina of John C. Calhoun to occupy an honored place in the hall of America's most famous men. Calhoun's title to this honor is spread on page after page of the history of his State and the history of this Nation.

In private and in public life, in character, genius, and successful achievement of great tasks he stamped himself a man to be honored and remembered, and South Carolina does well to place his statue here.

His worship of truth, his sincerity, and his sterling integrity were never questioned. No charge of corruption or intrigue ever stained his public life. America claims no statesman whose private life and moral character stands higher; none whose genius and ability can greatly overshadow him. His State may well be proud of him, this Nation may well honor him, and history must justly place him in the front rank of great men of any age or country.

His was a mind combining in rare degree those qualities that constitute an intellect of the highest order. As a logician he has been ranked with Chief Justice Marshall, and, like Marshall, believed that the true art of logic was in rightly stating the first proposition.

No less prominent was his great moral courage, and his perfect reliance on the power of truth, and the capacity of the people to be convinced of it. Often in advance of the times, he suffered in prospects and political honors in defense of opinions that he lived to see successfully adopted by his opponents. Yet never hesitating to avow his opinions, however unpopular at the moment, confidently stating that he never knew the time when the American people could not be made to see the truth.

He was not learned, in the general acceptation of the term, for leisure and opportunity for the details of scholarship were not afforded him. He gathered vast stores of information from every available source, especially from contact and exchange of views with other men.

With true genius he separated the true and the valuable from the false and erroneous. His mind worked with wonderful speed and rare accuracy.

Calhoun richly deserved the tribute of Winthrop, when he said that—

There was an unsullied purity in his private life; there was an inflexible integrity in his public conduct; there was an indescribable fascination in his familiar conversation; there was a condensed energy in his formal discourse; there was a quickness of perception, a vigor of deduction, a directness and devotedness of purpose in all that he said or wrote or did; there was a Roman dignity in his whole Senatorial deportment, which, together, made up a character which can not fail to be contemplated and admired to the latest posterity.

Calhoun as a statesman was unquestionably one of the most brilliant of this country. To devoted patriotism he added sturdy independence, disdaining to calculate the consequences of the faithful discharge of his duty. Fortified by conscious rectitude and purity of motive, he firmly and boldly followed his convictions with an ability, force, and persistence that nothing could withstand. Never timid, never time serving, he vigorously and ably pursued a course purely national, regardless of mere sectional or local interest. Farseeing and sagacious, advocating measures for the good of his country before their necessity was commonly apparent and approved, he constantly sought to lead and mold the public thought, rather than wait to follow it in inglorious safety and popularity. [Applause.]

A devoted worshiper of republican institutions, he aimed to give firmness and durability to our form of government, and to demonstrate to the world its superiority over all other forms of government. An ardent student of its principles, he labored incessantly for means and measures to preserve and perpetuate them. Though an active and conspicuous leader in party excitement and strife, all concur in ascribing to him none but the most patriotic, conscientious, and disinterested motives.

It has been well said that there are two classes of politicians:

The one consists of mere men of precedent, the blind and indiscriminating followers of any path, whether made by folly or wisdom, and whether strewn with ruins or covered with trophies; the other, of mere men of theory, who, regardless of the settled habits of the community, erect in their own minds an ideal phantom of perfection, at whose voracious shrine all existing establishments are offered up, however endeared by habits or consecrated by time.

Between these two extremes stood Calhoun, pursuing that middle course that his own wisdom, profound knowledge, and clear foresight of the needs of his country dictated. To this, in large measure, is due his career of such conspicuous usefulness.

Calhoun was in truth a great American. No one more thoroughly understood those principles of human liberty which it was the mission of our people to spread over a vast continent and in time become an object lesson for the human race. And still he was the southerner, for he understood and appreciated to the full the social organization peculiar to the South.

His love of truth, of freedom, and of his country, coupled with a thorough scorn of everything base and groveling, constituted his ruling passions. In private life he was singularly cheerful, amiable, and fascinating. His friends, his foes, his rivals, the very abolitionists themselves, rendered him tribute and acknowledged his private virtues, his public worth, and his conspicuous ability in every sphere in life.

While some of his political sentiments differed from those of the great and good of the age, he was absolutely sincere, and asserted his beliefs with all the earnestness of an enthusiastic nature. It has often been said that he wished to sever the Union. He loved the Union and strove to preserve it. On this point a contemporary of his said:

> Because he foresaw and frankly said that certain effects must result from certain causes, does this prove that he desired these effects?

In his last speech he spoke of disunion as a "great disaster." While he called on the South for union, he did not fail to warn the North of the danger to the Union arising from their wild and misguided philanthropy, which, in order to sustain abstract principles, loses sight of the welfare and happiness of every class of society.

Calhoun has been accused of inconsistency—that at one time he was for a protective tariff, at another for almost absolute free trade.

In this he was not different from many statesmen of his period. In the early history of this country, when we had few manufacturers, it was necessary to protect our infant industries. During these years Mr. Calhoun was for protection. When the infants were approaching maturity he clearly saw the injustice to his own agricultural section of fostering enterprises that would lay tribute on one section to build up the wealth and industries of another. A writer in the International Magazine of 1843 puts this question of consistency so strongly that I gladly insert, for the observation applies as well to-day as it did over half a century ago:

> Nothing is more inconsistent than to persist in a uniform belief when changing circumstances demands its modification. How absurd to preserve a law which in the progress of society has become null and obsolete; for instance, granting to a criminal "the benefit of clergy."
> Nothing—

Says a distinguished English writer—

> is so revolutionary as to attempt to keep all things fixed, when, by the very laws of nature, all things are perpetually changing. Nothing is more arrogant than for a fallible being to refuse to open his mind to conviction. When Mr. Calhoun altered his opinion, consistency itself required the change.

Mr. Speaker, Calhoun's speech in reply to Webster, delivered in the Senate on the 26th of February, 1833, was never answered. Mr. Webster followed with a few remarks, expressing kind feeling for Mr. Calhoun—for it is well known that their personal relations were most cordial—but he never answered the real questions at issue. Mr. Stephens, in his work, The War Between the States, says:

> This speech of Calhoun was not answered then; it has not been answered since; and, in my judgment, never will be, or can be answered while truth has its legitimate influence and reason controls the judgment of men.

There can be no doubt that this speech modified the views of Mr. Webster, for his subsequent speech before the Supreme Court in 1839, as well as his Capron Springs speech in Virginia in 1851, tend strongly to demonstrate this fact. If this be true, what a tribute to the genius of Calhoun, as well as the intellect and character of Webster. In our schoolboy days we never called the name of one without thinking of the other.

Three public men of that day we were taught to reverence. The great triumvirate we called them—Clay, Webster, Calhoun. We heard their names around the fireside; we listened to extracts from their speeches in the Richmond papers; we listened with intense interest to debates between the old Whig and Democratic parties; we saw old men weep like children when Clay was defeated for the Presidency; we saw the war clouds gather as predicted, and were soon reading of the conflict and victories in Mexico; we read that Calhoun had refused to vote for war and declared "that the President and Congress were behaving in a manner most unconstitutional." He said:

> Every Senator knows that I oppose the war, but none save myself knows the depths of that opposition. For the first time in my public life I can not see the future.

He also added:

> It has closed the first volume of our political history under the Constitution and opened the second, and no mortal can tell what will be written upon it.

It may be said that the second volume of the history of the United States was opened by Mr. Calhoun himself on February 9, 1847, when he presented resolutions covering the whole ground of the slave question with regard to the Territories. To this volume of American history Mr. Calhoun contributed his part ably, earnestly, and eloquently. About this time he uttered a sentiment that recalls the language of Clay when he said, "I had rather be right than President." It was this:

> For many a year, Mr. President, I have aspired to an object higher than the Presidency, and that is to do my duty under all circumstances * * * in reference always to the prosperity of my country.

In this he spoke correctly, for his sense of duty was the staff upon which he leaned as he went down into the shadow. March 4, 1850, Mr. Mason, of Virginia, read for him his last speech. This speech was both pathetic and prophetic. I forbear to quote. The readers of these addresses to-day will do well in some leisure hours to read the closing pages of the second volume of American history and glance the opening of another. There are a few here on both sides of this Chamber who helped to make the history contained in the third volume, but we are too modest to speak of it often, and prefer to keep it for the most part out of the RECORD. On the last day of March, 1850, the news of Calhoun's death spread from one end of the country to the other. His last words were: "The South! The poor South! God knows what will become of her."

Here let me add, by way of parentheses, that I listened only an hour ago in another Chamber to one of the most scholarly addresses I ever heard, where this dying expression of Mr. Calhoun was quoted and beautifully commented on by the speaker, who represented a school of philosophy entirely different from that taught by Mr. Calhoun.

Did his prophetic soul in the very hour of dissolution catch a glimpse of the awful catastrophy that was coming to the land he loved and the homes he cherished? A minor prophet could even then see the cloud no larger than a man's hand, but he could not foresee its momentum and destructive force. It was given to this prince among men to utter a lamentation for his people to which we find no parallel, save in the utterances of Jeremiah when, picturing the condition of his countrymen, he exclaimed in the bitterness of his heart:

> Remember, O Lord, what is come upon us: consider, and behold our reproach. Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens. We are orphans and fatherless, our mothers are as widows. * * * Servants have ruled over us; there is none that doth deliver us out of their hand.

Reasoning from cause to effect, Calhoun's logical and prescient mind caught a glimpse of the future—the man on horseback; shattered and broken Commonwealths; the shock of battle, charge and countercharge; the dead and dying like sheaves of wheat lying on open plains where luxuriant grain had waved in beauty. A land in mourning; orphans crying in the street; widows refusing to be comforted. Suffering sorrow, Death! Hell! All that these suggest of human calamity weighed on the mind and heart of this political prophet as in agony he exclaims, "God knows what will become of her."

And God did know—and has wonderfully ordained—for out of His law of compensation as unfailing as the law of gravitation has come a miracle for the people whom John C. Calhoun loved so well and served so faithfully. Time would fail to tell through what instrumentalities this miracle has been wrought or by what sacrifices the marvelous results have been reached. Enough to say that the citizen soldiery of the South, whose achievements in war will survive in song and story while courage has an altar or virtue a shrine—have shown themselves greater heroes in peace than ever they were in war. To them and their sons must be attributed the wonderful growth and development of the South. True they are failing more rapidly than they fell in battle, and the brave men who met them in deadly conflict and by whose deeds of valor they may well measure their manhood and chivalry are passing at the rate perhaps of 300 each month. These survivors of the mightiest conflict that ever shook a continent have solved many problems that taxed to the uttermost their courage, their patience, and endurance. In time the South will solve others that seem now almost insurmountable. The unseen power invoked in the dying words of John C. Calhoun has furnished a law of compensation—the miracle goes on. The unseen forces are the strongest and most impelling. For all we know the spirit of John C. Calhoun catches a view of a happy land and a prosperous people. And for ourselves fettered in our caskets of clay and hindered by our limitations we can only rejoice, "That beauty has been given for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." [Loud applause.]

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, doubtless many a "mute inglorious Milton" is unknown to fame for lack of an inspiring preceptor. Doctor Waddell and the little school, located years ago in the western portion of Abbeville County, known as Willington Academy, owed their great prominence largely to the fact that John Caldwell Calhoun received there his first scholastic training; but to this great preceptor, it may be truthfully said, Mr. Calhoun owed his all. If this master preceptor had not applied the spark, the fires of genius would most likely never have kindled. The teacher who confines his lessons to the narrow compass of text-books does not understand aright his mission. We ascribe to Doctor Waddell this part in Mr. Calhoun's career for the reason that we assume that the boys who came under his tuition were presumably not far above the average American boy, generally speaking, and yet we find in a long list of those who received their early training from him such other names as James L. Petigru, Judge A. B. Longstreet, George McDuffie, W. H. Crawford, W. D. Martin, Hugh S. Legare, George W. Crawford, D. L. and F. H. Wardlaw, and N. P. and P. M. Butler, all of whom attained great distinction in the service of their State and the Republic.

But the fires kindled in the heart of young Calhoun mounted higher than an academic education, and so, in 1802, he entered Yale College, from which he graduated two years later. He was 20 years of age at the time he entered Yale, having been born in Abbeville County March 18, 1782.

I have the honor to represent that district of South Carolina from which Mr. Calhoun was sent to Congress, taking his seat November 4, 1811. My home in the city of Abbeville is but a few blocks removed from the spot where he began the practice of law shortly after graduation from Litchfield, Conn. I therefore feel it peculiarly incumbent upon me to undertake to portray some of those characteristics which marked him a national and international figure. It is not false modesty to say that the more I have studied his career the less I have felt equal to its proper portrayal.

In the narrow compass of this discourse I shall omit the recital of events of Mr. Calhoun's early life and of his service in the legislature of his native State. These belong to the domain of history and here would be nothing more than cumbering repetition. Nor may I attempt to enter into details in reviewing his service to the Republic, covering, as it does, a period of more than forty years, for the events of his life were not mere contributions to history; they were the wellspring of much of the history of that day, and gave color to all contemporaneous events. Mr. Calhoun made history.

A marked characteristic of Mr. Calhoun's mind was his ability to read the future in the trend of the present. One is impressed with this in reading his speeches in the light of subsequent events. If we may pass any criticism on the quality of his mind, which measured so nearly up to perfection, it would be that he read his duty in the plain letter of reason, without due regard to external circumstances affecting it.

Candor compels the admission that in carrying his theories of government to a perfectly logical conclusion, a conclusion warranted in every detail by the Constitution of the United States, he developed latent forces that with the gathering storm could end only in the separation of North and South. Long before he came into public notice, however, this storm was brewing. Heard first in subdued mutterings, it soon gathered with inky blackness about the national capital. He did not create the storm, but let his real friends not attempt to cover the true events of history; his logical mind, like the electric volt, did part and illumine the riven cloud.

Virginia, Kentucky, and the parties to the Hartford convention had vaguely outlined the right of a State, in the last extremity, to take measures for its own protection; but it was only through the clear irresistible logic of Mr. Calhoun that men realized, however inexpedient or undesirable nullification might be, it was not inconsistent with the strict meaning of the original compact, and the Constitution based thereon. It is perhaps as well that force finally supplied the omissions in that instrument, for after all the people are reunited, and the will of a united people is superior to any written instrument. But Mr. Calhoun must be judged in the light of the written instrument, for sentiment was then about equally divided. The right of a State to nullify an unconstitutional act of Congress was made so plain in his speech on the force bill, which we may remark in passing was his greatest speech, that the North American Review, a strong advocate of the federal doctrine, admitted that "Mr. Calhoun had successfully maintained the point that the Constitution was a compact between the States," which admission conceded the pivotal point of his contentions, after which his other contentions followed in natural and logical sequence. Mr. Webster, under other circumstances had spoken of the union of the States as a compact, of which fact Mr. Calhoun reminded him, in replying to him later.

Mr. Calhoun maintained in this speech and established, in so far as reason alone can establish, that the sovereign States, in their compact for protection and government, were bound to the limit and in the strict terms of the Constitution, as ratified by the States; that the ratification was by the individual of the States and not by the individual of the Union; that the States through the Constitution granted to the Federal Government the right to raise revenue, which was a right conceded; that it also required all taxes to be uniform, which was a right retained. He maintained that the tariff act of 1828 levied the burden mainly on one section and distributed the proceeds mainly in another.

As this violated the reserved rights of the State, under the Constitution, that taxes should be uniform, he believed that it was subject to the State's veto. Just how far Mr. Calhoun looked into the future of the unequal collection and partisan, as well as sectional distribution of government revenue, we can not know. We are rather of the opinion that he was combating the principle, and that he seized upon the tariff act of 1828 as illustrative of the trend of events. Certain it is that the question is still an open one that is no nearer solution by reason of one party domination.

No real student of history would seriously deny that Mr. Calhoun took from the Constitution the fact of nullification and molded it into form. At this distance the error of his method of combating a public evil from the standpoint of expediency and public policy is palpable; his purpose, judged in the light of subsequent extortions from the people, under that doctrine just then taking root, seems to indicate almost prophetic foresight. The doctrine of nullification had its origin in the events following the tariff act of 1828. Then as now, this question was the bone of contention between the two great political parties, Republican (now Democratic) and the Federalists.

In 1816 Mr. Calhoun, though opposed to protective tariff, advocated a protective rate on wool, cotton, and iron, with the avowed purpose of extinguishing a large war debt, incurred in the war of 1812. He has been severely criticised for subsequently taking such strong ground against protective legislation as inconsistent with his former position. An impartial reading of his speech in advocacy of the act of 1816 lends no color to this charge. In this he justified excessive revenue rates on the ground that extraordinary demands were upon the Treasury in consequence of the war, and there was no danger for years of accumulating a surplus in the Treasury. A surplus he dreaded as inviting extravagance and waste. In this same speech he made a masterly argument advocating enlargement and increased efficiency of the navy. He pointed out the futility of this Government attempting to fortify the thousands of miles of its coast, maintaining that with a much less sum the navy could be so strengthened as to be effectual in defense. This, it is true, would have increased the public debt and would have entailed the collection of additional revenues, but the defense of the country by the most practical method was, to his mind, of first importance; even his favorite theories were subordinate to this. While in this speech he deprecated the necessity for the high tariff, he advocated a gradual reduction, in order not to destroy infant industries brought into existence and abnormally flourishing because of the exclusion of foreign goods during the war. While this, too, was contrary to his policy under ordinary circumstances, it goes to show that he was not radical in his views when dealt with fairly. But his plea was for necessary revenue and not protection, then as ever afterwards; his dread was of a surplus taken unlawfully from the pockets of the people, inviting wasteful, if not unlawful, appropriations.

Some have attributed his violent opposition to the tariff of 1828 to personal animosity toward General Jackson, then President. Of this number may be mentioned Mr. Benton, of Missouri. It would be well to remember that Mr. Benton and Mr. Calhoun were not friends, and while the former would not misstate a fact, he would perhaps unduly color a circumstance.

As this is a notable period in the careers of both Mr. Calhoun and President Jackson, it may not be amiss to review some of the facts leading up to their disagreement.

These men, since they were first associated in public life, had been fast friends. It is said that General Jackson's admiration for Mr. Calhoun bordered on idolatry. Mr. Calhoun, after a service of six years in the lower House, which was marked by the leading part he took in reporting the war resolution of 1812, and by other services of like import, had displayed such marked ability that, without his seeking, in December, 1817, even after his reelection to Congress, he was invited by Mr. Monroe, the newly elected President, to take a place in his Cabinet as Secretary of War.

A little digression here will serve to show that his great powers of analysis and generalization, the metaphysical characteristic of his mind, which some are pleased to assert rendered him impractical, were fully equaled by his capacity for business details. When he took charge of the War Department it was in utter confusion. There were outstanding debts of over $40,000,000, in the nature of past-due claims, which he reduced during his administration to less than $3,000,000. After a few months' observation of conditions, he drafted an entirely new set of regulations, reorganizing the entire department.

These regulations were practically unchanged for a quarter of a century. He found the annual cost per man, including officers in the service, more than $451 per annum, and he left the cost less than $287 per annum. When he came into office the annual expenditure on the army was $4,000,000. He reduced this $1,300,000. And yet it is said that the army had never been better provided or paid. There is not an instance on record during his entire public career where he has advocated a parsimonious policy, but he dreaded wastefulness. So perfect was the system devised by him that he was able to report to Congress in 1823 that—> of the entire annual appropriation of money drawn from the Treasury for military service, including pensions amounting to $4,571,961.94, although it passed through the hands of 291 disbursing officers, there has not been a single defalcation nor the loss of a single cent to the Government.

No mere theorist could have wrought such wonderful changes in that disorganized department.

But let us recur to the main point. It happened while Mr. Calhoun held the position of Secretary of War that the Seminole Indians made frequent incursions into the territory of the United States, and General Jackson was sent to drive them into the interior of the Spanish possessions. It seems that the President and Mr. Calhoun had secretly given General Jackson more latitude than they could consistently make public, and acting on this he had gone into the interior of the Spanish possessions and had seized and fortified several Spanish forts, which he claimed had sheltered the enemy. In this it is contended by some that he exceeded even his secret authority, and especially when he executed Arbuthnot and Ambrister, two English subjects. It is stated, it appears on very good authority, that in a Cabinet meeting Mr. Calhoun advised that "he (Jackson) should be punished or reprimanded" for his conduct in this execution.

This circumstance was not known to General Jackson until after Mr. Calhoun had served for one term as Vice-President, himself being President. There was never afterwards any friendship between them; but we can not agree with those who believe that this incident accounts for Mr. Calhoun's opposition to the protective system and the bold stand he ultimately took for states rights. The fact is, it was scarcely possible for a man whose every act found its origin in a logical cause, as was the case with Mr. Calhoun, to long agree with a man whose ideas, however correct, often originated in impulse, however well meant, and were executed with military promptness, as was the case with General Jackson. When President Jackson was elected the second time Mr. Calhoun looked forward to this event for the reduction of duties, and so advised his friends; and it was only after disappointment in this quarter that he advised the nullification proceedings taken by his State.

Mr. Calhoun never indulged in personal invective except in repelling an attack, and then he confined himself strictly to the record, and in language absolutely free of grossness. His attacks were on principles, not men. And while we have the greatest veneration for General Jackson as one of the noblest of South Carolina's sons, in the light of Mr. Calhoun's entire career, which dealt with principles, not men, we can but conclude that his remark in the Cabinet was but the reluctant admission of his sense of right, affecting, as it did, even his friend. No one knows how much the expression was warped or its application changed. It was finally reported by an enemy of Mr. Calhoun.

Whatever may have been the feeling of the President for Mr. Calhoun, it is gratifying that he cherished no unkind feeling for the people of his native State, though arrayed with the Republic against the stand they had taken. Hear just this short extract from his memorable nullification proclamation:

> Fellow-citizens of my native State, let me not only admonish you as the First Magistrate of our common country, not to incur the penalty of its laws, but use the influence that a father would over his children whom he saw rushing to certain ruin.

It must be acknowledged that, entertaining such contrary opinions as to the attitude of the State, his course was moderate. It is well worth remembering, however, that the State of South Carolina had attempted to settle the question at issue in the United States court and had been denied this redress by a resolution of Congress. Force was considered the safer way by the Republic, and so force was threatened. Here was a striking circumstance. South Carolina was at variance with the Republic; she contending for the right of the State to exercise its veto power, to set aside acts of Congress which she conceived to be unconstitutional. This claim was based on the contention that the union of the States was nothing more than a compact, agreed to by the citizens of the States as such, and not as individuals composing the Union; that their allegiance to the Union was binding no further than the rights conceded.

The Federalists contended that the Constitution was adopted by the people as a whole, through the States, and that the individual owed allegiance direct to the Federal Government, not through the States, and that the State had not the right to limit or specify the extent of that allegiance.

There can be little doubt that the question of states' rights was well founded in logic, and that it was set aside by force rather than by regular process through the courts. There is one consolation to the State, however, and that is that the controversy was raised and settled by her own sons.

There are those who, either through perverseness or misinformation, have questioned the fact that General Jackson was a native of South Carolina. For the benefit of such I can not refrain, even at the cost of breaking the connection here of my discourse, from inserting some facts gleaned from history.

Andrew Jackson, sr., was a Scotchman who lived in the north of Ireland. With his wife and two sons, Hugh and Robert, he came direct from Ireland to Charleston, S. C., in 1765. Later he purchased a tract of land about 45 miles above Camden, S. C., which was known as the Waxhaw settlement, and here in South Carolina young Andrew Jackson was born March 15, 1767. It seems that these facts, coupled with his own statement, which has been quoted, should forever set this question at rest.

Mr. Calhoun's speech on the force bill was positively unanswerable. Mr. Webster undertook to reply to it, not by answering the argument, but by asserting a diametrically opposite view, which was at variance with his own opinion, previously expressed, which fact was noted by Mr. Calhoun in his reply. Mr. Calhoun's reply to Mr. Webster was perhaps the most masterful speech of its kind ever delivered in the United States Senate. The contest was a contest of giants. The issue was the burning question of the day.

We have thought that as light appears brighter when enveloped in darkness, so the ability of these men was accentuated by a background of the uneducated masses at that time. In this we were in error. A careful study of their careers leads one to the conclusion that they would tower above the representative men of this Government at any stage of its development. The contest was a contest of the two sections of the United States, about equally divided as to population, and each voicing its sentiment through its ablest representative. Great was the question involved, and equally great the master minds, driven by opposing forces to solve it. It was a test between the broadsword of Richard and the scimiter of Saladin. Of the long career of these two men in the Senate, this was the single occasion recognized as a decisive engagement; and there can be no doubt that Mr. Webster's elegance of diction and force of eloquence, which he possessed as perhaps no other man ever possessed, went down before Mr. Calhoun's power of analysis and his capacity to force a question irresistibly to its logical conclusion. This was admitted by the North American Review, a strong supporter of the federal doctrine, which then as now was ably edited. It was practically admitted by Mr. Webster himself, who, after Mr. Calhoun's speech, "sat in sullen silence," and never attempted to reply. It was on this occasion that John Randolph, a past master in the art of sarcasm and invective, so feeble that he could hardly rise from his seat, said to some one near by: "Take away that hat; I want to see Webster die muscle by muscle."

As no account of Mr. Calhoun's life work would be complete without reference to Mr. Webster, so would it be incomplete without reference to Mr. Clay. Undoubtedly he ranked with the greatest men of the Republic; but just here it is sufficient to say that he possessed more of the elements of the astute reasoner than Mr. Webster and more of the elements of the orator than Mr. Calhoun, with perhaps less stability of purpose than either. He was a powerful speaker, and because of his superior capacity for organization he was perhaps the most formidable of the three as an antagonist.

While Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Webster, and Mr. Clay were seldom all united on public issues, it is a little remarkable, if not amusing, that on a notable occasion the powers of the three were outwitted by a little by-play of politics, linked with "Old Hickory's" never-failing popularity with the people, right or wrong.

Resolutions offered by Mr. Clay had passed the Senate condemning the President for arbitrarily removing the government deposits from the National Bank. Mr. Benton, of Missouri, alone voted against the resolution. On three separate occasions afterwards Mr. Benton undertook to have the Senate expunge the resolution, but it would not hear to the proposition. While Mr. Calhoun never cordially supported the existing banking system, it had the sanction of Congress, and his respect for order and for the Constitution precluded his sanction of the act of President Jackson in arbitrarily removing by force the government deposits. He dreaded the crash in the financial system, but he dreaded more executive usurpation, however well meant. In this view he was cordially supported by both Mr. Clay and Mr. Webster.

Another turn was given to the affair. Friends of the President, knowing his great popularity with the people, had many of the States to instruct their Senators to vote for the expunging resolution. With this number to build on, Mr. Benton, by wining and dining and nursing a few who were weak-kneed, finally got together a majority. At the earliest possible hour it was determined that the work should be done. It was anticipated that a storm would be raised and that the three giants would undertake to speak the resolution to death. Mr. Benton prepared for this exigency. He provided one of the committee rooms with turkey, ham, and other inviting dishes, with plenty to wash them down. They prepared for a siege, and determined not to adjourn until the expunging resolution had passed. As expected, Mr. Webster, Mr. Clay, and Mr. Calhoun all spoke with great feeling of the act that was about to be perpetrated, subordinating the legitimate authority of the Senate to the arbitrary power of the Executive. Mr. Clay's speech was a perfect masterpiece of its kind. But none of this counted against the ham and turkey and the small majority who had sworn to do their work before adjournment.

And so this array of logic, eloquence, and force went down at a late hour of the night before the tactics of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Webster were personal friends throughout their public association, though they were separate "as far as pole from pole" on vital public issues. Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Clay in the beginning were members of the same political party, and while their views were not often seriously divergent on vital public questions, they had personal differences later in life, no doubt growing out of aspirations which each entertained to become President. There are storms in the higher as well as the lower atmospheres. Jealousy is the handmaid of ambition, and it is rare that the mistress enters the human heart alone. "A man's a man for a' that!"

Was it a mere coincidence that these men, each a star of the first magnitude, and each resplendent in his own sphere, should have risen at a critical period of the Republic's history, to light the way for the millions to a full understanding of the antagonistic principles which must eventually disrupt the Government and overturn existing institutions? Here was a colossal scene in drama of the universe. Amid the cold, bleak hills of New England a son was born, the greatest of American orators, and ere long he found his way to the center of the national stage. In his suite were millions of American people, clamoring for centralization of government and executive power. During the same calendar year, in the sunny South, that section which even yet has not felt the congestion of alien blood, another son was born, the greatest of American debaters. A little earlier than the first he found his way to the center of the national stage, and in his suite were millions of American people demanding equality of administration under the Constitution and recognition of the reserved rights of the component States. And, then, from a State divided in sentiment as it was afterwards divided in actual secession, a State which had itself more than hinted at the doctrine of nullification, came a third son, whose position was also near the front and near the footlights. He entered along with the Southerner. As scene followed scene in course, culminating in nullification and the force bill, a crisis was imminent. It was then that the great compromiser stepped between contending forces, and by astute statesmanship forced a truce. By him the climax was changed, but it took no prophet to see that the drama was soon to be rewritten in a nation's blood. The truce could not last. The cause was rooted in antagonistic principles of government, involving the destruction of institutions older than the Constitution itself; they were deeper than the thoughts and intents of men; they were taught in the schools and sanctioned in the church; they were imbibed with the mother's milk; they were in the blood, and could ultimately find settlement only in the shedding of that blood. Men's destinies were involved, but only as so many pawns under the master hand. For explanation of the purpose, the plan, the results, we have learned to look through the vista of marshaled events beyond the creature to the creature's God.

The scene has changed. Southern and northern blood, flowing in a common stream, has washed away forever the system of slavery, a system for which they were equally responsible, but for which only the South has paid, and over its ruins they have builded new systems, displaying industrial development that has astounded the world. But the principles that set in motion this destruction of systems have not changed. They are coterminal with the Government itself; the one tending toward centralization, monopoly, and imperialism; the other toward constitutional government and equality of privilege to the individual citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. Calhoun's last speech in the Senate, which, contrary to his custom, he reduced to writing, and which because of his enfeebled condition was read by a colleague, will be, in the years to come, a beacon light calling all true Americans, without reference to section or party, from their mad lust for power to anchor again in the Constitution.

Mr. Calhoun loved the Union, but he loved a constitutional Union. If there was one feature more pronounced in nullification as a remedial measure than another it was that it was conservative of the Union. His last public utterance looked to the preservation of the Union by amendment to the Constitution and without bloodshed. "His devotion to the South was not sectional so much as it was the natural consequence of his views with reference to the theories of government." His championship of her interests was only for a child's just share of the maternal inheritance, strictly in accordance with the will. Hear this statement, the closing lines of his last speech, to which we have previously referred. Remember that at that very moment the hand of death was upon him; and divested of every earthly consideration, he spoke to his people North and South. He said:

> Having faithfully done my duty to the best of my ability, both to the Union and my section, throughout the whole of this agitation, I shall have the consolation, let what will come, that I am free from all responsibility.

It has perhaps never occurred to the sectional partisan who has attributed traitorous motives to this greatest of American statesmen that a calm, unbiased consideration of his views, and their adoption in good faith by the Republic, might have averted that terrible struggle, involving the loss of countless lives and billions of property. The fact is overlooked that a constitutional union, such as was the dream of Mr. Calhoun's life and to which he looked in every measure that he proposed touching this subject, is the only real union that could give each member of the family an equitable share in the common inheritance. Union and force are not compatible words. Instead of this Government now being a union of States, with each State retaining its proper degree of sovereignty, we are rapidly becoming a Nation with few rights reserved to the States other than such as the Federal Government does not see fit to usurp. At a critical time in our history, when the sober judgment of the masses had not yet given place to passion, there lay before us two ways of finally adjusting our differences. One was through this body and the courts, which would have respected and adjusted property rights and preserved that comity of interest due between sovereign though united States. The other, conceived in mutual jealousies, fanned by hate, could but leave its trail of blood and carnage. To the everlasting credit of Mr. Calhoun be it said that his great heart, filled with aspirations for the young Republic, and constant in devotion to the Union, sought solution in the way of peace. He saw the distant breakers, and had others been as astute the old ship might have been steered around them without loss of rigging or mutiny of her crew.

Mr. Calhoun stood for government in accordance with the Constitution. In this, rather than in centralized wealth or imperialism, he believed reposed our strength and continuous existence. It may be said, and with some color of warrant, that in the early years of his public service he often yielded to what seemed to be for the public good without strict reference to the Constitution; but for the last twenty years of his life his eye was ever on the Constitution, and no scheme, however promising, however enticing, could receive his sanction if, viewed in the light of that instrument, it reflected the slightest shadow.

We may but mention the branches of public service in which Mr. Calhoun's talents were engaged. So prominent and so full of events were his services, in whatever capacity, that we must leave the recital of details largely to history. He served first in the House for six years, then as Secretary of War in the Cabinet of Mr. Monroe. He was elected Vice-President in 1824, and reelected. He was chosen United States Senator in December, 1832, and was reelected to succeed himself. Owing to the death of Mr. Upshur, Secretary of State in President Tyler's administration, Mr. Calhoun was called to that position, which place he filled with eminent ability, being the leading spirit in the annexation of Texas. Shortly after retiring from the office of Secretary of State, he was again elected to the Senate, bringing his great talents into that body just in time to avert war with England and to make possible the peaceable annexation of Oregon in 1846. Here, in the arena best suited to his great talents, he died in his seventieth year, March 31, 1850.

While Mr. Calhoun in the early part of his service belonged to the Republican (Democratic) party, he would not be bound to a party measure which his judgment could not fully accept. In advocating the war of 1812 his course was rather against the policy of his party, but the soundness of his views was afterwards developed. He opposed, almost alone in his party, the embargo, the nonimportation, and nonintercourse acts. Subsequent events justified, beyond question, the logic of his position. He opposed the banking plan of 1814–15, himself suggesting a plan containing many of the features of the present national banking system. He pointed out so clearly the fallacy of the system proposed and the utter folly of the Government borrowing its own credit from the bank that the measure, though a party measure, was defeated. But he was big enough and broad enough to divest a question of its party origin, and without selfish purpose, either for himself or for his locality, to view it with an eye single to the good of the whole people. It is often a dangerous policy for men of less ability to undertake to follow his example. If he was inconsistent in party allegiance, he was rarely inconsistent in party principles.

In personal appearance, Mr. Calhoun was a striking figure. A lady traveling in this country, seeing him for the first time, spoke of him as "the cast-iron man, who seemed never to have been born." No one ever saw him without having the impression that he was possessed of marked ability. His features in repose were irregular, but in debate his animation was such as to throw a light about his countenance. His eyes, a deep blue, large and brilliant, were most striking. In repose they glowed with a steady light, while in action they fairly emitted flashes of fire. If he had been endowed with less integrity of purpose and more policy, he could surely have been President. That great honor we believe he laid down, because he would be the tool of no man and because its acceptance would have sacrificed principles, the establishment of which had consumed the greater part of his life. He possessed pride of character in a marked degree, and if anything, his pride of opinion was even more marked. He was firm and prompt, manly and independent. It may truly be said of him, that however radical he may have considered the views of another, he never attacked them, except in respectful language, and with cold logic. A cause that could not be maintained on this basis could not receive his sanction. At the time of Mr. Calhoun's death, admiration for his great qualities was not confined to the South. The legislatures of New York and Pennsylvania, in solemn assembly, passed resolutions deploring his death. Nor were they alone in this; men everywhere recognized his ability and conceded his honesty of purpose. But cruel war, carrying death into so many homes, left its prejudice in the minds of the people, and those who stood in the forefront of the events leading up to that war were marked for sectional hate. Men forgot the virtues of the great in the passions of the hour.

But may we not call from the past the testimony of his cotemporaries? Can there be any question of the sincerity of Mr. Webster, or of his capacity to judge of his merits, when, after admitting their opposite views on principle, he said:

> Mr. President, he had the basis, the indispensable basis of all high character, and that was unspotted integrity—unimpeached honor and character. If he had aspirations, they were high, honorable, and noble. There was nothing low or meanly selfish that came near the head or the heart of Mr. Calhoun. Firm in his purpose, perfectly patriotic and honest, as I am sure he was, in the principles that he espoused, and in the measures that he defended, aside from that large regard for that species of distinction that conducted him to eminent stations for the benefit of the Republic, I do not believe that he had a selfish motive or a selfish feeling.

Can there be any question of the sincerity of Mr. Clay, who, for personal reasons, had not sustained cordial relations with Mr. Calhoun in the latter part of his life, when he said:

> Sir, he has gone! No more shall we witness from yonder seat the flashes of that keen and penetrating eye of his, darting through this Chamber. No more shall we be thrilled by that torrent of clear, concise, compact logic poured out from lips which, if it did not always carry conviction to our judgment, always commanded our great admiration. Those eyes and those lips are closed forever! And when, Mr. President, will that great vacancy which has been created by the event to which we are now alluding, when will it be filled by an equal amount of ability, patriotism, and devotion to what he conceived to be the best interest of his country?

Undoubtedly Mr. Calhoun was one of the great men of this Republic. But men are judged, unfortunately, by the success or failure of their greatest undertaking. Judged from this point of view, the popular voice is against him. But there is philosophy in that line from Tennyson:

> He makes no friends, who never made a foe.

The two most conspicuous figures—and those who will survive longest in the memory of mankind—of that great contest over the conflicting theories of our Government are John C. Calhoun and Abraham Lincoln. The achievements of Mr. Lincoln are viewed through the glamour of success and the halo of the martyr, while the cause for which Mr. Calhoun labored—the perpetuation of the Union as it came from the hands of the fathers—went down in defeat. Had Lincoln failed, he would have been censured by disinterested nations for the effort to subvert and suppress the constitutional rights of free States by force of arms; censured for invading and undertaking to destroy the property rights of a people in open violation of both the spirit and letter of the Constitution. Success threw a halo about these events, and prosperity smiling upon the stricken land, aided by time, has done much to banish the sense of injuries suffered and to throw the mantle of charity over those scenes.

Notwithstanding defeat and disasters attended upon the work of Calhoun, he continues to be regarded as the Aristotle of American politics; and with the mind of a seer and the heart of a hero, he survives in the respect of his countrymen, wept, honored, and sung. His great compatriot and colaborer, Henry Clay, is immortalized by the sentiment he expressed, that he would rather be right than to be President. Mr. Calhoun was right in principle, and the office of President could have added nothing to his renown.

It can not be that passion and sectional strife will hover even over the grave. When these have vanished and when we view Mr. Calhoun merely as a citizen of our common country, we will learn to appreciate him at his true value and we will inscribe his name on the first page of the book of immortal memories. Nearly all the glory of ancient Greece that has survived "Decay's effacing fingers" may be summed up or narrated in the biography of her great men. The time will come in the history of our own country when our people, without reference to section or party, will cherish the memory of those of our great men who have risen as the tall oak from the level of the forest, and who, while standing more conspicuously in the glow of public life, have likewise borne the greater shock and burden of the storms that swept the young Republic.

Mr. Calhoun never attacked the Union, but, on the contrary, he always defended it. Whether or not his plans of preservation would have solved the problem we do not know. We believe they were founded in a good purpose. Because he pulled the veil of the future farther apart than any man of his time, actually foretelling the fratricidal strife that must follow the then unchanged current of events, some have come to think of him as the author of that struggle. So strikingly have events justified his forebodings that it is not strange that some, like the Israelites of old, have placed the origin of their troubles at the feet of the prophet pronouncing them.

Each setting sun dims the career of that public servant who has used his opportunities only as a means of advancement; but it is only in the afterglow of the centuries that the career of the unselfish patriot and statesman may be justly measured. These develop side lights that the passions of the present shut out. At this distance, Aristides was never greater than when writing his own order of banishment on the voting shell of his fellow-countryman.

If Mr. Calhoun hastened secession, he did it by no inconsistent or unconstitutional course. If he hastened secession, perhaps it was better than that the smoldering fires should have broken in greater fury from being longer pent up. If this Republic was to be convulsed, its domestic systems upturned, and a new and changed order of things inaugurated, some master mind, under the providence of God, had to give definite human shape to the plan of reversal. May he not have been the instrument?

It is a fitting tribute to the memory of that great man that his beloved State has set his statue here, beside those the events of whose lives were interlaced with his. I feel as though we are giving him back to the Republic, after the mist of sectional prejudice has risen. His purity of life, his power and sublimity of thought, must find responsive appreciation in that higher sphere of American thought where the qualities of mind and heart are considered. I can but believe that the day is drawing when the Republic will again take him to her bosom; that she in truth welcomes his statue into the circle of those who in their lives molded and defended her, and who, standing here in enduring marble, will keep their silent vigil over her destinies throughout the coming ages. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, leaders of men are born, and not made; they are, however, developed by circumstances. It is impossible to think of Alexander the Great in any other capacity than as a leader of men. Nor is it conceivable that Hannibal and Napoleon might have been weaklings and followers, not leaders. As this is true of warriors, it is equally true of philosophers and statesmen. In the classic days of Greece and Rome it is said that it was a difficult matter to decide whether to accord more liberal praise and greater honor to her warriors or to her statesmen. In the history of nations we find that some men are indelibly stamped with genius and to a transcendent degree with the attributes of greatness; consequently they rise higher than their fellows, so much higher, in fact, that the number of the company and their competitors is very small. The history of the United States shows no exception to this rule. In the war of the Revolution there is no competitor of the great Washington, and probably the figure that will live longest and possibly in time rank highest; in the second war of independence, that of 1812, is the hero of the battle of New Orleans, Andrew Jackson; in the Mexican war, Winfield Scott, although General Taylor, the conqueror of Santa Anna in the battle of Buena Vista, received his great reward, the Presidency, shortly afterwards; in the war between the States, General Grant on the one side and General Lee on the other; in the war with Spain, Admiral Dewey.

At the beginning of the Revolutionary war this country may be said to have literally teemed with great men—orators, philosophers, and statesmen. I remember, when a boy, reading of the great characters who conducted the Government during that bloody and trying period, what admiration and reverence I felt for those who constituted the Continental Congress. As a man of letters and statesman, Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, easily the first, but along with him a host of others, who, in point of patriotism and ability, were entitled to sit beside him in a congregation of great men. After the war the 13 Colonies found themselves in a most distracted and impoverished condition. The Colonies by cooperation and force of all against Great Britain won, yet in the treaty of peace with the mother country the acknowledgment was made separately for each, and when the war was over we had 13 separate and independent sovereignties of what had been the 13 Colonies, and which by the treaty of peace had been acknowledged as independent sovereign States. It is true there was a nominal coalition between all the Colonies, but the action of the federation was not binding on any of the 13 without the voluntary consent of the individual State. This was followed by an effort to bring about a closer and more perfect union between the States, and resulted in the convention which framed the Constitution in 1787. After its adoption by three-fourths of the States, the young Republic, or "federation," as it was then called by many, claimed for itself a place in the family of nations. For many years, on account of the conditions brought about by the war of the Revolution, the United States found itself beset by difficulties on every hand.

The debts of the State and Nation were enormous, considering the ability to pay. The Constitution was little understood by the average citizen, and the obligations imposed by it were to a large extent little regarded by the people. It has been erroneously asserted so often and for so long a time that John Caldwell Calhoun, of South Carolina, was the author of the doctrine of nullification, which resulted later in the assertion of the right of secession, that to-day this error is a matter of common belief among the people of this country. As a matter of fact, he was not the author of the doctrine of nullification.

From the first there were two parties in this country. While it is true both claimed and practiced allegiance to Washington during the two terms he was President, this homage was personal rather than political. Even in his day the division was sharp between the two parties, and it required all of his great influences to keep the peace even in his official family. Some idea of this can be conjectured by considering how impossible of agreement on practically all great questions there was to be had between Jefferson and Hamilton. The former a Democrat of the strictest school, believing with all his heart in the necessity and justice of a republican form of government with the people the source of all power, and Hamilton believing in reality that a limited monarchy was the best form of government even for this country. The formation of two great parties was not only to be expected, but was a matter of necessity—the one to assert, the other to combat. First, the Federal party in power, with John Adams as second President, elected in 1796. The Federalist party, amongst other laws that were objectionable to the followers of Jefferson and many who were not, passed the alien and sedition laws. The passage of these laws laid the foundation that resulted in events which terminated in the first declaration of the doctrine of nullification of a federal law by a State being advanced, and this as a natural sequence resulted later on in the doctrine of secession being advocated.

On November 16, 1798, the State of Kentucky, through its legislature, on account of opposition to these and other federal laws, passed a resolution signed by the governor and attested by the secretary of state embodying the principles of nullification.

In the Kentucky resolutions of 1798, by Warfield (p. 76), it is declared:

> That whensoever the General Government assumes undelegated powers, its acts are unauthoritative, void, and of no force: That to this compact each State acceded as a State, and is an integral party, its co-States forming as to itself the other party: That the Government created by this compact was not made the exclusive or final judge of the extent of the powers delegated to itself; since that would have made its discretion, and not the Constitution, the measure of its powers; but that as in all cases of compact among parties having no common judge, each party has an equal right to judge for itself, as well of infractions as of the mode and measure of redress.

And in the third resolution (p. 78) it is declared:

> That therefore the act of the Congress of the United States passed on the 14th day of July, 1798, entitled "An act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States," which does abridge the freedom of the press, is not law, but is altogether void and of no effect.

And in the fourth resolution (p. 79) it is declared:

> "An act concerning aliens," which assumes power over alien friends not delegated by the Constitution, is not law, but is altogether void and of no force.

The third of the Virginia resolutions, passed in 1798 (Writings of James Madison, vol. 6, p. 345), is as follows:

> That this assembly doth explicitly and peremptorily declare, that it views the powers of the Federal Government as resulting from the compact to which the States are parties, as limited by the plain sense and intention of the instrument constituting that compact as no further valid than they are authorized by the grants enumerated in that compact; and that in cases of a deliberate, palpable, and dangerous exercise of other powers, not granted by the said compact, the States who are parties thereto have the right and are in duty bound to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil, and for maintaining within their respective limits the authorities, rights, and liberties appertaining to them.

Here are plain declarations that an act of Congress, which assumes power over a subject-matter not delegated to it by the Constitution, is null and void. It was for a long time claimed, and I believe has been finally settled, that Jefferson was the author of the original draft of the Kentucky resolutions, and also that Henry Clay was his willing disciple. These resolutions were transmitted to the various States. In the house of delegates of Virginia these resolutions were the work of James Madison.

Of course it has been denied time and again that the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions form any basis whatever for the doctrine of nullification, afterward set up by Calhoun. The reading of the resolutions, however, show conclusively that these resolutions declare certain acts of Congress null and void.

And in the case of the Virginia resolutions the claim is distinctly made that the States have the right and are in duty bound to interpose for arresting the progress of the evil. Calhoun's view was that one State might interpose for this purpose. The passage of the embargo act and other acts in restraint of commerce, prohibiting foreign shipments during the latter part of Mr. Jefferson's second administration on account of the high-handed and unwarranted acts of Great Britain in seizing our merchantmen and imprisoning American sailors on the high seas, was a very unpopular law in New England. As a result of this, when persons were arrested and tried for a violation of the embargo act in one of the New England States, notwithstanding the fact that the law had been held to be constitutional by a Unied States district court, the plea was made to the juries that the act was unconstitutional, and the defendants were found not guilty on this ground. Here was a practical nullification of an act of Congress in a court of law.

It is a well-known historical fact that during this period, and also during the continuance of the war of 1812, during which time the Hartford convention was held, the doctrine was preached and concurred in by a large number of the Federalist party that the time had come for the separation of New England from the other States. The war of 1812 was very unpopular throughout New England, and separation or secession was largely advocated. In fact the right of a sovereign State to secede was conceded up to 1828 by a majority of the people in this country. It is true that John Quincy Adams did not hold to this view, and it is also true that Andrew Jackson, during his second administration, most emphatically denied that a State had a right to secede from the Union. I have stated these facts in order to show that Calhoun was not the author of the doctrine of nullification. He was never at any time a secessionist, and this leads up to what may be properly termed a historical sketch of his life.

Born March 18, 1782, in Abbeville district, South Carolina. His parents, Patrick and Martha Caldwell Calhoun, were both of Scotch descent. From this fact may be explained his main characteristics—his severity, lack of humor, and rather dogmatic opinions. These characteristics are strikingly illustrated in the later years of his life. The clear, consistent logic by which he arrived at conclusions, and the intensity of convictions with which he supported them, are the main elements which constituted his strength and character of statesmanship.

His early views were no doubt largely influenced by his father, Patrick Calhoun, who was a Whig before and during the Revolution of the most ardent type, and very self-opinionated in his views. His rough frontier life had inculcated in him an unquenchable desire for liberty and a feeling for opposition to anything tending in the least toward curtailing that liberty. It is related of Patrick Calhoun that, some thirty years before his death, the right of himself and neighbors to vote being denied by the low country, he and his neighbors shouldered their rifles and marched to within 23 miles of Charleston, when the right to vote was not only accorded to them, but Patrick Calhoun was elected a member of the colonial legislature, and as such served for thirty years thereafter.

Much of this feeling his son imbibed and retained all through his life. Up to the age of 13, Mr. Calhoun's only education was what he had been able to pick up and to learn from his father and mother. At this time he was placed under the care of his brother-in-law, Doctor Waddell, a Presbyterian minister, who maintained an academy in Columbia County, Ga. Here he remained for a year, when the death of his father took place; and upon the subsequent death of his sister, a few months later, Doctor Waddell discontinued his school, and the boy's education was for the time at an end. His mother brought him back to the plantation in Abbeville district, where he remained for four years engaged in out-of-door pursuits. The time was not lost, however, for he was building up the frame that was to support his massive brain through a long public service. When he was 18 years of age, at the instance of his older brother, James, he again resumed his studies and returned to Doctor Waddell, who reopened his academy.

Here were educated some of the greatest Carolinians of their time, such as George McDuffie, Hugh S. LeGare, and James Louis Petigru. Doctor Waddell was a teacher of most unusual force and ability, and has well been called "Father of classical education in Georgia and the upcountry of South Carolina." The progress made by Mr. Calhoun was so rapid that in two years he entered Yale College and two years later graduated with distinction. After leaving Yale Mr. Calhoun studied law under Judge Gould and Mr. Reeve, two eminent jurists of Litchfield, Conn., and after a year of study returned to South Carolina, where he read law in the office of Mr. Dessausure and was admitted to the bar in 1807. He entered upon a very lucrative practice in Abbeville district, and no doubt his great talents would have attained for him a high degree of distinction, but politics and not the law held for him the only goal worth striving for and he early entered the service of his country.

At a public meeting held in Abbeville district in 1807 Mr. Calhoun was appointed to draw up a set of resolutions condemning the action of the English frigate Leopard in firing on the American frigate Chesapeake, and so well was his work performed that he was asked to address the meeting. He did so with such credit to himself that in the next election he was sent to the state legislature at the head of the ticket. Here his public life begins, and from this time until his death is coincident with the history of his country. He immediately came into public notice by a very able speech which he made against the renomination of George Clinton as the party candidate for Vice-President of the United States. He served with distinction in the general assembly for two sessions, and so highly were his services esteemed that in the election of Members for the Twelfth Congress, in which selection was made chiefly with a view to the approaching war with Great Britain, Mr. Calhoun was demanded as a candidate, and in 1810 was elected and took his seat in the National House of Representatives. The period was one of the most critical in the country's history. War was but a few months off and as yet no one was ready for it. The President was striving strenuously for peace and Congress was a disunited body of factions, each cutting the other's throat and at variance as to what was the proper course to pursue. The chief source of power lay in the House, and here were gathered the greatest minds from all over the country. Henry Clay, at the age of 34, was Speaker of the House, and as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee he appointed Langdon Cheves, of South Carolina, who was only a year older than himself. William Lowndes, also of South Carolina, and at the time only 29 years of age, was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and Calhoun, 29 years old also, was given the second place in the Committee on Foreign Relations.

In 1814 Langdon Cheves became Speaker upon the withdrawal of Clay to go upon his mission abroad, and Calhoun became chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. We can see the preponderance of power which South Carolina wielded at this time in Congress. The voice of no other State in the Union was of greater weight in the counsels of the Nation. In speaking of the able men assembled at this time, Henry Clay, in his eulogy on Calhoun, said:

> In all the Congresses with which I have had any acquaintance since my entry into the Federal Government, in none, in my opinion, has been assembled such a galaxy of eminent and able men as were those Congresses which declared the war and which immediately followed the peace.

Calhoun's first effort in the House was on December 11, 1811, just a month after taking his seat, and whatever fears his friends may have entertained as to how he would bear himself in his new sphere of action, were immediately dispelled. He spoke in defense of the resolutions emanating from his committee by which immediate preparations for war were recommended.

It was the enthusiastic speech of a young man, full of fire and national patriotism, calling his country to arms. His speech was in the nature of a reply to that of the eloquent John Randolph, who had condemned the policy outlined in the resolutions. Mr. Calhoun's maiden effort was enthusiastically received, not only by the House, but by the whole country, and he was immediately brought into prominence. In a House, the leadership of which was vested in the young men, he was at once assigned a place of great prominence. Even at this juncture he was hailed as "one of the master spirits who stamp their names upon the age in which they live."

In the main, Mr. Calhoun was a supporter of the administration. Republican principles were deeply ingrained within him, but he was not bound by any political ties. He relied upon his judgment, and when that differed from the course of his party he always obeyed the dictates of his conscience. He early acquired a reputation for fearlessness and sincerity of conviction that never left him. He was broad in his outlook and always considered the interests of the whole country. In his own words, found in his first speech, he said:

> I am not here to represent my own State alone. I renounce the idea, and I will show by my vote that I contend for the interests of the whole people of this community.

The young men leaders of the House were in favor of the war, and after six months' time, during which the country had sanctioned their policy, they waited upon the President and declared that they were ready for war.

Accordingly on the 1st of June the President sent his war message to Congress. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which Calhoun was temporarily in charge, and on June 3 he reported the recommendation of the committee that war be declared. This famous document was very long and presented one of the strongest cases against Great Britain ever written. A year later, on June 16, 1813, he made a speech in defense of the war measure, which has been pronounced "the strongest defense it ever received." He bitterly denounced the Federalists as being unpatriotic and selfish. It was not their country's welfare they were seeking, he said, but her harm, and he severely criticised them for their attitude in wishing to stop the war. Nevertheless upon occasions when he thought the policy of the Federalists better in other matters he did not hesitate to vote with them. In the matter of the remission of dues on goods imported before the declaration of war he voted with the Federalists and made a strong speech in favor of remitting the dues. The question had become almost one of party importance, but Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Cheves both took the broader view that whatever was against the spirit of the law was wrong, and the confiscation of goods amounting to millions of dollars and the property of a large class of citizens was certainly never intended when the law governing the case was passed. Neither did he think that a compromise should be made and the goods made to become a forced loan to the Government. Either the law should be complied with and the goods confiscated or they should be remitted entire; there could be no middle ground.

The result of his speech in favor of remitting these goods, together with that of his colleague, Mr. Cheves, was sufficient to carry the measure, and the forfeiture was remitted upon condition that the customary war duties on the goods should be paid.

This is only one instance, however, in which Mr. Calhoun showed his courage in adhering to his convictions rather than party ties. He, along with his distinguished colleagues, Mr. Cheves, Mr. Lowndes, and Mr. Clay, advocated an increase in the navy—a policy the soundness of which later generations have approved and followed. This, too, was opposed by the great majority of the Republican party, and it took great courage to vote against that organization at a time when party spirit was at its highest point. This broader view of things and loyalty to his convictions is characteristic of Calhoun throughout, and can be shown in many instances later in his life. His position, too, at this time was almost unparalleled—a young man with almost no legislative experience, he was thrust at the head of the most important committee in the House, and to his judgment were left questions of national scope and importance. It was under circumstances like these that he dared to go contrary to the older leaders of his party, but so well did he support his views and sustain himself that he not only merited nothing of blame, but acquired great honor and reputation from the way in which he discharged his duties.

In two or three other very important measures he differed from the policy of his party and succeeded in carrying out his views. To the restrictive policy of the administration he was violently opposed. Mr. Calhoun saw that the time was ripe for the repeal of the embargo, and accordingly introduced a bill to that effect. This, by reason of his strong arguments supporting it, passed.

At the beginning of the next session, 1814–15, he opposed the bill which his party advocated for the establishment of a national bank. His objection to it was that it was intended only to give aid to the Government through its ability to borrow money, and he also opposed the bill introduced by Daniel Webster as a substitute. Another bill was introduced by the administration, but this, too, failed of passage by the timely arrival of the treaty of peace, on the day of its third reading. Calhoun had been widely criticised for his opposition to the bill, but his wisdom now became apparent, and the country was saved from being committed to a policy ruinous to its interests. At the next session, in recognition of his ability to handle financial affairs, Calhoun was placed at the head of the Committee of the Currency. He now framed and successfully carried through a bank bill which provided for the establishment of a federal bank and regulated the disordered currency.

He was much gratified at the successful outcome of the war, in that he, as much as anyone else in Congress, had been instrumental in precipitating it. The tariff bill of 1816, introduced by Mr. Lowndes, was heartily approved by him, and while he has been credited with its introduction, and even called the author of the "protective system," nothing is further from the truth. He was in full sympathy with it, but was engaged with his own bill on the establishment of a bank, and made only an offhand speech in favor of the new tariff.

He did, however, take an active and prominent part in the effort for construction of a system of roads and canals by the Central Government. This policy was recommended to Congress by Mr. Madison, and in December, 1816, Mr. Calhoun introduced a bill, in which it was provided that the profits of the United States Bank should be devoted to these improvements. This bill was passed by Congress, but was vetoed by the President as being unconstitutional. Mr. Calhoun later changed his views. This was among the last important congressional efforts of Mr. Calhoun. Upon a summary of his work in the House, completed in six short years and at one of the most trying periods of the country's history, we find a summary of it to be: He was highly instrumental in bringing on the war, and in this he was right. Had the Federalists been given free rein the country would have continued to submit to outrages and a feeling of disaffection engendered for a government which so poorly conducted affairs. There might have grown up a party within the Union which would have split the country, and possibly a part of it have proven again the prey of Great Britain. In this policy of the war he was preeminently right. He opposed the embargo, and in this he was right. He established a banking system which rescued the country from ruin and placed financial matters on a firm basis. He advocated a programme of naval extension which later generations have approved and followed. Finally, he proposed the construction by the Government of canals and roads, and in this he permitted an intense nationalism to commit him to a policy which he later repudiated.

So, out of five great measures advocated by Mr. Calhoun, four have proven uncontrovertibly right, although at the time some of these were opposed even by his own party. In this light the work of the young statesman must seem remarkable; such judgment and ability to prosecute his ideas showed, even at this early period, that he was a statesman of broad vision and qualified to exercise a potent influence on the country's history.

The second period of Mr. Calhoun's political activity began in December, 1817, when, upon the organization of his administration, Mr. Monroe offered him the post of Secretary of War. Mr. Calhoun accepted this position much against the wishes of his friends in Congress, who thought his powers legislative rather than executive, and advised him against entering a field of activity in which success seemed so doubtful. The War Department was in the greatest disorder.

Mr. Calhoun's knowledge of military affairs was very limited, and it seemed unlikely that with his inexperience he could bring order out of chaos. Nevertheless he determined to accept the position. So well did he master the difficulties of his new situation that at the end of three months he brought forward a bill, which he himself had drawn up, providing for a complete reorganization of the department, and though the bill had considerable opposition he succeeded in getting it through Congress. He formulated a system by which the department was to be governed by bureaus, and so well did his system work that with changes it has been maintained up to the present day. He aided the President in the selection of heads for each of these bureaus, and further drew up a code of rules for the department which were productive of great efficiency in his subordinates. The unliquidated debts in the War Department when he assumed control amounted to $40,000,000; he reduced them to less than three million in a comparatively short time. The annual expenses of the department he reduced from $4,000,000 to $2,500,000 without reducing the pay of the army or the men or in the matter of supplies. He established an efficient basis for the Military Academy at West Point and secured proper legislation for its enlargement and reorganization. He had made an accurate survey of the frontier, and planned a scheme embracing a line of coast defense, but this plan was thwarted by politicians. Another measure which was inaugurated by Mr. Calhoun, and has since been widely copied, especially by England, is the order which he gave to all surgeons of the United States Army stationed at military posts over the country to report to the department all diseases, their treatment, changes of the temperature, moisture, and winds. The result has been a large collection of very important data regarding this phase of our country's development.

The credit for this very enlightened policy must always go to Mr. Calhoun. So completely and ably did he reorganize his department that General Bernard, who was chief of the board of engineers under Mr. Calhoun and had been on the staff of the great Napoleon, declared that the executive ability of Mr. Calhoun was fully equal to that of his former chieftain. This was a very high compliment to Mr. Calhoun's administration as Secretary of War, and is an indication of the efficiency with which he discharged the duties of the office. It was during his second term of office as Secretary of War that his name was placed in nomination for the Presidency. There were before the people six candidates for the office—Mr. Adams, Mr. William H. Crawford, General Jackson, Mr. Clay, Mr. William Lowndes, and Mr. Calhoun. The rather unusual spectacle was presented of two friends from the same State being placed in nomination and still continuing a very warm friendship. Mr. Lowndes was nominated by the legislature of South Carolina and Mr. Calhoun by his friends in Pennsylvania, neither gentleman being aware of the fact until their nominations had been made. Within a year, in the prime of life and the midst of great usefulness, Mr. Lowndes died, and upon the nomination of General Jackson, Mr. Calhoun, foreseeing that he could not be elected, withdrew his name from the race and permitted himself to be nominated for the Vice-Presidency. He was elected by a very large majority, and on March 4, 1825, took the oath of office as Vice-President along with John Quincy Adams, who had been elected to the first place.

Why Mr. Calhoun permitted himself to be removed from an active participation in events has never been fully determined; possibly because of the proximity of the office to that of President. However, no executive had died during his term of office, and it was always the great desire of Mr. Calhoun's life to become President, and when he saw that the candidates in public life were cutting each others' throats, no doubt he thought more advantage might come from his withdrawal from the arena for a few years. Be that as it may, he accepted the office and his duties as presiding officer of the Senate, which duties, contrary to the custom of the time, he was scrupulous to perform. The principal incident of his term of office was the rather remarkable correspondence which he carried on with the President through the columns of the newspapers. Several Senators were never careful as to the violence of their language in attacking the administration, and as Mr. Calhoun thought it out of his province to call them to order, the President indulged in a series of very bitter denunciations directed against the Vice-President, to which Mr. Calhoun replied with equal vigor. The result was a drawn battle. The Senate passed a rule authorizing the presiding officer to call to order a Senator for words spoken on the floor; thus Mr. Adams gained his point. Nevertheless, the Senate deemed it necessary to make this rule giving the Vice-President the power; so it was evident that the power had not existed prior to the rule, and in this Mr. Calhoun was also justified.

Calhoun was very strongly in favor of the election of General Jackson as Mr. Adams's successor, and was again placed second on the ticket as the party's nominee for Vice-President. His reason for favoring General Jackson was that he believed the general in sympathy with the people of South Carolina (his native State) and the other States who were being ruined by the high protective tariff then in force and were equally desirous of its reduction. The tariff of 1824 was a great advance over that of 1816, which Mr. Calhoun had aided in passing and which was a matter of indifference to the then prosperous people of South Carolina. In 1824, when the tariff bill was passed by Congress, the legislature of South Carolina passed a resolution to the effect that the bill was contrary to the Constitution and an unwarrantable exercise of federal power. The industries of the State were languishing, the income of the State was being each year diminished, and its citizens impoverished. It was impossible that a people should favor a tariff which brought about such conditions. No people ever yet courted economic ruin, and it was to be expected that their representatives would share their feelings.

The products of the Northern States were protected, and those States were growing prosperous under a policy which threatened the ruin of the South. Naturally the South was indignant, and demanded the reduction of a tariff which favored only one section of the country. South Carolina had protested against the tariff of 1824 as injurious to the industries of the State and therefore unconstitutional; but when, in 1827, a still higher tariff was proposed it was felt that something must be done. Up to this time Calhoun had remained somewhat neutral, but now he took his first decisive step and cast in his lot with the antitariff party. Feeling at this time in South Carolina was very intense. Led by Doctor Cooper, president of the South Carolina College, a party was being formed which was strongly antitariff in character. Doctor Cooper was a man of great learning, ability, and influence. He was pronounced by Thomas Jefferson to be the "greatest man in America," and by John Quincy Adams "a learned, ingenious, scientific, and talented madcap." Doctor Cooper addressed an antitariff meeting held in Columbia, and in 1824 wrote a pamphlet in which he said that the action of Congress in passing a tariff act so injurious to a large section of the country was "calculated to bring on the dangerous inquiry," Was the South benefited by being in the Union, which used her only as a tributary to another section of the country? Public sentiment was rapidly crystallizing in South Carolina, and Calhoun was forced by necessity to take a stand upon this issue.

In 1828 the tariff known as the "tariff of abominations" was passed, and feeling in South Carolina was brought to a high pitch. When asked what should be done, Calhoun frankly said that no relief could be expected from Congress. He counseled moderation and placed his hopes in the election of General Jackson, who, he thought, could and would be able to bring about a reduction of duties to a revenue standard. Should this change of administration not give the desired relief, only one course appeared to be open, and that was the interposition by the State of the veto. This, however, was a last resort and to be used only in a case of the greatest emergency. Calhoun had not yet mapped out his programme nor had he come to a conclusion as to the proper method of dealing with this question. When Congress adjourned on May 26, 1828, he returned to his home in Pendleton, where he spent the summer in an exchange of ideas with the leading men of the State. In July he was not a nullifier, but by October he had come to a conclusion. He had worked out his theory and from now on his life was devoted to this single aim—the successful establishment of this theory. Meanwhile the legislature of 1828–29 was about to convene. Propositions to call a state convention were coming thick and fast, and this would mean violent measures, for the action of such a convention could readily be foreseen. As a check to such a movement, the committee on federal relations, led by William C. Preston, who was afterwards a member of the United States Senate, reported a document, which had been obtained from Calhoun. This document contained the theory he had recently worked out as to the nature of the trouble and the remedy that should be applied. It was the great exposition of 1828.

The legislature at once had 5,000 copies printed and distributed and gave to it the title of "The South Carolina Exposition and Protest on the Subject of the Tariff." It became the platform upon which all future action in South Carolina was based, and was to the now distracted State a document almost inspired. From now on Calhoun's position is defined and his purpose fixed. For just a moment let us see what his true sentiments were.

The following statement is given in Jenkin's Life:

First. He believed that the Federal Constitution was a compact adopted and ratified by and between the States in their sovereign capacity as States.

Second. That the General Government contemplated and authorized by this Constitution was the mere agent of the States in the execution of certain delegated powers in regard to the extent of which the States themselves were the final judges.

Third. That when the reserved powers were infringed by the General Government or the delegated powers abused, its principals, the States, possessed the right of state interposition or nullification; otherwise, there would be no remedy for any usurpation of the reserved or abuse of the delegated powers.

Mr. Calhoun's theory as outlined above was based directly upon the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions, although he carried his theory further than these resolutions.

The Kentucky and Virginia resolutions were called forth by the passage through Congress of the obnoxious acts known as the alien and sedition laws. The alien law gave the President power to remove from the country or to imprison any alien he deemed a dangerous or treasonable person, thus conferring upon him despotic power. The sedition law provided that anyone should be imprisoned who should "write, print, utter, or publish" anything detrimental to the Government—either House of Congress or the President. These two remarkable acts appeared to be only the first steps toward a complete centralization of power. It was against such laws as these that the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions were directed. The Virginia resolutions declared that in the States alone lay the right of interference whenever the powers reserved by them were endangered, and that they had the right to maintain "within their respective limits the authorities, rights, and liberties appertaining to them." This stated very clearly the atttude of Virginia on the question, but even more definite were the Kentucky resolutions, as written by Mr. Jefferson.

Such was the text of the Kentucky resolutions as drawn up by Jefferson, and so clearly did they conform to the view later and independently promulgated by Calhoun as to be the basis for his doctrine of nullification. These alone, with the report of Mr. Madison on the Virginia resolutions mentioned above, were taken by the States Rights party as the foundation for their doctrine. Their opponents denied the construction placed upon these documents and also that the Kentucky resolutions emanated from Mr. Jefferson. This last became a point of great importance and was not settled until March 13, 1832, when Mr. Ritchie, the editor of the Richmond Enquirer, published a statement that in some papers of Mr. Jefferson were found two copies of the Kentucky resolutions in his own handwriting, which appeared to be the original draft. Such, then, was the foundation upon which Mr. Calhoun based his theory, and it would seem very difficult of contradiction. The construction he placed upon them was that the Central Government, including Congress, was a creature of the States and the Constitution only a compact between them; that any assumption of powers by Congress which had not been delegated by the States was an infringement of the compact; and the States, being the supreme authors of the compact, were the ones to pass judgment upon the matter.

Nothing in the way of statement could be more explicit, and from this Calhoun derived the authority for his construction of the Constitution. In essence his conviction was this: The Constitution was made for the States, not the States for the Constitution; the Government was made for the people, not the people for the Government. His argument is beautifully clear in all respects. In 1843, about fifteen years after the famous exposition of 1828, in which he laid down the platform for his future conduct, he began to embody his views of government and construction of the Constitution in a treatise to which he gave the name of A Disquisition on Government. Following this, he started A Discourse on the Constitution and Government of the United States, which, however, owing to his death in 1850, was never finished. The underlying principle of the Disquisition on Government is that government by the majority always results "in despotism on the minority unless each class or community in the State has a check upon the acts of the majority."

He says that—

Each, in consequence, has a greater regard for his own safety or happiness than of others; and, where these would come in opposition, is ready to sacrifice the interests of others to his own.

So that it is only in the natural course of events that the party in power would continue a tariff which, though ruinous to the interest of the minority, is beneficial to them. To give some protection to the minority, he considers a check of some sort necessary; and from where can this come but from the States themselves? In this way he justifies nullification, and cites as a precedent the sentiments embodied by Jefferson in the Kentucky resolutions. Such, in brief, is the Calhoun doctrine, to the furtherance of which the great nullifier devoted the remainder of his life.

But to resume the narrative of events: In December, 1829, the first message of President Jackson to Congress gave no hope to the enemies of the tariff in South Carolina; nor did succeeding events give more than a flickering ray of hope, which served only by disappointment to intensify the feeling. The State saw that nothing could be expected by a permanent distribution of the surplus revenue, made possible by a perpetual protective tariff, and this, too, when the only necessity for such a tariff was the selfish interests of the party in power. Therefore the States Rights party in South Carolina determined on action. The election was conducted upon the great issue of whether the States Rights or Union party should obtain the necessary majority in the house. It was required that two-thirds of the members of the legislature must vote for the calling of a convention, and in the election more than this number were returned to the house by the States Rights party. Accordingly a convention of the State was called, which, on November 24, 1832, passed the ordinance of nullification, accompanied by an address to the people of South Carolina and also to their co-States, setting forth the reason for their action.

The time was one of great excitement and the termination of events very uncertain. A vacancy was made in the Senate by the resignation of General Hayne to become governor of South Carolina, and Mr. Calhoun was elected by the legislature to fill that position. His task was one of the greatest difficulty. Deserted by all his former political friends, he and the State of South Carolina stood alone. Surrounded on all sides by enemies, threatened with treason and military subjection by a hostile President, isolated on all sides, he stood to fall or rise with his State. His journey to Washington was one of mingled feelings. Great crowds gathered to see him pass, and when he entered the Senate Chamber it was crowded with curious and eager spectators. Many expected immediate arrest, and all were curious to see how he would conduct himself. He soon fulfilled their expectations by a resolution calling upon the President to lay before the Senate the ordinance of nullification, and in this way the matter was brought under consideration. It was understood by Mr. Calhoun that President Jackson would in two or three days' time send to the Senate a message on the subject, but when Calhoun entered the Chamber the next day and found the Secretary of the Senate reading a communication from the Chief Executive it was a great surprise and found him unprepared. Nevertheless, at its conclusion, he arose, and in a vigorous and very creditable speech replied to the message. The message was referred to the Committee on Judiciary, which soon reported a bill giving the President greatly increased powers as to money and men. It empowered him to employ force in the execution of the tariff law, and was known in history as the force bill. In other words, it brought matters to a crisis. In reply Calhoun offered three resolutions:

1. That the States were parties to the Constitution and the Union as separate sovereignties.

2. That they had delegated certain defined powers and no more to the Federal Government, and when powers not delegated were exercised the acts were null and void, the judges of the infraction being the parties to the compact.

3. That the idea that the people of the United States formed a nation was a present and historical fallacy.

If the Senate had admitted the truth of the resolutions, Calhoun would have made good his justification of nullification. However, the Senate would not consent to a consideration of the resolutions, and after tabling them proceeded to a discussion of the force bill. The debate was well conducted on both sides, but the titanic battle was between Webster and Calhoun. Mr. Calhoun was forced to open up the duel, which he did in an able and masterly manner, avoiding, however, a discussion of anything but the most general principles embodied in the resolutions, in order that he might have an opportunity of replying to Webster. That gentleman followed him in the debate on the force bill, and with characteristic ability went into an investigation of the principles and the Government's foundation, defending his view with consummate skill, and sharply attacking Mr. Calhoun's position. At Mr. Calhoun's request the Senate appointed a day on which he was to reply to Mr. Webster, and accordingly, on February 15, he arose to make the greatest effort of his life. He spoke for two hours, and stream after stream of relentless logic flowed from his lips, perfect in its consistency and logic. He defended his own and his State's positions, and more than fulfilled his friends' highest expectations. The following is a condensed portion of his speech:

South Carolina—

He said—

had not claimed a right to annul the Constitution, nor to resist laws made in pursuance of the Constitution, but those made without its authority. She claimed no right to judge of the delegated powers of the Constitution, but of the powers which were expressly reserved to the respective States. The reservation was against the United States, and extended, of course, to the judiciary, as well as to the other departments of the Government. He defended himself from the charge of having been a protectionist in 1816. The tariff then adopted had been primarily a revenue measure, framed with reference to the need of reducing the public debt.

He goes on to explain the errors of the bill, and asks if by this one act he had forever committed himself to a policy which had been extended into a system of oppression, by which one section of the country was prospering at the expense of another. He continued with an analysis of the tariff, and concluded with an exposition of the Constitution.

The speech will undoubtedly rank as one of the greatest efforts in history, and surpassed any speech previously or subsequently made by Mr. Calhoun.

In the duel of words which followed between Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Webster much eloquence was evinced on both sides. With the clearness of vision and fairness characteristic of the man, Mr. Webster granted that if the Constitution was a compact between the States, then Calhoun's position was proved, and nullification and secession were justified. Consequently, Mr. Calhoun directed all his energies toward establishing the fact, and he was generally conceded to have proved his point. Mr. Randolph, who was present in the Senate Chamber for the last time during this speech, congratulated Mr. Calhoun, and stated that he regarded his arguments as unanswerable.

The force bill passed, but shortly afterwards a compromise tariff bill was introduced by Mr. Clay, which was agreed to by Mr. Calhoun. It surrendered the protective principle and established the ad valorem principle, which was the point of contention with Mr. Calhoun. It provided for a gradual decrease in duties until they should reach the revenue standard, and this also was agreed to by Mr. Calhoun. He recognized the impossibility of suddenly withdrawing protection from industries which had been accustomed to its aid, and, so long as the protective principle was surrendered, was willing that the reduction should be gradual. In South Carolina the compromise act was not popular at first, but when Mr. Calhoun arrived and advised the legislature all opposition was withdrawn. This ended the memorable nullification controversy in South Carolina. It had, from the standpoint of Mr. Calhoun and his followers, been a success. The principle for which they contended had been established, though gradually; the State had emerged from the contest with honor unimpaired and Mr. Calhoun himself with glory beyond any he had ever known before.

We now enter upon the third and last period of his career. Through his connection with the nullification controversy he was to become the leader of the entire South. Nullification had not actually been carried through, but by a threat of it Congress had been forced to alter the tariff in accordance with one State's wishes and a precedent had been established. Henceforth nullification was to be absorbed into the larger doctrine of state sovereignty, popularly called "states rights," from which it had emanated, and of this party Calhoun was to become the undisputed leader. His standing, both as to purity of motives and ability, was higher than it had been at any previous time and the work he had done was a great one for the South. The effect of South Carolina's stand was to be of great benefit to the country. Had the revenue been allowed to flow into the Treasury in such a great stream power must eventually have been centralized at Washington. Thus South Carolina's act assumed patriotic proportions in the eye of the country, as it had always done in the State, and the prestige of Calhoun was consequently increased. His first work in the Senate after the passing of the storm of nullification was the part he took in censuring President Jackson for removing the Government's deposits from the Bank of the United States to a number of state banks. This measure was regarded as a high-handed measure by the entire Senate, and even the friends of the administration tried to justify it only on the strength of its expediency. Calhoun's knowledge of financial affairs was very clear, owing to the careful study he had made during his service in the House twenty years before; his remarks were listened to with great respect. He predicted the panic which followed a few years later. He advocated a complete separation of the Government from the banks and approved of the Independent Treasury bill. This bill was not passed, but it was the forerunner of the system later adopted. Mr. Calhoun voted for the bill introduced by Mr. Webster to recharter the United States Bank for six years, although it lacked much of meeting with his approval. Much of this period was devoted to a controversy with General Jackson, and the fight was waged with great bitterness on both sides. His relations with the President had long since ceased to be friendly, and when he voted for the resolution of Mr. Clay, censuring the President for misconduct in regard to the banks, the duel was opened. He made a number of withering speeches upon the course pursued by the President, and in this connection denounced the spoils system he had inaugurated.

This system of the President had no support in Congress, and when Calhoun moved the appointment of a committee of Senators to inquire into the extent of the executive power and devise a method of reducing it, it met with no opposition. Mr. Calhoun himself was made chairman of this committee, and the report was so heartily approved by the Senate that 10,000 copies were ordered printed for distribution throughout the country. Calhoun's course of action in regard to Jackson was enthusiastically received in the city of Washington, and he was strongly supported by public opinion in his debate with Mr. Benton. The latter violently attacked Calhoun, who had severely arraigned the spoils system of the administration. The debate was conducted by Calhoun with great dignity, and in the outcome he was easily victorious.

The next great question which occupied the attention of Mr. Calhoun was the reception of the abolition petitions. Societies had been formed throughout the Northern and Central States, praying, through their Representatives, for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. It threatened the security and peace of all the slave-holding States, and Mr. Calhoun regarded it as an attack on one of the outposts of slavery which must by all means be repulsed. Accordingly, on the 12th of April, 1836, he made a forceful speech declaring that the petitions should not even be received. Congress, however, decided that such a course of action would appear to be a denial of the right of petition by the people and favored the reception of the petitions. Mr. Calhoun made another speech, and so convincing were his arguments that the petitions, after having been received, were laid on the table.

Shortly afterwards, in 1837, as Mr. Calhoun had foreseen and predicted, came the great crash, flooding the country with financial ruin. Mr. Van Buren, the President, recommended a complete separation of the Government from the banks, and in this policy was supported by Mr. Calhoun. He advocated his views in a strong speech made on the 3d day of October, at the special session called to consider the financial status of the country. It was not until late in July that a satisfactory bill passed both House and Senate and, after receiving the President's signature, became a law. The Independent Treasury bill, as it was called, received the hearty support of Mr. Calhoun, and for this course of action he was greatly criticised. What he did was entirely consistent with his former course of action, for he had always emphatically declared that he was the partisan of no class or party. Whatever he saw was for the best interest of the country he supported, and he had pursued this course; hence when attacked for having gone over to the administrative party he indignantly denied the ground for such an attack. Of the criticisms of the press he took no notice, but when called to account by Mr. Clay on the floor of the Senate, he replied in a speech which, for eloquence, has never been surpassed in that body. His words bore a striking resemblance to the De Corona of Demosthenes, and were in much the same strain. He denied the charge that he had been unfaithful to his party; he had given no organization his allegiance, and therefore he could desert none.

> What the motive was for his change of views, he was willing for time to disclose. The imputation sinks to the earth with the groundless charge on which it rests. I stamp it with scorn in the dust. I pick up the dart, which fell harmless at my feet. I hurl it back. What the Senator charges me with unjustly, he has actually done. He went over on a memorable occasion, and did not leave it to time to disclose his motive.

This last shot drove home, for he was alluding to Mr. Clay's action in 1825 in connection with the election of Mr. Adams and his acceptance of the office of Secretary of State. The speech continued in this vein of fiery eloquence, and completely justified Mr. Calhoun's conduct. He refuted Mr. Clay's charge, and clearly defined his own position with a manner so impassioned and effective as to leave his listeners spellbound.

Against one party in particular was Mr. Calhoun's wrath aroused—the Abolitionists. He believed them capable of more mischief and of more dangerous tendencies than any other sect in the country. At the session of 1837–38 he offered a set of resolutions on the subject of abolitionism, and followed them up by a series of speeches defining his position on the slavery question. Possibly it would be well to give a few leading principles of Mr. Calhoun's belief, as he has been greatly misrepresented. He viewed it as a political institution, whose existence began before the Constitution was formed and was recognized in that document. The framers of the Constitution considered slaves as property, and acknowledged the right of ownership of them. Consequently, under rights of property, the States were bound by a pledge to abstain from all interference, and that in the District of Columbia and States not excluded by the Missouri Compromise, being the common property of all the States, the owner of slaves was entitled to the safe protection of his property should he emigrate there with his slaves, that is, on common soil; also the rights of property should be protected. Slavery was defended in the South on account of existing conditions. Where the races, almost equal in number, existed side by side, one must always be subject to the other. Besides, of what value, he asks, were political rights when they were exercised, as he saw, in the case of thousands of voters in the North, who were under the domination of powerful monopolies, and were forced to vote according to dictation? Mr. Calhoun was active on all important questions coming before the Senate, and took a prominent part in all debates, making several very noteworthy speeches.

In March, 1843, Mr. Calhoun resigned his place in the Senate and retired to his estate at Fort Hill, in the neighborhood of Pendleton Court House. His private affairs had suffered greatly from his protracted absence in Washington, and he was forced to give them his attention.

It was impossible for him, however, to long refrain from active participation in affairs, so when, in February of the next year, the President offered him the position of Secretary of State, made vacant by the death of William Upshur, he again entered the arena. During his term of office he was instrumental in securing the annexation of Texas as an integral part of the Union. In fact, he was the most powerful agent in securing this important measure. Upon the election of Mr. Polk he resigned his position in the Cabinet, as he was not in entire accord with the administration's views in regard to the Oregon difficulty. He was offered the mission to England by Mr. Polk, but this he declined and again retired to private life. Here, at Fort Hill, he enjoyed a short rest and devoted himself to the work he was writing on political economy. It has been said that if Calhoun had devoted his life to authorship, he would have been one of the most original and philosophical writers this country has ever produced. To show the esteem in which he was held, in 1845, when he made a journey to Memphis to the convention for the purpose of considering the development of the natural resources of the South and West, his progress was made an occasion for ovations along his entire route, and his reception, even in Jackson's own country, were equal to the earlier demonstrations in honor of the old general.

He was not, however, to be allowed to remain in private life. His friends thought his presence in Washington necessary; accordingly, upon the resignation of Judge Huger from the Senate, he again entered that august body, in whose service he was destined to die. He was immediately plunged into questions of the greatest moment. Polk seemed to desire a war with Mexico and was intent upon precipitating it. At the same time he laid claim to "all Oregon" and forced on the country a most alarming situation. We could ill afford a war with England, and never with England and Mexico combined. Accordingly, it was left to the Senate to extricate the country from this dilemma, and Calhoun was pushed to the front. He offered resolutions to the effect that contradictory claims to the territory might be settled by treaty. Thus, by a policy of "wise and masterly inactivity," he sought to delay events until the outcome of the struggle with Mexico could be seen. Never since the days of his early career, before his advocation of nullification, had Mr. Calhoun enjoyed a national reputation so great or his views held in such reverence.

He was the preeminent statesman of the day, and to him the Nation looked for deliverance from her difficulties. The British minister offered to make the forty-ninth parallel the boundary of the disputed territory, and the compromise was accepted by the Senate, which had been left solely in charge of the treaty. On March 16, 1846, Calhoun made his great speech on the treaty, and recommended its acceptance. The Senate was crowded, and the Senators listened eagerly as the great statesman spoke his message. The speech advised compromise, and the advice was followed. The forty-ninth degree of latitude was accepted as the northwest boundary of the disputed Oregon Territory, and the cry of "54, 40, or fight" was at an end.

Its termination was most fortunate for this country, for five days after the negotiations were concluded hostilities broke out with Mexico, and this would have given a different turn to the situation. Mr. Calhoun was opposed to the war with Mexico, and if he had been given a chance, might have prevented it. He was overwhelmed, however, by popular feeling, and the war went forward. Had he followed the advice of his friends, and only acquiesced in the course events were taking, he would have remained the foremost man in the United States, and perhaps triumphantly ridden into the presidency. Such a thing, however, was foreign to his nature, for he could never sacrifice his convictions of what seemed to him to be right. By this act he threw away his great chance to satisfy his life's ambition, and the fact must always remain a monument to him, greater than the office could ever have been.

Soon the results of the war, which Calhoun had seen to be fatal to the South, were apparent. A great territory was wrested from Mexico, and it was believed that the administration favored the annexation of the whole country. In January, 1848, Calhoun made a speech, which he thought put an end to this idea, but the fact remained that much territory had been acquired, and some disposition had to be made of it as regards slavery.

Accordingly, the Wilmot proviso was introduced on February 19, 1847, by the party in power, providing that no slavery should exist in the territory recently acquired from Mexico. This was what Calhoun had foreseen, and he opposed it with all his might. He offered a set of resolutions, which provided that Congress had no right to legislate to the discrimination of any of the States of the Union, or to deprive any citizen emigrating to the new States of the right of property, or to dispose of conditions before the States in question should be admitted to the Union and given a voice in the matter. He spoke in defense of his resolution, and gave the position of his whole career in a few brief sentences. The free States already had a majority of votes in the electoral college, there was a majority in the House, and the Senate was evenly divided. Should more States be formed from time to time, and all of them free, then the balance of power would be on the side of the free States. Could they be intrusted to safeguard the rights of the slave States, who were in the minority? Certainly not, and a course would be followed that would be ruinous to the slave States. Eventually, then, in the nature of things, the South would withdraw from a union of so little advantage to her. Sentiment never yet bound together a nation. There must be advantages accruing to both sections or civil war would come. This was Calhoun's great life work—to prevent the disruption of the States and to preserve the Union. To do this he contended the balance of power must be preserved. Slavery, as an institution of the South, and a form of property guaranteed by the Constitution, must be upheld or it would prove the rock on which the Union would split. The last years of his life were spent in preaching this doctrine. He was the almost undisputed leader of the South, and to him every man of his party came for instructions as to a great master. His great life work was to lead his people past the impending doom that threatened them and to preserve an unbroken Union just in its recognition of the rights of all sections, with "equal rights to all and special privileges to none." His health was fast failing, and it was evident that the great statesman could last only a little longer.

In January, 1850, he fell ill with pneumonia, and grew steadily worse. On February 18 he was in his place once more, but after that was confined to his rooms. His one desire was to go back into the Senate if for only an hour. He had one last speech to deliver, the great message of his life, and he could not die with it left unsaid. Accordingly, on the 4th of March, he was in the Chamber, though so ill that he was obliged to act on his friends' advice and to give his speech to his friend, James M. Mason, of Virginia, to read. As the voice of the Virginia orator rang out over the Senate Chamber, Calhoun sat with features as of a stone image, his eyes shining with the intensity of his purpose.

It was his last great message to the country, and was awe-inspiring in the accuracy with which it foretold future events. It has been pronounced by eminent critics, and of a disposition unfavorable to Calhoun, as the most important speech made before the war by any southern leader in its power to mold public sentiment.

He began by reiterating the doctrine that he had preached all his life, the Union must be preserved, and to save it, agitation of the slavery question must cease. The South must be allowed her rights of property, guaranteed under the Constitution, or the question will end in disunion. The equilibrium of power between the sections must be preserved and the South given an equal share in the voice of the Government. If the Union is to be preserved, the South must be conceded an equal share in the recently acquired territory, the agitation of the slave question must stop, and an amendment made to the Constitution establishing again the balance of power. If the North intended to do this, let her say so. If not, let the States depart in peace. He ended by a last statement of his position: He had striven always to stop the agitation of slavery and save the Union; if this should be impossible then his efforts would be to save the South, where he lived, and upon whose side was justice and the Constitution.

Such was the last great speech of the great leader. He spoke once more in the Senate, on the 7th of March, in reply to Webster, who declared that the Union could not be destroyed. Calhoun answered that it could, and by "great moral causes." This was his last appearance. He was confined to his room by a cough and by racking pains, and with his body growing weaker every day.

Not so his mind, for he was in the full possession of all his mental faculties, and his massive brain was as vigorous as ever. He busied himself to the last with public affairs and his papers. He believed that the South and the Union were doomed for destruction unless he saved them, and he clung desperately to every moment in which he could work for their salvation. During his last days he dictated to his secretary a set of resolutions, which he intended introducing to the Senate as the ultimatum of the South. They recited that the Southern States could not lawfully be deprived of equal rights in the territory acquired from Mexico or from any other source; that the people of a Territory had no right to form a constitution and a State without the permission of Congress, and the action of California was consequently void; that Congress had no right to give validity to California's constitution; that the Wilmot proviso was an attempt to deprive the South of its rights by a palpably unconstitutional method, and that the time had arrived when the Southern States owed it to themselves and the other States of the Union to settle forever the question at issue between them.

These resolutions were merely the summing up of Calhoun's views on the whole matter. When he had finished their dictation he wished for "one time more to speak in the Senate. I can do more than on any past occasion in my life." Still, in dying, his last thought was to save the Union and how to do it. He never wished for secession so long as there was any way to prevent it. To the last his mind wrestled with the problem. As has been said: "It was a Senator rather than a man who was dying." His thoughts were concentrated on the country to the last, and with his mind still on the problem he passed from the sphere of earthly action into eternity. On the morning of the 31st of March, 1850, the great statesman breathed his last, and the long battle was ended.

Of his private life it is unnecessary to speak other than to say that it was pure and blameless. He spent forty years in the public service—as a member of the general assembly of South Carolina; three times elected to Congress; for eight years Secretary of War; twice elected Vice-President of the United States, in 1824 and 1828; United States Senator; Secretary of State in Tyler's Cabinet; and after that United States Senator until the time of his death. During these four decades in public service, faithful to every trust, patriotic in every fiber of his being, devoted to the Union, but believing with all his heart that its perpetuation depended upon preserving to the States their rights under the Constitution. A philosopher and statesman of the highest order, orator, and author, he served the Nation and his State faithfully and well. No man has ever been so honored by South Carolina as was John Caldwell Calhoun, the State's greatest and most gifted son. From 1832 to the time of his death the people of South Carolina received his counsel and followed his lead implicitly. As true as they were to him, he was to them and to their best interest as he saw it.

When he passed away at half-past 7 o'clock Sabbath morning, March 31, 1850, the highest honors were paid him at the Capitol of the Nation, and throughout the country there was genuine and sincere regret that one who was most worthy to sit in the seats of the mighty was no more. But it was reserved for the people of his native State, without any division, to do honor to his memory as befit those who loved him with a sincere devotion and whose political idol he was.

These honors did not cease when his body was consigned to the tomb. The women of South Carolina, whose virtue and patriotism has ever been the chief glory of the State, undertook the work of erecting to him a monument in granite and marble that would bespeak in some measure South Carolina's appreciation and pride in her favorite son. On the 26th of April, 1887, the Calhoun monument was unveiled at Charleston, S. C., in the presence of patriotic thousands and hundreds of distinguished citizens from all over the country. The monument stands more than 50 feet high, and cost $60,000. The oration was delivered by that prince of orators, L. Q. C. Lamar. Nearly sixty years have elapsed since the death of the great states rights champion. In this period have occurred events of the first moment and involving the very existence of the Nation. The civil war occurred, as Calhoun predicted might be; the slaves were freed, given the franchise, and in the South placed in political power, as Calhoun had predicted as one of the possibilities of the future. This, however, was for only a comparatively short period of time, and the South did not drop to the level of Haiti or San Domingo, as Calhoun had intimated might be the case. The civil war is a matter of history. One of its results was to forever set at rest the questions nullification and secession, and the establishment for all time of the doctrine that the Union is indivisible and indestructible. The bitter and sectional passions engendered by the war have almost entirely passed away. The man who in either branch of the American Congress to-day would undertake to make a violent, abusive, and sectional speech would find himself solitary and alone engaged in a vain effort to revive issues which have been finally buried. The time is and will be when the American people throughout this country will look upon the participants in that great struggle—North and South—with a common pride that can only be likened to and compared with the pride felt by the English people for all those who participated in the war between the House of York and the House of Lancaster, commonly called the "war of the roses." A nation can not be great unless patriotism abounds and a common sympathy binds all the people together. The war with Spain demonstrates conclusively that in none of these essentials of greatness is the United States wanting.

The statue of John Caldwell Calhoun stands in Statuary Hall, the old Hall of Representatives, the scene of his first efforts and labors in the service of the Nation, placed there by the State of South Carolina, and none more worthy than he to be so honored. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following personal requests.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOEHNE, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. AUSTIN, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ELVINS, for two weeks, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, March 14.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Smiths Creek, North Carolina (H. Doc. No. 774)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Charles C. Baumann against the United States (H. Doc. No. 775)—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. STEENERSON, from the Committee on Militia, to which was referred House bill 21829, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 22846) to further amend the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1903, accompanied by a report (No. 741), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21219) to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the eastern division of the eastern judicial district of Missouri at the city of Rolla, in said district, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 742), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. GOEBEL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17164) to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts of the southern district of Ohio at the city of Portsmouth, in said district, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 743), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 22369) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Liberty Bridge Company," approved March 2, 1907, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 744), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KENDALL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3983) to amend the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," and all amendments thereto, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 745), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 22837) to provide for the erection of a public building at La Junta, in the State of Colorado—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22838) to provide for the purchase of a public building site at La Junta, in the State of Colorado—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 22839) to provide for the payment of expenses involved by the participation of the militia in joint maneuvers with the Regular Army during the season of 1908—to the Committee on Militia.

By Mr. CREAGER: A bill (H. R. 22840) to confer certain jurisdiction upon the probate courts in Oklahoma in certain matters—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 22841) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands," approved June 17, 1902—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

EXTENSION OF PARCEL POST.

Mr. JONES. I present a communication from the Postmaster-General addressed to John M. Stahl, secretary, National Agricultural Press League, relative to the extension of the parcel post. I ask that the communication be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1908.

MY DEAR SIR: In response to the request contained in your letter, I take great pleasure in stating the department's position with respect to the extension of the parcel post. There can be no question as to the desirability of telling all the people precisely what is contemplated, so that they may act according to their best judgment.

The present general parcel-post rate is 16 cents a pound for people in our own country, the limit of weight being 4 pounds; while the rate from the United States to 29 foreign countries is 12 cents a pound and the limit of weight to 24 of these countries is 11 pounds. In order to have the rate consistent and equitable the department has recommended that on packages for delivery in this country it shall be the same as on those sent abroad, namely, 12 cents a pound, a reduction of 4 cents, and the weight limit 11 pounds, an increase of 7 pounds; for 1 ounce, 1 cent; over 1 ounce and not exceeding 3 ounces, 2 cents; over 3 and not exceeding 4 ounces, 3 cents; over 4 and not exceeding 5 ounces, 4 cents; over 5 and not exceeding 6 ounces, 5 cents; over 6 and not exceeding 8 ounces, 6 cents; over 8 and not exceeding 12 ounces, 9 cents; over 12 ounces and not exceeding 1 pound, 12 cents.

In my annual report I also recommended a local parcel post on rural routes, at the rate of 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound or fractional part of an additional pound up to 11 pounds; for 2 ounces or less, 1 cent; over 2 and up to 4 ounces, 2 cents; over 4 and up to 8 ounces, 3 cents; over 8 and up to 12 ounces, 4 cents; over 12 ounces and up to 1 pound, 5 cents. The object of this recommendation is to enable the local merchants to hold and increase their trade on the rural routes, to give to the farmers and patrons of these routes the accommodations which the machinery of the rural service, utilized to a greater extent than at present, will permit.

It is the intention to frame a bill in such form that parcels carried at this special rate will be limited to those received upon a rural route or at the distributing post-office thereof, and delivered by rural carriers upon the same rural route or another emanating from the said distributing post-office. According to the department's proposition a mail-order house shipping goods by freight will not be permitted to distribute them by the special-parcel post on rural routes.

It is possible to offer this low rate for a special local rural-parcel post for the reason that, there being no railroad transportation, its operation would involve no additional expense. The necessary machinery is already in existence. There are 38,215 rural routes in operation, supplying about 15,000,000 of people, and even at the rate proposed it would require only three packages of the maximum weight to be taken out each trip over these routes in order to wipe out the deficit of the postal service. The increased cancellations would raise the salary of postmasters of the fourth class, and the establishment of this service would finally be instrumental in making the rural routes self-sustaining. The rural service will, in all probability, cost the Government this year $34,000,000, an increase of $10,000,000 over last year, and yet the benefits derived therefrom can not be measured in dollars and cents. A local parcel post on these rural routes would be of incalculable benefit to the patrons of the routes, as well as to the local merchants. It would tend in time to bring about the improvement of the roads throughout the country, thus adding to the valuation of the farms, with increased accommodations afforded by the service, and better roads.

The statement has been made that this special rate on rural routes would be the entering wedge for similar rates on the general parcel post. That is impossible, for in the case of the general parcel post transportation by railroads is a factor—about $45,000,000 were paid last year for mail transportation and $6,000,000 for postal cars—which adds very largely to the cost of the service, while there would be no railroad charges or other additional expenses connected with the local rural parcel post, as the rural delivery is already thoroughly equipped and in operation.

In some quarters it has been claimed that the large mail-order houses would, under the proposed law, utilize the special parcel post on rural routes through agents. Mention has already been made of the intention to recommend a provision which will prevent such use of the routes. It should also be borne in mind that even in the absence of such a prohibition any systematic attempt upon the part of a mail-order house to thus deliver its wares would necessitate the employment of many thousands of local representatives. Their catalogues show pretty plainly that they attribute a large measure of their success to their remarkable low selling expense, and that the absence of any sort of agents is the principal feature of their argument in accounting for the supposedly low prices of their goods.

Assuring you of my appreciation of your interest, believe me,

Respectfully,

GEORGE V. L. MEYER.

JOHN M. STAHL, Esq.,
Secretary National Agricultural Press League,
Care of Farmer's Call, Quincy, Ill.

Mr. CRAWFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 500) for the relief of George Q. Allen, submitted an adverse report (No. 393) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18166) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and state government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and state government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, to report it favorably, with an amendment. The amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to substitute therefor a full bill as to both Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2515) to pay damages and losses sustained by certain citizens of the United States on account of the naval operations in and about the town of Apia, in the Samoan Islands, by the United States and Great Britain, in March, April, and May, 1899, submitted a report (No. 394), accompanied by a bill (S. 7158), authorizing and directing the Department of State to ascertain and report to Congress damages and losses sustained by certain citizens of the United States on account of the naval operations in and about the town of Apia, in the Samoan Islands, by the United States and Great Britain, in March, April, and May, 1899, which was read twice by its title, and the bill (S. 2515) was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6910) to provide for the extension of Reno road, in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 395) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6630) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902, submitted an adverse report (No. 396) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2319) for the relief of Bernard W. Murray, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 399) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6693) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 400) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4490) providing for the taxation of the lands of the Omaha Indians in Nebraska, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 397) thereon.

WASHINGTON GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. BROWN. I am directed by the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia, to whom was referred Senate resolution 172, authorizing the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia to investigate into the affairs of the Washington Gas-Light Company and to report the facts to the Senate, to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 398) thereon.

I ask to have the resolution printed and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I give notice that I shall move to refer that matter to the Committee on the District of Columbia. This is the first time during my nineteen years' experience here that the jurisdiction of that committee has been invaded by a minority committee of the Senate. I do not know that I care to make the motion now if the matter is to go over until to-morrow, which I think it will under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It must necessarily under the rule go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not wish to have the resolution referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I think I will now make a motion to refer the matter to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that the resolution as proposed to be amended be printed, together with the report, and that it go over until to-morrow pending the motion to refer.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that course, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the resolution and the report will be printed under the rule without any action of the Senate. It will go over until to-morrow.

CENSUS ENUMERATION OF FOREIGN-BORN PERSONS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am directed by the Committee on the Census, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7093) amendatory of the act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, to report it back favorably, and I submit a report (No. 387) thereon.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has just been reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill has not been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has not yet been read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved July 2, 1909, entitled "An act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses," be, and the same is hereby, amended by the insertion in section 8, paragraph 1, line 4, after the word "color," of the words "nationality or mother tongue," so that the paragraph will read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the Thirteenth Census shall be restricted to inquiries relating to population, to agriculture, to manufactures, and to mines and quarries. The schedules relating to population shall include for each inhabitant the name, relationship to head of family, color, nationality or mother tongue, sex, age, conjugal condition, place of birth, place of birth of parents, number of years in the United States, citizenship, occupation, whether or not employer or employee, and, if employee, whether or not employed at the date of enumeration and the number of months unemployed during the preceding calendar year, whether or not engaged in agriculture, school attendance, literacy, and tenure of home, and whether or not a survivor of the Union or confederate Army or Navy; and the name and address of each blind or deaf and dumb person; and, for the enumeration of institutions, shall include paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, blind, deaf and dumb, and inmates of benevolent institutions."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that seems to me to be a very important bill. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. OLIVER. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I will state that it simply means the insertion of four words in the census act. It is done with the consent and concurrence of the Director of the Census, and if the bill is passed at all it is important that it should be passed immediately, so that instructions may be given to the supervisors to carry it into effect.

I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senate that this measure is proposed because many of our citizens of foreign extraction wish to have their race and their language stated in the enumeration, which is not provided for now. I introduced this bill last week at the suggestion of a very large delegation of representatives of the Slavonic race, who will be enumerated simply as inhabitants of Austria-Hungary, without any reference whatever to their extraction, their language, or their race.

It is rather an important matter, and if action is taken at all it should be taken at once. It will involve no additional expense. It is done with the entire concurrence of the Director of the Census and the Census Office. I earnestly hope that the bill may be passed.

Mr. LODGE. What is the calendar number?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has just been reported.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that I have any objection to the bill, but it is a very important measure. I want to have an opportunity to look at it. I never heard of it until it was read at the desk this morning.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will state that accompanying the report there is a letter from the Director of the Census discussing the matter somewhat.

Mr. BURTON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will waive his objection. It is merely an addition of the words "nationality or mother tongue," as I understand it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is all; it is the addition to the act of the words "nationality or mother tongue."

Mr. BURTON. According to the original act immigrants are classified according to country.

Mr. LODGE. The bill has not gone on the calendar, and it is impossible to see it.

Mr. BURTON. It is a mere substitution of "nationality or mother tongue" for "country."

The locality which makes such a provision most desirable is the Empire of Austria-Hungary. Under the law, as it now stands, the immigrants will be classified as belonging to that country, while, as the Senator from Massachusetts well knows, it includes a number of races, and practically different nationalities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his objection?

Mr. LODGE. I do not feel willing to withdraw my objection. I have never had a chance to see the bill; I have not had a chance to see the report; and I do not think twenty-four hours' delay will be serious.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill goes to the calendar.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: I have had an opportunity to examine the change in the census act made by the bill to which I objected. I see no objection to the amendment of the act proposed, and I withdraw the objection I have to it.

Mr. KEAN. I hope the bill will be passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment providing that after June 30, 1910, letter carriers employed in the Rural Delivery Service shall be granted an allowance of $300 for horse hire, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of an experimental system of the parcels post, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment providing for the construction of a ship canal between Port Townsend Bay, Puget Sound, and Oak Harbor, Wash., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment providing for the survey of Chelsea Creek, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $55,000 for improving Saco River, Maine, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 for improving the St. Croix River, Maine, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the improvement of the Little Kanawha River, West Virginia, including the removal of the dam at Stouts Mill, etc., to $5,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 200), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Senate resolution 200.

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an additional clerk, at an annual salary, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

RECEPTION OF STATUE OF FRANCIS H. PIERPONT.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I gave a notice several days ago and had put on the calendar resolution 197. I wish to withdraw the resolution and the notice; and, in doing so, I desire to state that it is for the purpose of giving the delegation in both Houses an opportunity to arrange a time for exercises to be held, probably in the Rotunda as well as in the two Houses, and to give time to the relatives of the late Governor Pierpont to be present. So I ask leave to withdraw the date for the time being.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the entire matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice is what the Senator from West Virginia desires to withdraw.

Mr. SCOTT. It probably would do just as well to leave the resolution on the calendar, and it can be amended when the time comes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator does not desire to have any action taken, then, to displace the resolution?

Mr. SCOTT. I merely withdraw the date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws the notice. It will be so ordered, without objection.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 12th instant approved and signed the following act:

S. 6449. An act permitting the Wisconsin Central Railway Company to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the St. Croix River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

DANIEL H. WIGGIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16824) for the relief of Daniel H. Wiggin. It is a bill to which there will be no objection.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, Daniel H. Wiggin, now a resident of New Hampshire, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company B, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, on the 1st day of August, 1865. But no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the other House upon the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19028) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the presiding officer appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. OWEN the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6431) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 7, to strike out line 21, down to and including line 2, page 8.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is now in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 3806.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask consent to call up Senate bill 3806.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe it will be very much better to take up the calendar in regular order, and we will be very likely to reach that bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well, if it can be reached this morning.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the calendar under Rule VIII may be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the pratice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let that go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the first four bills on the calendar be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be reached in order and passed over upon objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the bill just laid before the Senate may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over, on objection.

The bill (H. R. 12316) to provide for the government of the Canal Zone, the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill will go over, on objection.

The bill (S. 5485) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of areas of public land pending report and recommendation to Congress or for examination and classification was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill will go over.

EXTENSION OF MORRILL ACTS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 530) to amend an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto, so as to extend the benefits thereof to the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas in all candor—the Senator is a candid man—about when he will be ready to permit this bill to be considered?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think some time this week. I have asked for some information in regard to it that I have not yet received.

Mr. GALLINGER. I certainly want the Senator to have all the time that is proper. The Senator thinks he will be ready some time this week?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; I think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

ESTATE OF JOHN W. WEST.

The bill (S. 2430) for the relief of the heirs of John W. West, deceased, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that this bill has already been read.

Mr. KEAN. Let it be read again.

Mr. CURTIS. Since the bill was called up in the Senate the other day a representative of the Cherokee Nation said he would like to be heard. So I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

BUILDING RESTRICTIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 5715) providing for the establishment of building lines and special building restrictions in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN HAWAII.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 80) providing for a special election in the Territory of Hawaii was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLAPP. The joint resolution was read the other day.

Mr. KEAN. I understand that the joint resolution is to be amended.

Mr. DEPEW. It is to be amended. On page 1, line 7, before the word "prohibiting," I move to strike out the words "instructing the legislature to enact a law," so as to read:

That the governor of the Territory of Hawaii be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to call a special election by the legally qualified electors as now registered in that Territory for the purpose of submitting to the electors the question of prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the Territory of Hawaii.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEPEW. In line 15, on the same page, I move to strike out "instructed" and insert "requested," so as to read:

Said special election shall be held on Tuesday, the 26th day of July, 1910, and said question shall be submitted to the electors in the following words:

"Shall the legislature to be elected in November, 1910, be requested to pass, at its first regular session, a law prohibiting the manufacture or sale within the Territory of intoxicating, spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors, except for medicinal and scientific purposes?"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I should like to have the report read, if there is a report accompanying the joint resolution.

Mr. DEPEW. There was no report. I will state the circumstances.

Various reform associations of the United States appeared in large numbers before the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and advocated the enactment by the United States Congress of a bill for prohibition in Hawaii. They finally adopted a bill which had been introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] as their view of the situation.

Then the Delegate from Hawaii, the governor of Hawaii, the legislature, and the commercial bodies of the islands protested against the United States interfering with the local self-government of the islands, because Hawaii had been self-governing ever since annexation, ten years ago, and in no case had the Government of the United States ever repealed any law which had been passed by the Hawaiian legislature and approved by the governor, nor had it ever enacted any law imposing any restrictions upon Hawaii or instructions upon the government other than contained in the organic act. Finally a conference was had between the representatives of Hawaii and those of the reform associations. The result of that conference was that they all agreed upon a joint resolution submitting the question to the people of Hawaii.

When the joint resolution as agreed to by the representatives of Hawaii—and by "representatives" I mean the governor, the Delegate, and the commercial bodies—came before the Senate there was objection made to instructions being given to the legislature of Hawaii by the Government of the United States. The committee, in considering the matter, came to the conclusion that those instructions had better be taken out, as they have been by the amendment which has been offered this morning, so that it shall be simply an authorization to the people of Hawaii to vote upon the question of local option, coupled with a request to the legislature, under a ballot by which those who are in favor of prohibition in Hawaii will vote to request the legislature to pass legislation necessary to carry prohibition into effect, while those who are opposed to it will vote "no."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 116) to amend an act to correct chapter 271 of volume 35, United States Statutes at Large, was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, on several occasions when this joint resolution has been reached in the orderly proceedings of the Senate I have asked that it go over. I do not believe in the policy of resisting a joint resolution that you do not approve of by taking advantage of the opportunity or the right to ask that it go over. I think those in favor of the joint resolution are entitled to have it considered. So I do not feel like just saying every day "I object."

This is probably the only joint resolution of this kind that ever came before the Congress of the United States. I think there is no precedent for it at all. The question arises over the apportionment of the money appropriated for public surveys. The question came from the other House, I believe, if my memory is correct, providing that 25 per cent of the appropriation for public-land surveys might be used for making resurveys.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Twenty per cent.

Mr. HEYBURN. Providing that 20 per cent of it might be used for making resurveys. There are three public-land States that are probably all surveyed. There are others where only a very small proportion of the public land is surveyed. The States that are surveyed up to 90, 95, and 98 per cent were surveyed a good while ago. Of course, in the progress of time the stakes have disappeared, but they can be reestablished. That is the purpose sought to be accomplished by the appropriation of this money—to reestablish the stakes upon surveys of the public lands that have been disturbed.

Every State has local engineers, county surveyors, state engineers, or whatever they may be designated, and under the laws of every State of which I have any knowledge, if public monuments have become displaced, they can call upon the local officers to reestablish them. Those of us who live in States where only a comparatively small proportion of the area has been surveyed are jealous of this fund, because on account of the extent of the surveys of our public lands where they have never been surveyed and no foundation laid upon which the county surveyor or state engineer can reestablish the lines, we are perfectly helpless. That is obvious. The States where the foundation has been laid so that the facts may be determined certainly should not be entitled to so large a percentage of the appropriation.

I now shall speak in general figures, but my recollection is—I have the figures somewhere, but I have them not here now—that Colorado is surveyed up to about 96 or 98 per cent of the entire area, and that Wyoming is surveyed up to 93 or 94 per cent, I think the public records show. On a former occasion when this matter was under consideration I had that data and I presented it to the Senate; but I think the Senator from Wyoming will concede the fact that the public lands of that State have been surveyed up to more than 94 per cent. We have just so many hundred thousand dollars for surveying all of the public lands of the United States, and somehow they have succeeded in having 25 per cent of it set aside for resurveys. That is so obviously unfair that I feel no compunction about occupying the attention of the Senate and insisting that in equity and in fairness they should not have over 5 per cent for such resurveys. It never was contemplated that there should be a resurvey at all. The lands once surveyed and established, the fact can be established at any time without the aid of the United States. You do not need it.

Mr. President, I am met with the statement that this is a mistake of one or more of the clerks of this body; I am met with the statement that the figures have been changed. When the matter came to the Senate of the United States last year we cut it down from 20 to 5 per cent. That was the sentiment of the Senate; that was its conclusion. The Senate voted for that, and adopted the amendment. So, I am only expressing the sentiment expressed by the vote of the Senate when I say that 5 per cent should remain as the proportion that might be used for resurveys.

But I am told that in conference the Senate yielded to the other House and provided that 25 per cent of this fund might be used for resurveys, leaving those of us that have States where surveys have only practically commenced to wait for years to come while the money that should be expended in the survey for the first time in our State is to be used to resurvey lands that need no resurvey, because, as I have said, the law having fixed the point, the county surveyor, under the laws of every State, can refix it if it is lost.

Mr. President, they say that good morals demand that we should pass this joint resolution because the will of the conference committee was defeated in some way and that the Senate adopted the conference report. I do not doubt the statement of the men who served on the conference committee, but there is nothing of record to show that it was the fact. The law stands to-day in the statute books.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, this thought occurs to me: It seems that a second survey of public lands is always necessary. Out in my State, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, we had to get through a special act for each survey. But it occurs to me that probably the second survey is the survey which is really the one that is most needed. In our State the trouble with the first survey was from the fact that they surveyed the land so long in advance of its really being needed that the mounds washed away, and those famous corner posts which they had to char and put in were very often rotted away before the survey really came to be needed; so the second survey has been really the survey of most importance. It seems to me that if we are doing this work really for the good of the people, it is the survey that comes when it is demanded which is most valuable, and that is the second survey. It seems to me instead of putting less money into the resurvey we ought to put more, because that is the survey which is demanded by the people located on the land. The very fact that they have to make a second survey shows that the first survey was not used, the corners were not kept, and they were never known.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a splendid theory if it were sustained by the facts, but I have taken some occasion to find out where the money that was used for the survey was applied in two States, neighbors of the State of Nebraska. It was applied to the survey of tracts that are no nearer settlement to-day than they were when they were surveyed years ago. They simply went in and let a set of stakes rest there and rot down. Probably in twenty years more we shall be asked for more money to make another survey.

Mr. LODGE. Is this bill likely to lead to long debate?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is either going to lead to debate or it is going to be defeated—one or the other.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there are many unobjected matters on the calendar, and I object to the further consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts objects, and the joint resolution will go over.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, it seems to me that this matter should receive consideration at some time, in some place, and I ought to state to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who, perhaps, has not been present, the true facts in regard to the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will permit me, I hope he does not think I have any objection to the joint resolution, for I have not the slightest; but I thought there were a large number of unobjected matters here, and from what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has said, I gathered that the further consideration of the joint resolution would mean a long debate, which would shut out any consideration of other matters.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not think it will lead to any debate, except, perhaps, from the Senator from Idaho, who is always considerate in such matters and never discusses measures unless he believes they merit the discussion. It does not seem to me that we should pass over the joint resolution, as we have passed over it several times heretofore, without having some statement made as to the merits of the proposition.

Mr. LODGE. We are proceeding under Rule VIII, and under Rule VIII each Senator is entitled to speak but once, and for not more than five minutes. I gathered from what the Senator from Idaho said that he would not be content to speak but once, and only for five minutes on this joint resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have not spoken once nor for the space of five minutes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is entitled to speak for five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope the Senator will keep watch on me.

Mr. BURKETT. As I understand, the joint resolution was taken up by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is being considered under Rule VIII.

Mr. LODGE. It is being considered under Rule VIII, and objection is in order at any time. I have no objection to the joint resolution that I am aware of, but there are a number of bridge bills and other matters on the calendar which we could dispose of this morning. At the same time, I will withdraw the objection if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] wishes to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HEYBURN. I still have the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then, I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if I have had the floor more than five minutes and am out under the rule, I will keep a little tab before me on my desk and see how it will work.

Mr. LODGE. I wish you would.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am aware of the objection which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has to this matter of surveys and resurveys. I have no reason to doubt that his information is accurate in regard to surveys that have been conducted in the State of Idaho, and he is substantially correct, I think, in regard to the amount of surveys that have been conducted in the State of Wyoming, but this is a matter that is not primarily dependent upon the amount of surveys that have been made in any one State. This is a question whether the laws of the Government of the United States shall be written by Congress or shall be written by a clerk.

I will state the history of this matter, Mr. President. The House of Representatives passed a bill containing exactly the provisions of the joint resolution, namely, that 20 per cent of the money appropriated for surveys might be used for the resurveying and retracing of lands already surveyed. That bill came to the Senate. I do not need to give the details of the matter, but the Senate committee and the Senate, under a misapprehension, as I view it, reduced that amount to 5 per cent. Of course there was a disagreement between the two Houses. The disagreement went to conference. The conferees reported, and both Houses agreed that it should be 20 per cent. When the bill came to be enrolled, instead of the will of Congress being expressed in the enrolled bill, an error was committed, and 5 per cent was expressed instead of the agreement made by the conferees and adopted by both Houses; and with the 5 per cent provision it became a law. The purpose of this joint resolution is to make the law read as Congress determined at the time of its passage it should read, and not as it was enrolled against the report of the committee and the adoption of that report by both the Senate and the House.

Of course, if the Senate desire that that shall be the course of legislation here, that an undiscovered mistake by an enrolling clerk shall govern the laws and that the will of Congress shall not prevail, they can reject this joint resolution, which has already been passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution, and ask that it go over under Rule IX.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist upon that.

Mr. HEYBURN. If you are going to curtail the time for consideration under Rule VIII, I will have to do so. A matter that affects us to the extent of $180,000 on public surveys certainly can not be disposed of here arbitrarily under five minutes' discussion.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Nobody intends to dispose of it arbitrarily; on the contrary, the greatest consideration has been shown to the Senator, and we hope he will be here every morning when it is called under Rule VIII.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the joint resolution go over under Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho moves that the joint resolution be transferred from Rule VIII to Rule IX on the calendar. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Idaho has no further motion to make, the Chair will announce the result of the vote. The "noes" have it, and the motion does not prevail. The joint resolution goes over, retaining its place on the calendar under Rule VIII.

COURT OF COMMERCE, ETC.

The bill (S. 6737) to create a court of commerce and to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will come up under the regular order at 2 o'clock.

REIMBURSEMENT OF FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN HAWAII.

The bill (S. 3806) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska objects, and the bill will go over.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not insist on that. This is a claim that has been adjudicated in the courts; it is in payment of money that is due and owing to fire insurance companies. The German embassy and the British embassy are very anxious to have the claim settled. The former Secretary of State, now Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], has a letter in the report recommending that speedy action be taken to close the matter up. The present Secretary of State has a similar request; and there is also such a request from each of the Assistant Secretaries of State.

There can be no possible defense to the claim. The Government of the United States ordered the property destroyed, and the companies which had insurance policies on the property adjudicated their claims. They presented them to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] at a former Congress. He went over the entire claims in detail, and made a full report. A unanimous report supporting it was presented to the Senate, and the Senate passed the bill. The companies have produced before the present Committee on Claims ample proof of what they have paid, the surrender of canceled policies, the receipts for the money paid, the subrogation clauses, and so forth. It seems to me, under these circumstances, this claim ought not to be made the subject of delay. It is an obligation that the Government is in honor bound to pay, and all of the facts are in the report. I hope the bill will be considered.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill go over for to-day, at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska insists upon his objection, and the bill goes over.

COURT OF PATENT APPEALS.

The bill (S. 4982) to establish a United States court of patent appeals, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that that bill go over, and I move that it be placed under Rule IX.

The motion was agreed to.

BONDS IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 13468) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report with that bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a brief report.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report, as requested.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. DILLINGHAM on the 7th instant, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred S. 3257, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," having considered it, recommend that it be amended as follows, and that when so amended it do pass:

In line 13 of the bill, after the word "bond," insert the words "or undertaking."

This legislation is recommended in a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, which reads as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, March 1, 1910.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to recommend that S. 3257, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," be amended by adding after the word "bond," in line 13 thereof, the words "or undertaking," in order that that portion of the proviso may conform to the phraseology of the preceding portion which excepts the authorities to be affected by the proposed legislation from giving bond or entering into an undertaking. These words were inadvertently omitted by the district official who prepared the original draft of the bill. A copy of the bill, modified as proposed, is herewith transmitted.

Very respectfully,
THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
By CUNO H. RUDOLPH, President.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the word "bond," to insert "or undertaking," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to section 177 thereof the following:

"Provided, That neither the United States nor the District of Columbia, nor any officer of either, acting in his official capacity, shall be required to give bond or enter into undertaking to perfect any appeal or to obtain any injunction or other writ, process, or order in or of any court in the District of Columbia for which a bond or undertaking is now or may be hereafter required by law or rule of court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF TWENTY-THIRD STREET.

The bill (H. R. 11878) to change the name of Twenty-third street, north of Calvert street, in the District of Columbia, to Woodley place, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FORTY-FIRST STREET NW.

The bill (H. R. 13893) to authorize the extension of Forty-first street NW. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEFFERSON STREET NW.

The bill (H. R. 16915) to direct that Jefferson street NW. between Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue be stricken from the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. This location is right in the heart of the city. Is there a report in the case?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a report.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. SCOTT on the 7th instant, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16915) to direct that Jefferson street NW., between Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue, be stricken from the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The necessity for the proposed legislation is set forth in the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives, which your committee adopt, and which is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16915) to authorize the abandonment of Jefferson street NW. between Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue NW., Washington, D. C., report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of this bill is to abandon a portion of Jefferson street, as laid out on the plan for a permanent system of highways, but not as yet opened. The reasons for its proposed abandonment is the impracticability of opening it as a thoroughfare, on account of its steep grade, as appears by the letter of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made a part of this report.

It is also understood that if this part of the street is abandoned the owners of the land will dedicate a strip through the same wide enough for the construction of a stairway from Fourteenth street to Colorado avenue NW.

The commissioners approve the proposition of the bill in the following letter:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, January 22, 1910.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on House bill 16915, Sixty-first Congress, second session, to authorize the abandonment of Jefferson street NW. between Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue NW., Washington, D. C., which you referred to them for examination and report.

The object of the bill is to abandon as a public highway that portion of Jefferson street lying between Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue NW. The portion of the street to be abandoned is shown in red on the inclosed plat. The length of it is about 160 feet.

At this point the difference in elevation between Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue is about 24.5 feet, and if the portion of the street proposed to be abandoned should be improved, the grade that would result would be impracticable for travel. Moreover, it is not contemplated to extend this street west of Colorado avenue, so that the effect of the bill would be merely to terminate the street at Fourteenth street, instead of at Colorado avenue. No advantage would be subserved by keeping this portion of the street a public highway, and its abandonment would be both to the interest of the District and to the owners of the abutting property.

The commissioners recommend favorable action on the bill.

Respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF COLUMBIA ROAD NW.

The bill (H. R. 19785) to authorize the extension of Columbia road NW., in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF MILITARY ROAD NW.

The bill (H. R. 20164) authorizing the extension of Military road NW., in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERMANENT SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 16916) to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District to prepare a new highways plan for that portion of the first section of the permanent system of highways plan lying between Georgia avenue on the east, Sixteenth street on the west, Kalmia street on the north, and Butternut street on the south.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF FOURTH STREET SE.

The bill (H. R. 13864) to extend Fourth street SE. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT BEMIDJI, MINN.

The bill (S. 6721) permitting the building of a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at Bemidji, in the State of Minnesota, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "Minnesota," to strike out "its successors and assigns, to build a railroad bridge" and insert "to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto;" and in line 9, after the word "River," to insert "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation," so as to read:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, a railway corporation organized under the laws of the States of Wisconsin, Michigan, and Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless said bridge herein authorized be commenced within one year and completed within two years from and after the date of approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARANSAS PASS CHANNEL AND DOCK COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 19633) to authorize Aransas Pass Channel and Dock Company to construct a bridge across Morris and Cumming Channel was announced as the next business in order on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] desires to be present when this bill is considered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 15, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 14, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, let Thy spirit come mightily upon these Thy servants that in all the work they take up this week it may be of the highest order, that they may acquit themselves like men, and make history worthy of American statesmen.

And now, O Father, let the everlasting arms be about the bereaved Member to uphold and sustain him in the loss of his companion. Grant that he and the motherless children may look forward with faith and confidence to that larger life in that brighter realm where sorrows and death never enter, and Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 12, 1910, was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a correction of the RECORD. On page 3092, before the paragraph near the bottom of the first column, beginning "The gentleman manifestly is mistaken," and so forth, the words "Mr. BURKE of South Dakota" should be inserted. Otherwise it makes what I said appear to have been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

DEFINING THE CRIME OF PANDERING.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 17744) in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same, and to provide for the punishment thereof.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who takes, harbors, inveigles, entices, persuades, encourages, either by threats or promises, or by any device or scheme takes or causes to be taken any female into a house of ill-fame or of assignation or elsewhere in the District of Columbia against her will, for the purpose of prostitution or illegal sexual intercourse, or takes or detains a female unlawfully against her will with the intent to compel her by force, threats, persuasion, menace, or duress to marry him or to marry any other person or to be defiled, or being parent, guardian or any other person having legal charge of the person of a female consents to her taking or detaining by any person for the purpose of prostitution or sexual intercourse is guilty of pandering and shall be punished by imprisonment for a term not less than one nor more than ten years and fined not more than $1,000.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall place any female in the charge or custody of any other person or persons for immoral purposes or in a house of prostitution with the intent that she shall live a life of prostitution, or any person who shall compel any female to reside with him or with any other person for immoral purposes, or for the purposes of prostitution, or compel her to live a life of prostitution, is guilty of pandering and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 and imprisonment for not less than one nor more than ten years.

SEC. 3. That any person who shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring for or placing in a house of prostitution or elsewhere any female for the purpose of causing her to cohabit with any male person or persons shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned for not less than three nor more than ten years.

SEC. 4. That any person who by force, fraud, intimidation, or threats places or leaves, or procures any other person or persons to place or leave, his wife in a house of prostitution, or to lead a life of prostitution, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not less than three nor more than ten years.

SEC. 5. That any person or persons who knowingly receive any money or other valuable thing from the earnings of any woman or girl engaged in prostitution shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction be imprisoned for a term not exceeding ten years and fined not less than $500.

SEC. 6. That any person or persons who attempt to detain any girl or woman in a disorderly house or house of prostitution because of any debt or debts she has contracted, or is said to have contracted, while living in said house of prostitution or disorderly house shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned for a term not less than three nor more than ten years.

SEC. 7. That any such female referred to in the foregoing shall be a competent witness in any prosecution under this act to testify to any and all matters, including conversations with the accused or by him with or by third persons in her presence, notwithstanding her having married the accused either before or after the violation of any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], if anybody desires to ask any questions.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask a question of somebody. What is the effect of section 5 of the bill?

Mr. BORLAND. This whole bill, as the gentleman sees, is designed to reach a class of criminals who live off the earnings of women, and it divides this crime up into various classes. Section 5 is designed to reach one who lives off of these earnings without any proof that he participated in causing the debauchery of the girl. It is designed to reach that class of idle criminals.

Mr. MANN. It reads that—

> Any person or persons who knowingly receive any money or other valuable thing from the earnings of any woman or girl engaged in prostitution shall be guilty of a felony.

Now, I apprehend that a prostitute who may have earned or received money by her prostitution might go into a store and buy something. You do not expect her to starve. There is no prohibition in the bill against anybody engaging in prostitution; but under this bill, apparently, if the merchant knew that the woman was a prostitute and received any money from her he would be subjected to a penalty of ten years' imprisonment.

Mr. BORLAND. It hardly strikes me that that would reach the case of a merchant in the ordinary course of business who sold goods to the public, who happened to sell them to some girl who earned her money in that way. It is designed to reach people who knowingly do it; but in order to make a conviction under this before any jury you would have to prove the intent as you would in any other crime.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in this that says you have to prove the intent; it says, "if he knowingly receives the money."

Mr. BORLAND. It would be in this as in all other criminal cases.

Mr. MANN. That depends upon what you provide in the bill. It provides a penalty against his knowingly receiving the money. Very few people receive money without doing it knowingly. The penalty here is against knowingly receiving the money from prostitutes, and that is what it amounts to. What the gentleman may have intended in the preparation of the bill is one thing, and what he says in the law may be an entirely different proposition. The court, when it comes to construe this matter, reads the law, and it does not read the mind of the gentleman, who may have intended something else when he prepared the bill.

Mr. BORLAND. It strikes me, in answer to that, that no man who was engaged in legitimate business and happened to receive for goods sold in the ordinary course of business money earned in that way would be convicted. I doubt if any exception could be put in there that might not have the effect of providing a loophole for the very people that we are providing for in this section—these people who rent rooms and live off of the earnings of these women. The well-known rules of general construction must apply, and a guilty intent must be fastened upon the defendant. That is a protection to the honest person.

Mr. MANN. You do not fasten the guilty intent on the man, but you prove the facts, and the intent is presumed from the facts.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will examine the bill he will find that the other sections apply against people who have taken an active step toward putting the girl or woman into this situation. Section 5 is designed to reach the fellow who takes the proceeds of her vice, whether he takes it under contract for rent, or apparently as a gratuity. It is designed to reach these men and no other. If you put an exception there, as the gentleman says, to relieve the honest merchant, you will have opened the door to the very class of people designed to be reached, and it will be no more of a protection to the honest merchant than the bill is at present.

Mr. MANN. What is the meaning of section 7?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That is what I wanted to inquire about.

Mr. BORLAND. Well, section 7 is a little more drastic——

Mr. MANN. It can not be more drastic than section 5, but what does it mean?

Mr. BORLAND. It is quite true, as every lawyer knows, that in the practice it makes a substantial change. Undoubtedly it changes the rule of evidence and provides that a wife may testify against her husband in that kind of a case. They have found a difficulty in this kind of a case from that rule of evidence, and in this kind of a case it is necessary, frequently, that that rule of evidence be abrogated; because, unless it is abrogated, no conviction can be obtained. I think that the whole law and all of these laws are based on an exception to that rule of evidence.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. May I ask the gentleman if this law has been put in operation in any city or State?

Mr. BORLAND. A similar law exists in some 10 or 12 States, including my own.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is that a statute law of Missouri?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Have any convictions been had under that law?

Mr. BORLAND. As far as I know, no convictions have been had in our State; how it is worked in others I do not know.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You do not know whether any case has been appealed to the superior courts?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I think not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How long has it been in force?

Mr. BORLAND. Not long. I do not know of any reports of the courts as deciding such cases; I do not know of any. I might say right here, as every gentleman recognizes, this law undoubtedly appeals to the moral sense of all of us. Even the gentleman who is criticising the bill——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not wish to say "even the gentleman who is criticising." The gentleman has introduced a bill on this subject, which was carefully drawn——

Mr. BORLAND. Undoubtedly——

Mr. MANN (continuing). And hence is criticising a bill which is extremely carelessly drawn.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman thinks any amendment can strengthen the bill, I have no doubt we will all be in favor of it.

Mr. MANN. I have no amendment to strengthen the bill; I have not prepared any.

Mr. BORLAND. When the gentleman interrupted me I was about to say that this law is, of course, experimental. There is no qusetion about that. We do not know if we are going to catch these fellows. We do not know that this law in practice will operate to catch the right men, but we do know that we are making an effort to catch them, especially in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Why are you saying, in line 21: "Including conversation with the accused or by him with or by third person?" What is the meaning of that? Why is that language used? "Conversations with the accused or by him with or by third person." What does that mean—conversations by a man with or by a third person? I thought a conversation by its terms had a reference to at least two people. This seems to assume that a conversation is wholly carried on by one person.

Mr. BORLAND. Well, a conversation of a wife with her husband, in the absence of other persons, under the common law, is not evidence, and in this instance it is designed to abrogate that rule.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman about one other matter which I have marked here? I notice in section 3—> that any person who shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring for or placing in a house of prostitution or elsewhere any female for the purpose of causing her to cohabit with any male person—and so forth, shall be considered a felony. Now, what is the definition of the word "cohabit?"

Mr. BORLAND. Well, ordinarily the definition of the word cohabit is to live together in the relation of husband and wife.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think not. The term is constantly used "cohabit together as man and wife," but the word "cohabit" does not imply the rest.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Our court has construed the word "cohabit" to mean living together as husband and wife for some time.

Mr. BORLAND. The common-law marriage, as I understand it, is based on cohabitation, which, in the eyes of the world, has the appearance of living together as man and wife. Under common law it is proof of marriage. It is not marriage in any contractual sense.

Mr. MANN. It may be it implies living together as man and wife. I have not so understood it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The legal meaning of the word "cohabit" in this country is to live together habitually. Occasional acts of adultery do not fall within the rule.

Mr. MANN. Now, of course, this first section provides a penalty of not more than ten years' imprisonment.

Mr. BORLAND. I might say to the gentleman before we start on this question that this bill was prepared by another member of the committee, not myself, and that by direction of the committee I am reporting it.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. BORLAND. I did not draw the exact language of the bill, and yet I feel that I understand the purport of it.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not consider from anything I might say that I am criticising the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT], who drew the bill. I notice in the first section it provides, leaving out part of the language, that any person who persuades any female into a house of assignation or elsewhere for the purpose of illegal sexual intercourse is subjected to a punishment of not less than ten years' imprisonment.

Mr. BORLAND. Not more than ten years.

Mr. MANN. Not more than ten years' imprisonment. Of course that would cover practically any case of sexual intercourse, illegal or unlawful, between man and woman.

Mr. BORLAND. As I said before to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], this law is designed to reach an evil that has attracted a great deal of popular attention. Everybody recognizes that it is an evil extremely hard to reach by the criminal statutes on account of the strictness with which criminl statutes are necessarily construed. It is rather difficult to draw a bill which will reach the real evil and yet which will not have the effect perhaps of infringing on the personal liberty of people not intended to be reached.

The law is experimental, and if the gentleman, having been over this subject, as I know he has, in the preparation of the white-slave immigration or interstate commerce law, has any amendment that will strengthen the bill, I am sure we would like to have it.

Mr. MANN. The bill which has already passed the House, and which I introduced, covers this entire subject in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORLAND. I will say to the gentleman that it does not. The bill that passed the House was designed to regulate the national part of it, so far as it affected interstate commerce, and could regulate nothing else. This is a local bill, as much as a bill of the state legislature, regulating police power.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not read the bill, and hence is not qualified to say what it covers.

Mr. BORLAND. I heard the gentleman discuss it somewhat at length.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has forgotten what he heard, because the bill which passed the House expressly provided not only for interstate commerce, but for the Territories and the District of Columbia, and when the gentleman says they could not do it, of course he does not mean that, because the bill that he now has proposes to do it. We did cover the District of Columbia and the Territories in the bill that passed the House, but I do not know that there is any objection to the passage of this bill. One of those bills that passed the House is now in conference; the other, in the Senate, is in the Committee on Immigration. This will be, I suppose, in the Committee on the District of Columbia. Something ought to be done; and very likely when this bill goes over to the Senate, the distinguished body over there will rewrite it and put it in form so that it will mean something and will effect something.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to make a suggestion in relation to section 3. I think the word "cohabit" destroys the purpose of that section, because "cohabit" means habitual sexual relation or intercourse. It has been so construed by the courts.

Mr. ROBERTS. No; it has been construed the other way.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The interpretation, as far as I am familiar with it, is that "cohabit" means habitual living together as man and wife.

Cohabitation means two in the habit of living together. The demarcation is a man and a woman habitually living together. I think the word "cohabit" ought to be stricken out and the words "to commit acts of prostitution" used in its place, so that it would reach the purpose this section is designed to cover. I understand the section is intended to cover the question of procuring a woman to enter a house of prostitution, not to cohabit, but to commit acts of prostitution.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the criticism as to the use of the word "cohabit" is well taken, and I believe that the committee could strike out the word "cohabit" and insert to "engage in unlawful sexual relations."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move to strike out the word "cohabit" and insert in lieu "commit acts of prostitution."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move to strike out the word "cohabit," in line 20, page 2, and insert the words "commit acts of prostitution."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, strike out the word "cohabit" and insert in lieu thereof the words "commit acts of prostitution."

Mr. BORLAND. Just a moment. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana, Do you not think that difficulty will arise from using the word "acts" in the plural; ought it not to be "act or acts?" The construction of criminal statutes is very strict.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think that would cover act or acts of prostitution.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest to the gentleman that the Statutes of the United States provide if the word used is in the singular or the plural, it shall be construed as in the plural or in the singular, as the case demands.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We are ready to vote on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish to call attention to section 4. In line 24, the third word is "person;" the last word in line 25 is "person," and then further in the line is the word "his," which relates back to one or other of those persons. If any man will take that section and read it and tell me which one of those persons is to be arrested under that section I will agree to jump in the Potomac River. I think that this bill ought to be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman, but I would hate for the gentleman to lose his life.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I move to recommit the bill to the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Suppose the gentleman offers an amendment to cure the legislation.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask for a vote on the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MASONIC TEMPLE ASSOCIATION.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill S. 3889.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Temple Association of the District of Columbia," approved the 15th day of April, 1898, be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding to and as a part of section 3 of the said act the following:

"At the annual election of the board of managers and at all other stockholders' meetings of the said Masonic Temple Association, each body owning capital stock of the said corporation shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by it."

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of District business.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; Mr. WANGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business.

WIDENING FIRST STREET NE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 20370) authorizing the widening of First street NE.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the widening of First street NE. along the eastern boundaries of squares Nos. 675, 676, and 677 to a width of 60 feet, as shown on plans on file in the office of the engineer commissioner, District of Columbia: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said widening, plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the said condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of the amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (H. R. 22390) to require all companies doing telegraph business in the District of Columbia to pay a tax on their gross receipts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That paragraph 5 of section 6 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'PAR. 5. Each national bank as the trustee for its stockholders, through its president or cashier, and all other incorporated banks, and trust companies, in the District of Columbia, through their presidents or cashiers, and all gas, electric lighting, telegraph, and telephone companies, doing business in the District of Columbia, through their proper officers, shall make affidavit to the board of personal-tax assessors on or before the 1st day of August each year as to the amount of its or their gross receipts for the preceding year ending the 30th day of June, and shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia per annum on such gross receipts as follows: Each national bank, and all other incorporated banks, and trust companies, respectively, 6 per cent; each gas company, 5 per cent; each electric lighting, telegraph, and telephone company, 4 per cent. And in addition thereto the real estate owned by each national or other incorporated bank, and each trust, gas, electric lighting, telegraph, and telephone company in the District of Columbia shall be taxed as other real estate in said District: Provided, That street railroad companies shall continue to pay the 4 per cent per annum on their gross receipts and other taxes as provided by existing law, and insurance companies shall continue to pay the 1½ per cent on premium receipts, as provided by section 650 of the code of the District of Columbia. That so much of the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of trust, loan, mortgage, and certain other corporations within the District of Columbia" as is inconsistent with the provisions of this section is hereby repealed.'"

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish the gentleman would withhold that motion until we have an opportunity for some explanation of this bill from the chairman or some other member of the committee who can explain the measure, as to what it seeks to accomplish.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. PEARRE. Has the gentleman read the report?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have the report before me, but have not had an opportunity to read it.

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman will read the report he will find that it very fully sets out the purpose of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I find that the report is nothing more than a reprint of the amendment as printed in the bill. It does not state anything in explanation.

Mr. PEARRE. I will say to the gentleman that the only thing that is done is to insert paragraph 5 of section 6 of the act relating to telegraph companies. It simply applies the existing law, providing for the tax of 4 per cent on the gross receipts of these incorporated companies.

If the gentleman has read paragraph 5 of the act of June 30, 1903, he will see that that is the only amendment provided.

Mr. STAFFORD. I glanced over the report to which the gentleman directed my attention, but I notice that there is nothing in the report that covers the matter that the gentleman just referred my attention to.

Mr. PEARRE. I think the last paragraph of the report does that. If the gentleman will read it he will see that it says:

The sole purpose of the bill is to provide for the taxation of telegraph companies doing business within the District of Columbia, in the same manner as other public-service corporations are taxed. The original bill was transmitted to the committee by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DALZELL. Is this the telepost bill?

Mr. PEARRE. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. You state that the taxable rate is intended to be the same as to telegraph companies, as to other public-service corporations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As to telephone companies.

Mr. PEARRE. As to telephone companies.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I renew my motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THE TELEPOST COMPANY.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 19402) to enable the Telepost Company to construct its plant, operate the same, and transact its business in the District of Columbia, and make necessary connections with other parts of its system.

The bill and committee amendments were read.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the committee amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before we read this bill under the five-minute rule, which we have not done yet, suppose the gentleman explains the bill to us.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I shall be glad to do it, but for the time being I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE].

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which simply grants permission to the Telepost Company, a company incorporated under the laws of the State of Maine, to bring in its lines and construct its equipment, and so forth, in the District of Columbia.

The bill as reported is favorably recommended and indorsed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, with three amendments, the first being in line 5 of section 1, in which the word "Portland" is stricken out and the word "Augusta" substituted, in order that the bill may comport with the facts.

The second is the latter part of section 1, on page 2, in which the following language is stricken from the bill:

Said Telepost Company shall repair, restore, and make good the surface of all streets in which said company may lay conduits. The cost thereof and of all restoration of street surfaces and of all damages to persons or property, caused by any construction, excavation, or in any other manner, by the operations herein authorized, shall be borne and paid solely by said Telepost Company.

I assume that it is hardly necessary for me to read the language that is substituted in place of that stricken out, because no doubt Members have the bill before them. It simply provides that the cost of all breaking of the surface in laying its conduits and installing its system in the District shall be paid for by the company. That amendment is suggested by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as is also the third amendment, which is a new section, section 4, imposing a tax of 4 per cent per annum on the gross receipts of the company in the District of Columbia, to comport with the general law which we have recently amended in the same respect in regard to telephone companies, in the passage of H. R. 22390, which has just been laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are there any further questions?

Mr. MANN. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I notice that it is stated in the report that the stock of the company is owned by trustees for the purpose of preventing somebody getting hold of the stock.

Is there anything in this bill or in the charter of this company, or anywhere else, which would prevent either the Western Union Telegraph Company or the Postal Telegraph Company acquiring this franchise after it is granted?

Mr. PEARRE. I think, Mr. Chairman, that is provided for by the selection of the trustees and the veto power which each individual possesses.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think these trustees endeavoring to conserve the interests of the stockholders, if they were offered a fair price for this property, a little more than the market value, would decline to sell the property because they wished to maintain competitive conditions?

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman means to ask whether there is anything in the bill to prohibit such a course, I should be compelled to say that there is not.

Mr. MANN. We have got this situation. It has been stated recently that the Western Union Telegraph Company had acquired the stock of the Postal Telegraph Company——

Mr. WILEY. That has been denied.

Mr. MANN (continuing). And that the two were to be amalgamated far enough to do away with competition. I do not know what the facts may be, but is it not desirable, in granting a new franchise in the District of Columbia, to preserve the competitive condition as far as possible? I do not know how valuable this franchise may be here or anywhere else.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to say to the gentleman that they have been admitted—the cities of Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Boston, Portland, Me., and several other cities—and in all cases they have been admitted upon practically the same conditions that are provided in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman gets his information from some official of the Telepost Company, and I have never found that sort of information absolutely reliable. I have never found it safe to depend wholly upon the statements of some officials who were seeking to obtain a franchise.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman ought to know the conditions in his own city. This company is doing business between Chicago and St. Louis.

Mr. MANN. I dare say that they are provided with some limitations in Chicago. I do not know; I did not know the Telepost Company was in Chicago. This is the first I have heard of it, and the first anyone has heard of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that this is the first that anyone has heard that they were doing business there, although they have been doing business but two or three months in Chicago.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question. I am not familiar with the provisions of the bill. Does it carry any charge on the Treasury?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; on the contrary, this bill, for the first time, and the bill which was laid aside with a favorable recommendation a few minutes ago, imposes a tax of 4 per cent on the gross receipts of the company.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask if there is a provision in the bill requiring the companies to repair the streets?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; that is fully provided for.

Mr. BURLESON. Then, what objection can there be to the passage of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There can not be any objection that I know of.

Mr. MANN. Oh, this conversation was all prearranged.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is mistaken; I never spoke to the gentleman from Michigan about this matter in my life, but I can not see any objection if it carries no charge against the Treasury and the provision requiring them to pay for the repairs of the streets is provided for.

Mr. PEARRE. It produces a revenue of 4 per cent on the gross receipts.

Mr. MANN. That does not amount to much. I have no opposition to the bill or to the Telepost coming into the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The 4 per cent tax may not amount to much at present in case of the Telepost, but it will against the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph companies.

Mr. MANN. This is a bill proposing to tear up all the streets in the city of Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. There is no limitation in the bill.

Mr. WILEY. You can not make a limitation of that kind.

Mr. MANN. I want something in the law to give Congress the authority to preserve the competitive conditions in reference to these companies. We have two great companies now, one of which, it is said, has been absorbed by the other. Here is proposed a third company; and if it amounts to anything, we ought not to permit it to be absorbed by one of the existing companies after it has acquired a valuable franchise in the city of Washington.

Mr. PEARRE. What amendment would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. I would suggest at least one that should have been in the bill at first, and that is that "the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. WILEY. That is in all the bills.

Mr. MANN. That may be in all the bills, but it has been carefully omitted from this bill. I dare say that it was not omitted purposely by the District Committee. The District Committee, I suppose, did not prepare the bill.

Mr. WILEY. That is in the law of the District.

Mr. MANN. The people who were seeking to get this franchise carefully omitted it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think there was any intent to leave it out.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question. Is this bill confined to a charter in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MANN. This is only to give them a franchise to enter the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this franchise confined to the District of Columbia?

Mr. PEARRE. Confined to the District of Columbia solely.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose that the time comes when the District of Columbia or the city of Washington wants to make them put these lines underground, is there anything in this bill to provide for that?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is what they do now. That is the proposition in this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why should there not be a clause in here such as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests—that the company should not be allowed to consolidate with these other companies?

Mr. PEARRE. We will be very glad to consider that amendment. I know of no objection to it whatever.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the only amendment I have suggested is the one that would insert a clause that the right to alter, amend, or repeal is expressly reserved, and I think also that there ought to be this other provision. I have not prepared any amendment, however.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to inquire whether there is any clause in the bill which requires the wires to be put under ground?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will read section 3:

SEC. 3. That the said Telepost Company is hereby authorized to apply forthwith to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for their approval and permission under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1905, entitled "An act regulating the use of telegraph wires in the District of Columbia."

That act requires them to put their wires under ground.

Mr. KEIFER. Why not, in this bill, require to be done what is required by the general act referred to?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why do it?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes; why do that?

Mr. KEIFER. Because they have to go to the commissioners for the purpose of getting permission to do what they ought to be required to do.

Mr. PEARRE. Why multiply legislation?

Mr. KEIFER. I think you are multiplying it now by not putting it in. You put in the bill a provision requiring them to apply for permission to do certain things under an act that we have not now before us, and it may be inferred from this that they can put up their wires without applying for that permission at all.

Mr. MANN. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to the fact that this expressly authorizes overhead wires in part of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEIFER. That is what I was afraid of.

Mr. PEARRE. Not in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Then what does it mean on page 2, line 7, when the following language is used?

And especially to construct, own, and operate an overhead line of a telegraph—

And so forth.

Mr. PEARRE. Read further:

From the boundary line between the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. We have not any jurisdiction outside of the District of Columbia——

Mr. PEARRE. Reading further:

In a southerly or westerly direction, to a point where it may be necessary to lay conduits and install underground telegraph lines.

That is the District line; that is under the general law now.

Mr. MANN. Then it is absurd. If the proposition is to permit them to construct overhead telegraph lines from the District line to the same line it would be ridiculous.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman seems to have a faculty for observing absurd things.

Mr. MANN. I do, and I notice that.

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman will take the pains to read the words of the bill—

And especially to construct, own, and operate an overhead line of its telegraph from the boundary line between the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia, in a southerly or westerly direction, to a point where it may be necessary to lay conduits and install underground telegraph lines.

Therefore, they are constructing an overhead line between the point in Maryland where they are coming in and the line of the District of Columbia that separates it from the State of Maryland, and when they reach the District line, that is the point where, under the general law, they are required now to put their wires underground.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman does not claim that we have any jurisdiction to grant a permit to construct an overhead line in the State of Maryland, does he?

Mr. PEARRE. Oh, we are not talking about that.

Mr. MANN. Where is this overhead line to be constructed?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Between its line and up to the point in the city where, under the law, they are required to put them underground.

Mr. MANN. That is what I said: That it granted authority to construct an overhead line in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, why should they not be given the same privilege that is given to any other telegraph company?

Mr. MANN. I am not saying anything about that, but the gentleman said I was mistaken.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to follow that up. It seems to me it is highly important, as it turns out from this colloquy, that they are not required to put the wires underground under a general law at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, yes; they are.

Mr. KEIFER. Unless they make application and obtain the permission from the commissioners.

Why not put in a provision requiring them to conform with the law, if there is such a law? Each law, in other words, becomes effective according to its own terms, and there is no reference to their being bound by the general law, except that they may apply to the commissioners for certain authority under it.

Mr. PEARRE. I would like to reply to what the gentleman from Ohio says.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. PEARRE. I understood the gentleman from Ohio to ask a question, and I desire to answer it. The gentleman will discover on page 2 that the location of the lines is to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; therefore this service can not be installed and these lines can not be laid in the District, underground or otherwise, except by permission of the commissioners and under their direction and regulation.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not think that covers the whole question. The location of the service as to the streets or alleys or places on which the line may be extended or over does not necessarily determine the character of the construction as to whether it shall be overhead or underground.

Mr. PEARRE. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the language in lines 12, 13 and 14 on page 2:

Is authorized to lay conduits and install underground telegraph lines therein by any route or routes which may be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEIFER. What are you reading from?

Mr. PEARRE. Second page, lines 12, 13, and 14.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no provision there requiring them to lay underground telegraph lines at all, but I suppose they can get permission to do it under that if they want to do so. It is a sort of permissive bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, I only want to add to that by saying I am not familiar with this bill, and I will yield to anybody's interruption. I want to say I understood the question to be answered a few moments ago that this was a charter for a telegraph corporation to operate exclusively within the District of Columbia. Now, does it not look to connecting lines, to at least a contract connection with companies outside of it?

Mr. PEARRE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Who suggested it was to be exclusive?

Mr. KEIFER. I thought you or your colleague stated that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This bill limits it to the District of Columbia; that is all we can legislate for in this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. You provide in here for its connecting with outside lines?

Mr. WILEY. It would not be of any use without some connection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This corporation is simply granted rights in this District, just as rights have been given to the Postal and Western Union Telegraph companies. It is confined wholly to the District. That is all that this bill does.

Mr. KEIFER. With that explanation, it seems to me it is satisfactory.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KEIFER. I yield to the gentleman all the time he wishes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I thought the gentleman from Ohio had finished.

Mr. KEIFER. I have; but I thought you were going to ask a question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; the gentleman admits he does not know very much about the bill, and I wanted to ask some questions of somebody who does know something about it. I supposed the chairman of the District Committee had the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yielded to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not care to take the floor in my own right, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then I will ask a question in my own time, and I yield to any gentleman to answer it. My understanding is that section 3 is the general law providing for the use of the streets by telegraph and telephone lines.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is right.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And that general law requires that in the city limits to a certain point all lines must be underground in conduits?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And that same law provides for overhead trolleys in the outlying parts of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is my understanding of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Therefore, I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] was not correct when he said this does not require them to be put underground. My understanding is that the general law requires these parties, when they come in the city, to put their lines underground the same as other telephone and telegraph lines.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Absolutely.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. So it seems to me there is no confusion in that respect. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal this, should be reserved expressly in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We accept that amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. So far as the other parts may be concerned I can see nothing in it, and I can not see why anyone should object to giving to this Telepost Company the same rights that are given to the Western Union Telegraph Company and the Postal Telegraph Company, which are operating here.

I do not know whether your telepost is of any account or not, but that is not before us. If parties believe it has sufficient merit in it to justify this large expenditure, Congress should not stand in the way and say that they shall not have the privileges that we give to other corporations of like character. That is all this bill does.

Mr. PEARRE. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that the other two telegraph companies have had this privilege for many years without paying any tax on their gross receipts whatever.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They ought to pay tax on gross receipts. I only desired to take the floor long enough to bring out what I thought was a misunderstanding here, and I thought the bill was clear enough on the line suggested.

Mr. PEARRE. I move an amendment at the end of the bill, to section 4.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk proceeds, I desire to say a few words on that bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of this bill. I can see no reason why it should not be passed. It allows this Telepost Company, which is really a telegraph company, to come into Washington, as I understand the bill, and do business on exactly the same terms that the other great telegraph companies which are doing business in Washington have. It proposes to allow another competitor to come into this field to do business, and, more than that, it allows a competitor to come into the field who claims he has an invention by which he can send telegrams for less money than they are being sent to-day, which undoubtedly would reduce the cost of service and improve it. I do not think there is any doubt that the cost of the transmission of telegrams to-day is too high. The charges have been too high and they ought to be reduced, and I think it is of great advantage to the people who use the service that there shall be an opportunity given for the establishment of another competitor. This is no experimental matter. It has already been put in service in other cities. It has been tried and successfully tried, and under those circumstances I think the bill should receive the support of those men who believe in a competitive service, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman in charge of this bill, that I am in favor of the passage of it on the theory that it means honest competition in this District of Columbia, and therefore before offering an amendment which I have in my hand I want to ask you if you will consent to it. I offer it, not with any idea of defeating the bill, but with the view of perfecting it. It reads as follows:

After line 4, on page 4, add the following:

"SEC. 5. This company shall not have the power to dispose of its franchise, privileges, or property in the District of Columbia by merger or otherwise to any other public-service corporation, and nothing in this act shall be construed to give it any power to use the conduits, poles, or wires of any other public-service corporation without their consent."

My object in that amendment is this: I am unwilling to give a valuable franchise to a corporation that does not mean active, honest competition in this District of Columbia. If it does mean it, this amendment does not affect it. If it does not mean it, they have no franchise that they can hawk around here for sale.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The way the gentleman read that amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] yield?

Mr. CARLIN. To the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. As I understood the gentleman to read the amendment, it seems to me as if that franchise might be sold to an individual or copartnership. Would not the gentleman think it as wise to prevent that as to prevent its absorption by another corporation? From the way the gentleman read it I think it could be taken by a holding company.

Mr. CARLIN. By any public-service corporation, the idea being to prevent the companies already in the District of Columbia from enlarging their franchise and permitting them to lay additional conduits under this charter by merging with this company.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to suggest to the gentleman that they have a board of voting trustees.

Mr. CARLIN. The point I am making is this. Now, I am for your bill. I want the Telepost Company in the District of Columbia. In other words, I want honest competition here, and I do not want a franchise granted to some corporation for the purpose of selling out to those already in existence for the purpose of giving them powers to lay conduits and operating in the District of Columbia, which they could not now get unless Congress gave it to them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, I have no objection to your amendment. Can you conceive how either the Western Union or the Postal Telegraph Company would want anything from this, when they have got it already, and they have been here and doing business for a long while; and also the Bell Telephone Company, which is known as the Chesapeake and Potomac?

Mr. CARLIN. Well, will the gentleman answer this question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARLIN. This company is given power to lay conduits in the District of Columbia, and while the Bell Telephone and the Western Union might not want the privilege, other people might want it. Electric lighting and other corporations without that unlimited privilege given in this bill might want it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think you will find that the Electric Company have got this power. I can not conceive of any other company that would want it; and if the gentleman can, I wish he would name it. I have no objection to the amendment. I want to say to the gentleman that we have already given this power to the telegraph companies.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, everyone is aware of the excessively high rates of charge for telegraphing in this country. More than half a century ago the Congress of the United States appropriated money for the purpose of making an experiment in the matter of magnetic telegraph to be established between this city and Baltimore. We have to-day another new invention, which has been established, and which proposes to cheapen the rates of transmission of messages through electricity and by wire throughout the country. In the interest of that science and for its advancement I think that we ought to enact this legislation and grant to this company the franchise asked for.

That is all that I desire to say, except that I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in reference to reserving to the Congress the right to alter, amend, and change this franchise is not needed. I do not believe it is necessary to reserve such a right. I believe that the sovereign power which grants the charter, the franchise, to a corporation to transact business has the right at any time to alter, amend, or revoke that franchise. It is true that in the celebrated Dartmouth College case it was held by the Supreme Court of the United States that the charter granted by a State to a corporation was a contract and that the State could not under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States pass any law which in any way impaired that contract. But it is not that way in the case of the power of the Congress of the United States. There is no provision in the Constitution of the United States that restricts the power of Congress or that would make any such law passed by Congress as infringing or impairing the obligations of a contract. The Supreme Court of the United States in the later opinions on the subject of the granting of charters by the state legislatures have so modified and gotten away from the doctrine of the Dartmouth College case that even the state legislatures have the right to repeal, amend, or alter the charters that they grant in the exercise of the sovereign power to grant franchises. I do not want it to be understood when I shall, as I will, vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to reserve this right that I do not believe that Congress has the right without the amendment, but merely as a matter of precaution only.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice in the report, on page 3, this paragraph:

> The entire stock of the company has been placed in the hands of a board of voting trustees in order to prevent any hostile or stock-jobbing interests from obtaining control.

Then it gives the names of the board. How has the stock been placed in the hands of a board of voting trustees?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. By the stockholders by the by-laws.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. At a meeting of the stockholders?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; I understand so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is there to prevent another meeting of the stockholders from withdrawing that power?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, I suppose they could if they so desired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is nothing at all, then, to prevent the merger which the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia seeks to prohibit? I wonder whether the act granting the charter does provide for the board of voting trustees?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; it does not. It is provided by the by-laws.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So that the mere fact of the board of voting trustees being empowered to vote the stock does not preclude a second meeting of the stockholders from withdrawing that power from the board of voting trustees, in their discretion?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand that the independent oil companies have put the stock in the hands of a board of voting trustees to keep them from being merged with the Standard Oil Company, and that it has proved very successful.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do you know that in the brief filed in the Standard Oil case the government counsel say that about 95 per cent of the so-called independent concerns are independent only nominally—that the Standard Oil Company dictates the terms on which they shall be permitted to do business, and that it shuts them out of territory just as it pleases? Their independence is merely nominal. Now, then, I think, in view of what the gentleman from Michigan has just admitted as to the way in which the board of voting trustees is authorized to vote, they having been empowered simply at a meeting of the stockholders, and a subsequent meeting being empowered to authorize the withholding of that power, the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia ought to be passed. And there is another reason which prompts me to say this.

I remember to have read, not more than a year ago, in a public journal of prominence—I will not presume to give the name of the paper or magazine, but I read it while in the barber shop below here, just about a year ago now—a very severe criticism of the conduct of one of these great telegraph companies. The article went on to say that whenever there is an invention of importance which tends to cheapen the service, the installation of which would necessitate any considerable expenditure on the part of the company, it simply buys up the invention and never puts it in practice, but that, on the contrary, it has been raising rates systematically for a number of years, and raised them only a very short time ago.

Mr. PEARRE. After consultation with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] we have agreed on an amendment which I think will meet the views of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and in the form in which it is modified the committee will agree to it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Under the circumstances I do not think they should be permitted to merge without the consent of Congress.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not think they should.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Telepost Company, a corporation duly established under the laws of the State of Maine, having its principal or home office in the city of Portland, in that State, and a branch office located in the Union Trust Building, in the city of Washington, D. C., and organized for the purpose of transacting a general telegraph business, and of constructing, owning, and operating the telepost system of telegraphy throughout the United States, and elsewhere, is hereby authorized to transact its said general business and to construct, own, and operate its said system of telegraphy in the District of Columbia, and to make suitable and necessary connections between its lines and extensions in the District of Columbia, and all other parts of its system; and especially to construct, own, and operate an overhead line of its telegraph from the boundary line between the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia, in a southerly or westerly direction, to a point where it may be necessary to lay conduits and install underground telegraph lines, whence said company is authorized to lay conduits and install underground telegraph lines therein by any route or routes which may be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to a point at or near the crossing of Fifteenth street and New York avenue NW., or other points convenient for the city terminus of its business; and also to lay similar conduits and install telegraph lines and wire connections for branch offices, the location of the same to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Said Telepost Company shall repair, restore, and make good the surface of all streets in which said company may lay conduits. The cost thereof and of all restoration of street surfaces and of all damages to persons or property, caused by any construction, excavation, or in any other manner, by the operations herein authorized, shall be borne and paid solely by said Telepost Company.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, in line 5, strike out "Portland" and insert "Augusta."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move the adoption of that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 21, strike out all after the word "Columbia" and all down to and including line 2, on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The cost of repairing, restoring, and making good the surface of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed by said company in the construction of the work herein authorized, and of all work incidental to such construction and restoration, including the necessary inspection of the same, shall be borne and paid by said Telepost Company, and all such work shall be constructed in accordance with plans approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and under permits therefor issued by them."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. NYE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On February 28, 1910:

H. R. 13145. An act for the relief of John W. Dul and C. M. Cox.

On March 1, 1910:

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to convey thanks to the Government of Italy for certain gifts.

On March 2, 1910:

H. R. 970. An act for the relief of Edward C. Kittle;

H. R. 10106. An act authorizing the acceptance by the United States Government from the Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, of a proposed gift of land contiguous to the Andersonville National Cemetery, in the State of Georgia;

H. R. 17160. An act to authorize the Oregon Trunk Railway of the State of Washington to construct a bridge across the Columbia River and Celilo Canal;

H. R. 19967. An act to authorize Thomas J. Ewing, George B. Patton, Otto Burger, William Cecil, and Milton E. Foster to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River;

H. R. 18586. An act amending sections 246 and 247, Revised Statutes;

H. R. 15676. An act to provide for the extension of the underground system of the City and Suburban Railway Company on North Capitol street, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16331. An act to acquire land in the vicinity of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge for the extension of certain streets; and

H. R. 17514. An act to authorize the extension of Twenty-third and R streets SE., in the District of Columbia.

On March 3, 1910:

H. R. 16364. An act to amend in part section 658 of the Revised Statutes.

On March 5, 1910:

H. R. 19278. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. J. Res. 142. Joint resolution for appointment of members of Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers;

H. R. 18019. An act to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice in certain civil and criminal cases in the western district of Arkansas;" and

H. R. 18681. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

On March 8, 1910:

H. R. 13410. An act to modify the One hundred and twenty-second and One hundred and twenty-fourth Articles of War, and to repeal the One hundred and twenty-third Article of War.

On March 12, 1910:

H. R. 13899. An act granting unto the Hot Springs Street Railway Company, its successors and assigns, the right to maintain and operate its electric railway along the southern border of that portion of the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, known as the Whittington Lake Reserve Park;

H. R. 18593. An act to authorize the transfer of the government highway, known as the Alter road, to the city of Detroit, Mich.;

H. R. 19558. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to effect an exchange of a certain parcel of land owned by the United States for another parcel owned by the Cave Hill Cemetery Company, of Louisville, Ky.; and

H. R. 20835. An act authorizing the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico to assign the said judges to the several judicial districts of the Territory.

THE TELEPOST COMPANY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, one word. I notice in the lines stricken out the words—

> The cost thereof and of all restoration of street surfaces, and of all damages to persons or property caused by any construction—

And so forth.

In the amendment offered by the committee I do not find anything in regard to payment for any damages to persons or property.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The first provision was in the original bill, and the second is the amendment sent up by the District Commissioners, which was adopted by the committee for that reason.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then I assume there could be no damages to persons or property, but only to the streets.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think there could be any other.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is what the commissioners recommended?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This is word for word what the commissioners desired to have inserted there. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 3. That the said Telepost Company is hereby authorized to apply forthwith to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for their approval and permission under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1905, entitled "An act regulating the use of telegraph wires in the District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by the term, "shall apply forthwith to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?"

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In this case I assume it will be about as soon as the bill becomes a law, because they are very desirous of getting into the District of Columbia and getting to work.

Mr. MANN. Would three months be sufficient?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It might be, under some circumstances.

Mr. MANN. I want to know.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Knowing that these gentlemen are desirous of extending their lines everywhere in the country, that they want to establish them between here and New York and between here and Baltimore just as quickly as they can get the permission of Congress, I assume that it will be.

Mr. MANN. My suspicion is that this bill is mainly to be used for advertising purposes, and for that reason I should like a limitation a little more definite than "forthwith." If anybody can define to me what "forthwith" means, I shall be very glad to have such a definition. Does the gentleman object to inserting a limit of three months?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "forthwith" and insert "within three months of the passage of this act."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In line 18, page 3, strike out the word "forthwith" and insert "within three months of the time of the passage of this act."

Mr. WILEY. The gentleman had better put in "passage by the House and the Senate."

Mr. MANN. The law will not be passed until it is signed by the President.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking some questions. I notice that this is a Maine corporation capitalized for $18,000,000. How much has been paid in?

Mr. PEARRE. One million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WEEKS. How many stockholders are there?

Mr. PEARRE. I do not know. The par value of the shares is $10, and I think they are very widely distributed.

Mr. WEEKS. How much stock is it estimated will have to be sold at par to install all the service which it is presumed will be installed if this franchise is granted?

Mr. PEARRE. Our information is that the amount of stock sold and paid for will amply provide for the expense of installing this service.

Mr. WEEKS. The committee does not intend to give the impression that you can establish this service all over the country for a million and a half dollars?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; but they are selling stock at par every day, I understand.

Mr. PEARRE. I do not understand that that is especially pertinent to this bill granting permission for the company to come into the District of Columbia.

Mr. WEEKS. I think it is especially pertinent, because there are many companies organized for the purpose of selling stock. They get a location to enable them to do it, and a location in the city of Washington is a matter of importance, and it ought not to be given to any corporation that has not real financial standing.

Mr. CARLIN. That objection has been cured by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois limiting their time to three months, and by the amendment which I am offering to prevent them from disposing of the franchise and privilege in the District of Columbia, and compelling them to operate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WEEKS. Does it compel them to operate?

Mr. CARLIN. It prevents them from disposing of their franchise.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why does the gentleman from Massachusetts question that this is not in good faith when they are already in Boston, St. Louis, Chicago, Indianapolis, and expect to be in Kansas City in a few weeks? They already have two-thirds of a right of way between Chicago and Detroit and between Detroit and Toledo, and are seeking to extend a line from Toledo to Cleveland and to Pittsburg, Philadelpia, and New York.

Mr. WEEKS. I am rising in no critical spirit. I am simply trying to get information.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have six offices in Boston, I am told.

Mr. WEEKS. Very likely; but when I see a company organized in Maine, with a capital of $18,000,000 and a list of voting trustees like this, it leads me to ask questions about the financial standing of the company.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman question that this company can not do with $18,000,000 what the Western Union Company and the Postal Telegraph Company have done?

Mr. WEEKS. No; I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As a matter of fact, this company by their system can send 1,000 words a minute over one wire, and it only costs them a quarter or a half as much to do the business as is done by the old companies.

Mr. WEEKS. I am asking for information. I wanted to know how this company is to be financed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. By selling their stock, and it is widely scattered all over the country. I understand that they have never sold a share for less than par.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the gentleman from Michigan imagine that all these letters which we have been receiving come from stockholders?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do. I imagine they are all from stockholders. I know nothing about it except what Members say to me. I am not responsible for any of the letters that have been received.

Mr. PEARRE. I know that many of the letters come from stockholders, because they have told me so.

Mr. YOUNG of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have had a number of letters from subscribers to stock, men that I know, men who have asked me to support the measure, men living in New York and Brooklyn.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the gentleman consider that a reason for passing such legislation or a reason for considering it more critically?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. It is sufficient reason to me to look into the matter carefully and give it all the thought which I can. I think it is a proper measure.

Mr. BURLESON. And to give it support if no substantial reason is offered why it should not be supported?

Mr. YOUNG of New York. That is the fact.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 22, page 3:
"And the lines and operations of said company shall be subject to the provisions of said act and to all general laws regulating the use of telegraph lines in the said District."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to that amendment. Does the gentleman desire to discuss it?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I desire only to have the amendment passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section:
"SEC. 4. That this company, through its proper officials, shall make affidavit to the board of personal tax appraisers, on or before the 1st day of August of each year, as to the amount of its gross receipts within the District of Columbia for the preceding year ending the 30th of June, and shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia per annum on such gross receipts 4 per cent."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 4, after the word "cent," insert:
"And in addition thereto the real estate owned by said Telepost Company in the District of Columbia shall be taxed as other real estate in said District."

Mr. MANN. Real estate and personal property?

Mr. KAHN. Real estate. Under this amendment the real estate of the Telepost Company in the District of Columbia shall be taxed as the real estate of other corporations is taxed. The general law provides especially that the real estate shall also be taxed, and that the payment of the percentage on the gross receipts of the corporation by implication is not all the tax that the company shall pay in the District.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It did not seem to me that this by implication exempted the company from the payment of its ordinary taxes, but the gentleman's amendment would exempt the company from the payment of any personal-property tax.

Mr. KAHN. The amendment which I offer is simply in line with the general law. The general law provides that these corporations shall pay a percentage of their gross receipts, and then it adds that in addition thereto they shall pay taxes on their real estate.

Mr. MANN. We just passed a law this morning——

Mr. KAHN. Yes; but that bill may not pass the Senate.

Mr. MANN. We just passed a bill this morning. Does that bill provide for the payment of the tax on the gross receipts in lieu of other taxation?

Mr. KAHN. No; it provides for the payment of a tax on the gross receipts, and then it adds:

And in addition thereto the real estate owned by each national or other incorporated bank, and each trust, gas, electric lighting, and * * * telephone company in the District of Columbia shall be taxed as other real estate in said District.

Mr. MANN. This 4 per cent is supposed to be in lieu of personal-property taxes. Is that the point of it?

Mr. KAHN. I presume so.

Mr. MANN. Then it is a good deal of a gold brick.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then it is like some other corporations.

Mr. MANN. That is all right. We have plenty of them.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, the general law now provides for the payment of these percentages on the gross receipts, and in order that there should be no implication that this company should escape further taxation that provision which I just read should be inserted in the law. My purpose in offering the amendment on this bill was to put this company on the same plane with other corporations that are now doing business in the District.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How can the company arrive at the gross receipts in the District of Columbia? Does that mean the amount of money that is collected in the District of Columbia, or the amount of business that is transacted in the District?

Mr. KAHN. I presume that is what it refers to. The existing law takes in telephone companies and makes them pay a percentage on their gross receipts, and I dare say that the gross receipts are the moneys that are paid in in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. A bill has just been passed, which is not yet a law, of course——

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will pardon me, there is now a general law, but it does not apply to telegraph companies, so we inserted in that law a provision to tax the telegraph companies just as the telephone companies are now taxed under that law.

Mr. MANN. Well, the telephone company's business is mostly local.

Mr. KAHN. There is a great deal of out-of-town business.

Mr. MANN. Suppose a man runs up a bill of $100 with the telegraph company with the office in New York. Is that part of the gross receipts of the telephone company, or the District of Columbia, or otherwise?

Mr. KAHN. I think it is part of the gross receipts of the District.

Mr. MANN. The money is not paid in the District.

Mr. KAHN. But the business originates here, and is part of the business of the District.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Suppose a business house here sold a man a stove and the man went over to New York, and they sent a bill collector over there after him and he paid for it over in New York. Would that be a part of the business of the concern here in the District of Columbia or in New York?

Mr. MANN. There would be no tax on that; nobody will ever find it and it is supposing an impossible case so far as the tax is concerned. Here is the case where an official of a company determines what the business is in the District of Columbia and what are the gross receipts, what portion is in the District of Columbia, and what portion outside of the District of Columbia; and if so, is anybody in control over the returns by that official of the company?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The law provides that in reference to gas, electric lighting, and telegraph companies that they shall make an affidavit. We provide here in section 4:

SEC. 4. That this company, through its proper officials, shall make affidavit to the board of personal tax appraisers, on or before the 1st day of August of each year, as to the amount of its gross receipts within the District of Columbia for the preceding year ending the 30th of June, and shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia per annum on such gross receipts 4 per cent.

Some are fixed at 4 per cent, some at 6, and some at different per cents, but the District Commissioners sent this amendment fixing the amount to be paid on the gross receipts of the telepost company the same as the telephone company pays here in the District.

Mr. MANN. I am not posted as to how the law works, if it is the law, but I think a baby could walk around it without any trouble or go through it without any difficulty.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They do not seem to have any trouble in enforcing it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they have any trouble or not. These people under this provision themselves determine how much taxes they shall pay. They determine how much the business is in the District of Columbia, and you confer no authority upon any government official to ascertain whether this statement is true or not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not fair to assume that if some official of the company makes a false affidavit that they can bring him into court?

Mr. KAHN. It would be the duty of the corporation counsel to do so.

Mr. MANN. It is never done, never has been done, and never will be done. What you are proposing now is to attack a man for forgery in reference to a complicated set of accounts.

Mr. KAHN. It has never been done here because the commissioners, I suppose, believe the officers have all the information in regard to the gross receipts.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the gentleman from California a question. How are these gross receipts made up? Will it be gross receipts of the whole system or gross receipts of the line from here to New York, or how are they going to be made up?

Mr. KAHN. No; the gross receipts in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAWNEY. For services within the District of Columbia?

Mr. KAHN. Receipts from the offices in the District of Columbia. No matter where the telegrams go, the receipts will be from the money received by the company in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I can answer the question of the gentleman. The telegrams paid in the city of Washington are credited to the city of Washington. If a telegram is not collected in the city of Washington, that is paid at the other end and credited to that city. If a telegram is sent from Chicago and collected at Washington, it is credited to Washington; and they keep these reports every day and make their report to the auditor every month.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROTHERMEL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 13893. An act to authorize the extension of Forty-first street NW.;

H. R. 13864. An act to extend Fourth street SE.;

H. R. 11878. An act to change the name of Twenty-third street north of Calvert street, in the District of Columbia, to Woodley place;

H. R. 20164. An act authorizing the extension of Military road NW., in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 19785. An act to authorize the extension of Columbia road NW., in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 16915. An act to direct that Jefferson street NW., between Fourteenth street and Colorado avenue, be stricken from the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia;

H. R. 16916. An act to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways plan, District of Columbia; and

H. R. 16824. An act for the relief of Daniel H. Wiggin.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 19028) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. OWEN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE TELEPOST COMPANY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY] that that will be so. In the State of Minnesota we have a gross-earnings tax on the earnings of all railroads. Say a road, the Northern Pacific, starting at St. Paul, receives at its St. Paul office a certain amount of freight destined to Seattle. The State of Minnesota does not collect 4 per cent on the amount of through freight collected. That is not classed as the gross earnings on which we collect a tax of 4 per cent. We collect on the amount earned in carrying that freight from St. Paul to the State line, and that is the way the tax under this bill would be assessed.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY]—suppose a telegram is sent from Chicago to Washington collect, and the money is collected here; where it is credited?

Mr. CARY. Washington.

Mr. MANN. Suppose a telegram originates in Washington and is sent to Chicago collect, and the money is collected there; where is that credited?

Mr. CARY. Chicago.

Mr. MANN. So that the business that originates here that is not prepaid has nothing to do with the gross receipts in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CARY. Not according to the system of bookkeeping they now have.

Mr. MANN. Of course, there is a very large amount of business originating in Washington which is sent collect, for which no credit will be received.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has expired.

Mr. PEARRE. Does the Chair understand that the committee has accepted the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. PEARRE. The committee accepts that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question or two of the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to the present status of the company in its physical development. Has it established a business, and is it now sending messages?

Mr. PEARRE. It has established a business and is sending messages, as the gentleman will see in the report if he will look at it.

Mr. SMITH of California. I have not had time to do so. What I had in mind was, if this would not be a good opportunity to begin the requirement of these interstate concerns to take out a federal charter. At least two Presidents have called our attention to the very great necessity of bringing concerns transacting interstate business under a more perfect federal control. Now, if this concern wants to come into the District of Columbia, we might require it to come in here as a District or national corporation, and not bury itself under the laws of the State of Maine, which it has done, for some purpose connected with the peculiar corporation laws of that State.

Mr. PEARRE. Does the gentleman desire a reply to his question as to whether they are doing business now? If the gentleman will look at the report, he will find the following:

The company has lines from Boston to Portland, Me., and to towns along the line that have been in continuous business operation for more than a year.

In the West it has lines in continuous business operation from Chicago to St. Louis and from St. Louis west to Sedalia and east to Terre Haute and to Indianapolis.

From Sedalia it is securing rights of way and constructing west to Kansas City and Omaha.

From Chicago it is securing rights of way and constructing east to Detroit.

It is negotiating for further connections east from Indianapolis to Columbus and Cleveland.

It has terminal facilities in the business centers of Boston, Chicago, and St. Louis that are very valuable.

In addition the company has negotiations and offers relating to connections and rights of way and terminal facilities in widely separated parts of the country which can not be closed till intermediate connections have been secured to make them available, but all of which, as its lines are gradually extended, will be of great value.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. PEARRE. The committee accepts that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It will have to be read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding:

"SEC. 5. This company shall not have the power to dispose of its franchise or privilege in the District of Columbia by merger or otherwise with any other public service corporation or person."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CARLIN. I desire to offer another amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following as section 6:
"Unless the company shall, within twelve months after complying with section 3 of this act, actually begin its operation in the District of Columbia, then all rights and privileges herein granted shall terminate."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to hear that amendment read again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman what would be the effect if an injunction be sued out?

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What would be the effect if an injunction was sued out against this company? They get into a suit, and the time is limited in which they shall come into the city.

Mr. CARLIN. That would not prevent them coming in.

Mr. MANN. That is a favorite way of extending the time. That is a practice that has been resorted to in the city in which I live, and has been for twenty years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. You say that unless they begin operations within twelve months their right to come in shall be forfeited. Does that mean to begin construction?

Mr. CARLIN. It means actual operation. That means construction of the line, but does not mean transmission of messages.

Mr. HARDWICK. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Was this sort of construction put upon the other public-service companies that have been given these franchises?

Mr. CARLIN. I do not know; but it ought to have been.

Mr. HARDWICK. Ought this company to be treated differently from the Western Union and the telephone companies?

Mr. CARLIN. I have but one reason for the introduction of this amendment, and to be frank about it, I have received from farmers living in my district within the last week, over 25 letters advising me that they have taken stock in this corporation, which, I understand, is a resident of the State of Maine, and that they desire this company to enter the District of Columbia for the purpose of operation. Assuming that the company is acting in good faith, and believing it to be my duty, when my constituents are solicited to take stock in the company, to protect them as far as I can, I do desire to see that the company is actually operated in the District of Columbia. That is the only object of this amendment.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman in his amendment uses the word "operation." As I understood him that means the same as construction.

Mr. CARLIN. The construction is for the purpose of building these lines for their operation.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, I understood the gentleman to use the word "operation." Do I understand the gentleman understands that to mean beginning the construction of the work?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No.

Mr. CARLIN. Are you going to answer the question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Operation does not mean construction.

Mr. CARLIN. If you will permit me, I will answer.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. You have got the right to answer.

Mr. CARLIN. I would like to say to the gentleman that my purpose in using that language is simply this: If they begin the construction of the work, which is designed for the purpose of transmitting messages, that is sufficient manifestation of their purpose. I think that is an entirely correct construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say this: Does not the gentleman think it would be better to use the word "construction" where he uses the word "operation?" There are many of us who believe that the use of the word "operation" means that they were engaged in the business of transmitting and receiving messages.

Mr. CARLIN. My reason for not accepting that amendment is this: I do not mean that under this amendment that is now being considered by the committee that these men shall be undertaking to do business in the District and have a franchise that they may go out and sell stock upon without doing business; but if they are engaged in a bona fide effort to do a bona fide work that they shall be allowed to operate within the District of Columbia.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, I move, Mr. Chairman, to strike out the word "operation" and insert in lieu thereof "construction" as an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to amend the amendment by striking out the word "operation" and inserting the word "construction."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment is proper. After hearing the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN], I understand that this is what he means, and we all know how, practically speaking, it would be impossible generally for this company to complete its plant and be in actual operation in twelve months. There are many reasons why to expect that progress on the part of the company would be unreasonable, and this word "construction" is strong enough and is actually what the gentleman from Virginia intends and means by the word "operation."

Mr. MANN. If this company should put up one telegraph pole, that would be beginning the work of "construction."

Mr. FINLEY. I understand.

Mr. MANN. What would this amendment amount to if it required only the erection of one telegraph pole out here and nothing further? Would it not be better to extend the time in which to require the company to operate?

Mr. FINLEY. A year is not long enough.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. CARLIN. If the gentleman will permit me for a moment, I think I can make myself plain. This bill provides, in addition to operating within the District of Columbia, certain conditions when they reach the District of Columbia line. If you use the word "construction," the moment they reach the District of Columbia line, under this bill, by sticking a pick in the ground or digging up a quarter of a mile or less of trenches they could continue to operate in the District of Columbia without ever doing anything more. They would not be hampered by the word "operation."

Mr. FINLEY. Then, it would be easy enough to remedy that by enlarging the amendment so as to provide that they should begin construction within a year, and actual operation, say, within two years or three years, or whatever is a reasonable time.

Mr. MANN. They can take out an application for a permit within three months, and then, say, operation within three years.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will consent to change my amendment and make it read:

Construction within six months and operation within two years.

Mr. MANN. Operation within two years is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and modify the same. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Unless the company shall within six months after complying with section 3 of this act actually begin its construction, and shall begin its operation within two years.

Mr. CARLIN. I will accept that.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, section 3 contains a provision that within a certain time the company shall apply to the District Commissioners for permission to disturb the streets, and so forth. Now, you say in this amendment that within six months after the application they must begin work or lose their charter. It may be that the commissioners will not have passed upon the application within six months.

Mr. CARLIN. Then they can be mandamused.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This means after they get permission.

Mr. SMITH of California. Nevertheless they can not begin to dig the streets and set up poles until that application is granted; and yet this amendment says that within six months after making the application they must begin to dig. The commissioners may hold up the application six or seven months, and by the terms of this amendment defeat the charter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think they are willing to take their chances with the Commissioners of the District. Therefore I ask for a vote.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:
"The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has great faith in the good intentions of this company, I am free to say that I have always looked with suspicion on any company, the main purpose of which seems to be to sell its stock to people not informed in reference to it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment. If this company possesses the good thing which it claims it has, it will have no difficulty in obtaining all the capital necessary to carry on its business. But instead of endeavoring to obtain the capital in the places where capital is to be obtained, it apparently is seeking to sell its stock through magazine advertisements to people who do not know, and can not know, the facts in reference to the management of the company, or in reference to the patents of the company, or in reference to the prospects of the company. If this franchise is to be really used, and this company succeeds in carrying on business, it will be a good thing for the company, but if the passage of this act is used for the purpose of advertising to the people to whom they are endeavoring to sell stock that this company has received the approval of Congress, and uses this act when it becomes a law, together with the report upon this bill, as an advertisement, it will bring sorrow to many a home where money is given for this use and no use is really made of it except as a stock-jobbing operation. For that reason it seems to me highly desirable for Congress at least to reserve the power, if it finds that this company is not to carry on business, but to simply sell its stock, to repeal the act.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As far as the committee is concerned, we will accept the gentleman's amendment. But the gentleman's argument applies to the American Telegraph and Telephone Company just as much as to this company, for they are sending out advertisements all over the country asking people to buy their stock. I have no hesitation in saying that these people could go and sell these valuable patents to some moneyed men in this country, providing they would surrender their rights, but the people of this country would not enjoy the reduction in telegraph rates as they will under this system, and as we have seen for the last two weeks from the Western Union Company, who have said to the American people that they will now send out night messages of 50 words for 25 cents. Undoubtedly they would never have come down to these rates except through the action of the Telepost, and the difference between the Telepost and the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph is that they only do it at certain hours of the night, whereas the Telepost is doing it at all hours of the day and night.

Mr. MANN. They are promising to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They are fulfilling their promises wherever the system is in operation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I fully indorse what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said. I think that great care should be taken in granting a company of this kind the privileges which this bill seeks to grant. I know that out in my State, North Dakota, this company has sold considerable stock. I have no objection to their selling the stock if the company will do what they are promising to do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does he know where they have promised to do anything that they have not done?

Mr. GRONNA. I simply know that they are promising to do great things. In the first place, they promise to save to the public great sums of money; in the second place, they hold out to stockholders the possibility of making large dividends.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are they not fulfilling their promises as rapidly as they can?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know. I am in favor of the proposition or amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I believe that we should safeguard and protect the people of this country in the most careful way whenever we pass legislation of this kind. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. Is it the idea of this company to distribute its stock over the entire country, a certain amount in each State?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; they are selling the stock to whoever will buy it at $10 a share. I am informed that they have never sold a share for less than par. I understand further that no one can buy more than a thousand dollars' worth of stock. That is another safeguard, so that the moneyed men can not get hold of the stock and the Telepost be absorbed by the Western Union or the Postal Telegraph Company.

Mr. GRONNA. I have received a number of letters from men who have invested in this stock and who can not afford to lose their money—preachers, teachers, and a number of others. It seems to me that it must be pretty well advertised. I do not care how well it is being advertised, if they will go on and commence operations as soon as possible. If they do not, it should be the privilege of Congress to take their franchise away from them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. CARY. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended two or three minutes to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the time of the gentleman from North Dakota be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. I wish to ask the gentleman if he knows that this company asked permission to make an arrangement with the different street-car lines and telephone companies to come in through the conduit before they asked this privilege here of Congress?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know anything about it; I am trying to get some information about this company.

Mr. CARY. I want to say to the gentleman that they did try to come in without going to this trouble or this expense, so that they could commence operations immediately, but they could not get permission.

Mr. GRONNA. But they are selling stock, and the public is entitled to know what they are buying. If this company will do what they say they will do, I shall be glad to support this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They are not only selling stock, but they are building lines and are in operation in some cities.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan one or two more questions. How long has this company been in operation?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know. I think they built their first line from Boston to Portland.

Mr. WEEKS. How long ago?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. More than a year, anyway.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he has ever seen a financial statement of the company?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, sir.

Mr. WEEKS. Has the gentleman ever seen a statement of the earnings for the Boston-Portland line?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the gentleman know anything about what they have earned upon it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. WEEKS. Have the earnings been sufficient to warrant the building of additional lines without selling stock for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the gentleman know how much it has cost to sell the million and a half dollars' worth of stock that has been sold?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know.

Mr. WEEKS. Does anybody connected with the committee know?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; and I am not surprised if they are not so informed. I understand the Postal Telegraph Company had built thousands of miles of its lines, and then Mr. Mackay was obliged to put his hand into his pocket in order to continue the work, and did at different times contribute a million or more. It would not be surprising if this company had to do the same thing.

Mr. WEEKS. That has nothing to do with the question which I asked.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Only by comparison it has.

Mr. WEEKS. It is a bad comparison. Now, nobody would be in favor of giving a charter to the company if he really knew that the company was selling the stock for the purpose of getting money and spending that money for the purpose of selling more stock.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Has the gentleman any information of that kind?

Mr. WEEKS. None whatever; but I am trying to get it. I would like to ask any member of the Committee on the District of Columbia if he has ever seen a financial statement issued by the Telepost Company, or if he can inform the House what it has cost to sell the million and a half dollars' worth of stock that has been sold?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know what it cost; but I do know this, that they are selling their stock and building their lines.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much stock has been sold?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman or somebody has a great deal of information about this company which is favorable to it. Where did that information come from?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where does my information come from?

Mr. MANN. Where does the information come from that is set out in this report?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. By letters from the president of the company and from Mr. Jules Guthridge, of this city, who has charge of an office here in the Union Trust Building at the corner of Fifteenth and H streets.

Mr. MANN. Would it not have been a very simple matter to learn how much stock had been sold and how much of the money realized from the stock had been used in actual construction, and how much had been paid to officials of the company for selling the stock?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, it might have been.

Mr. MANN. Might have been!

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but for one I do not deem that information absolutely necessary in order to give them a franchise in the District of Columbia to do business.

Mr. MANN. It never occurred to the gentleman that Congress might want to know whether this was a bona fide corporation intending to do a telegraph business or whether it was only intended to "do" the stockholders.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The report sets forth just exactly what the facts are.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; it does; and they have been establishing their lines in different cities of this Union—not in little hamlets or villages, but in the great cities like Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Boston, and elsewhere. That is the proof of what they are doing.

Mr. MANN. The report sets forth a good many things that seem to be favorable to the company, but it does not set forth information which Congress might properly have in considering the bill; and if the gentleman's committee could obtain information so favorable to the company, about which we have no guaranty as to its truth unless the gentleman says it is true, then the gentleman's committee could certainly obtain information in reference to the company, which Congress ought to have.

The gentleman's committee knows how many telegrams can be sent in an hour. They have investigated all of that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, no; we do not know how many telegrams can be sent in an hour. I do not know any member of the committee who has made that statement.

Mr. MANN. Well, they give the statement of the company, then. They say:

> This will be easily understood when it is remembered that a thousand words a minute represents 25 telegrams of 40 words each, or 1,500 an hour.

Perhaps the committee does not say that, but I find it in the report.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, I thought the gentleman had reference to what had been said here in debate.

Mr. MANN. I will not embarrass the gentleman if he is not familiar with the report.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, the gentleman does not embarrass me. I thought the gentleman had reference to what was said by the members of the committee on the floor in debate.

Mr. MANN. I have read the report——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am glad the gentleman has, and I hope he has been benefited by reading it.

Mr. MANN. I was. I obtained a lot of information.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF VAN BUREN STREET NW.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 19554.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Van Buren street NW. from its present eastern terminus, west of Fifth street, to its present western terminus, east of Third street north, with a width of 90 feet: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said extension, plus the costs and expenses of said proceeding, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits: And provided further, That nothing in said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said code shall be construed to authorize the jury to assess less than the aggregate amount of the damages awarded for and in respect of the land to be condemned and the costs and expenses of the proceeding hereunder.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be expended from the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages; to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out of line 3, page 1, the word "in," where it first occurs, and insert in lieu thereof the word "under."

Strike out of line 5, page 1, the words "passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "dedication to the District of Columbia of not less than 80 per cent of the land necessary to open Van Buren street from Piney Branch road to its present western terminus east of Third street west, with a width of 90 feet."

Strike out of lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, page 1, the words "Van Buren street NW., from its present eastern terminus, west of Fifth street, to its present western terminus, east of Third street north, with a width of 90 feet," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "said street between the limits named according to the plans for the permanent system of highways of the District of Columbia."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on this.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman. How much time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Two or three minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the Members who are present that yesterday afternoon I got an automobile and went out to this place. After hunting all over the country out there, and going through a good many fields I finally found it, but I never would have been able to have done so unless I had had a map, and not even then if I had not found a man who lives out there who told me where it was. This bill proposes to open a street through a field about half a mile long; and then there is another bill just like this, which proposes to open another street parallel to it, just one square away. Both of these streets begin nowhere and end nowhere.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman a question? Do they not begin at Piney Branch road?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes, but there is nothing there except some vacant, empty land from the beginning of this proposed street to the end of it, and in this distance of about half a mile there is no house or——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. May I ask the gentleman another question? Is not this the usual way in which streets are opened up through vacant property, and in this case it is all assessed upon the people, and it is no expense to the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But it is assessed, my dear sir, at a low valuation, and it is nothing, in my opinion, except a real estate transaction. It is proposed to macadamize streets through fields——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This bill does not propose to macadamize a street.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That will come next.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of course that may all come in the future when you have to pave and improve it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has been out on this ground, and I have not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And I will say to the gentleman that if he ever wants to go there he will save a great deal of time by taking the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad——

Mr. MANN. I never want to go.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (continuing). And go to a little station called Lamond, 6 miles out.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the people there wish to improve their property?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This is nothing but farm property.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I may be an owner of a farm out there, and suppose somebody out at this station desires to build a house in this way on this property. How else can they do it unless a street is opened in a manner like this? Suppose everybody there wants to open a street.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is nobody there; that is the trouble.

Mr. MANN. I mean the owners of the property.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is farm property now.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but suppose——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can say to the gentleman he can stand on a hilltop very near this little railroad station, Lamond, and look clear across the country to a place called, I think, Villa Flora, or something of that kind, and see no houses between the two points.

Mr. MANN. You can not put houses there until you get streets.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am afraid the gentleman, in taking an automobile ride yesterday, did not see where they proposed to lay out both Van Buren and Underwood streets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the committee that I paid a man $10 to take me there——

Mr. MANN. That is too much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (continuing). And after I got there I found a man who also had a map, a man by the name of Smith, and he and I went over the place and looked at it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the engineer commissioner, with several members of the committee, went out there the other day in an automobile, and I can not conceive what the gentleman means by saying a station on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

One object in opening this street is to make it extend to Third street, where it will meet the Baltimore and Washington Transit Railroad Company. We have recently authorized and given those people a franchise to come in here, and they are coming down Third street. The other end of this road is to connect Van Buren street, as well as Underwood street, with Third street at this proposed transit railway.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It runs up nearly to the railroad. I saw trains passing there, and I asked the people what road it was, and they told me it was the Baltimore and Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If distance makes any difference—and I do not think it ought to—it is a meritorious case. I understand it is about 5 miles from the District Building.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And you are proposing to spend a lot of money out there to open streets in the open fields.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is assessed as benefits. The Government does not pay a dollar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I beg the gentleman's pardon. They have now 75 per cent of the land. I can not understand why they are willing to give 75 per cent of it and not willing to give the remainder.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That, of course, is for the people in that locality to say for themselves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The people out there tell me that only two people own these tracts of land.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I may say to the gentleman in the discussion of these matters I do not attempt to know who owns the property, or whether they are rich or poor. The question with me is whether, in my judgment, it is a meritorious proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Two men who live there and myself got up in a little piece of woods near the railroad there, and as best we could followed out the lines. They told me that two old estates own all that land out there.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Granting that they do, if it is a meritorious case——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I see no merit in it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who contributes the other 20 per cent?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under the existing law it is condemned and an assessment of benefits is made in accordance with the law, and then the District advances the money and receives it back in five payments at 4 per cent, just as is done in all this class of legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who builds the street?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Committee on Appropriations later on desires to make appropriations, why, then the District will pay half the expense and the General Government will pay the other half so far as the streets are concerned. When we come to build sidewalks the owners pay half of that assessment in the first instance and the District of Columbia and the General Government the other half, and when the repairs are made, not only in the old city, but throughout the District, where the sidewalks are kept up, half and half by the General Government and by the District.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who maintains the street lines?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I said if the Committee on Appropriations desires to make the appropriations the expense will be borne by the District and by the General Government, half and half.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that the people who live at that little railroad station, right where Third street comes near them there, told me that they did not have any water out there.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That may be. These things come afterwards.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That station is 7 miles out on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr MANN Does the gentleman know who owns the land or how many owners there are of the land which it will be necessary to use for the opening of this street?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say that the gentleman told me out there that there were only two owners.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know whether there is one owner or not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know whether there are two owners or not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not. Except this: That the District Commissioners say that there was no opposition to the passage of this bill. As the assessment of benefits are upon the public, and are no expense to the District, or the General Government, why, we did not deem it necessary to ask who owns the property.

Mr. MANN. Not in criticism of the gentleman; but has the gentleman any information as to whether the owners of the property could not have just dedicated it for the street without condemnation proceedings?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. By this bill they are to dedicate 75 per cent of it.

Mr. MANN. I know, but they have the power to dedicate the balance of the property, if they could dedicate 75 per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am mistaken; it is 80 per cent.

Mr. MANN. If they can dedicate 80 per cent of it, why can not they dedicate 100 per cent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is just what I want to know.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not prepared to say, except that that is the form in which the District Commissioners sent it to us. It provided in this case so much to be dedicated and so much to be condemned.

Mr. MANN. Then the bill as originally introduced. Was that prepared by the commissioners?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On that I am mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Or was that the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That was the amendment. It was originally introduced by Mr. Pratt.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands this proposition. That where property owners may dedicate but do not, and their property is condemned, while it may not cost the Government anything much, the condemnation award may be levied against other property which has entirely dedicated its property in the street. Now, is this bill for the purpose of having the Government raise money from one man who now has a street in order to pay for the property used for opening a street in front of another man's property?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. That is the effect of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, of course the benefits will be assessed, but the amount that will be paid is left to the jury.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the province of the jury; we are all informed with reference to that. If you open a street between two points along a street already opened, the property through which it has been opened has been having the benefits, and the property on each side has the benefit of the street, just as the property adjoining the opened street itself.

Now, if the reason for opening the street is because the people refused to open the street, and the Government has to use compulsion, that is one thing; but if the opening of the street is at the request of people who might dedicate it, that is another thing.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under the provisions of this bill they secure part by dedication, or a promise of dedication, and they get the rest by condemnation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to impress the committee with the fact that there are two bills, just alike—one to open Van Buren street and the other to open Underwood street. I have been on the ground, and they are through the same property, running parallel, just one square apart. Yet here are two bills.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not prepared to say; the gentleman may be.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am prepared to say it as a fact. I saw the property.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is my friend prepared to say that the whole property is owned by the same parties?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I know that the residents near that little railroad station told me that it was owned by two people.

Mr. MANN. The report of the commissioners in this case inclose a map, which is not printed, which says that they show in green the property and area which the commissioners are informed will be dedicated upon the passage of this bill and in red the area—that is, 14 per cent—which will be necessary to acquire by condemnation to permit the opening of the street, apparently indicating that there is over 80 per cent dedicated and 14 per cent which probably the owners will not dedicate by reason of the fact that they were private owners, or they were unable to dedicate it on account of their being minors.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can give the length of area of street already dedicated, 1,450 lineal feet, 130,950 square feet; length of area of street required to be dedicated by terms of amended bill, 1,000 lineal feet, 90,630 square feet; length of area of street to be condemned, 380 lineal feet, 34,200 square feet; approximate value of area to be condemned, $3,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is this piece of ground inside the limits of the city of Washington or outside?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is seven miles out.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In the District of Columbia?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How does this man get his land in the District of Columbia in the city of Washington?

Mr. MANN. The city of Washington is abolished.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is all the same.

Do not the laws of nearly every civilized community provide that when a man wants to convert a farm or a part of a farm into city lots he shall make a plat and dedicate the streets and the alleys? Why should not that rule apply to the city of Washington, just as it applies to any other city?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The whole District of Columbia is laid out under the highway plan.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is not laid out into streets.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is laid out in this way: They have made a study of the District and laid out what they call a "highway plan." Of course, all there is of these streets is the location on paper of where the streets will run in time, when they come to improve that portion of the District.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The milk in the cocoanut is that somebody owns some land out there that he has been using for farm purposes that now he wants to convert into town lots, and it will benefit no human being except the man who owns the land. If that is true, then why not let him dedicate the entire width of the street, and fix it up and bring it in without costing the people of the United States and the people of the District of Columbia a good big wad of money?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This bill is not costing the people anything.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This is just the thin edge of the wedge.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is just exactly like all our street-opening cases. The other day we passed a bill extending Massachusetts avenue clear out to the District line, and the argument of the gentleman would apply there just the same.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It ought to apply.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The House passed the bill extending Massachusetts avenue.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do not the District Commissioners devote their time and energy and money to filling the holes in these streets that we have already?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On that I will refer the gentleman to the Committee on Appropriations, which has that matter more directly in hand.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On one-half of the streets now you have to be very careful in crossing them, if you do not want to get your foot into a hole.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I quite agree with the gentleman that there are some defects in the pavements, but the engineer commissioner is making these improvements and repairs as rapidly as possible. We have a lot of old asphalt pavement from 20 to 25 years old, and now it is beginning to wear out very rapidly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I came here seventeen years ago, and it was in exactly the same fix then that it is now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It might have been, some portions of it; but I am told by the engineer commissioner, who has not been here more than a year, that the asphalt pavement in this city has probably lasted better than in any other great city in the Union, and for a longer period of time.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am opposed to opening up any new streets until they fix the old ones.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, are we in general debate? The bill has not been read for amendment, has it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to be recognized on this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. For how long?

Mr. SIMS. I will not use much time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can you give us any idea? We have a good deal of business to do. How long does the gentleman desire to be recognized for?

Mr. SIMS. I can not tell. I will not abuse the privilege. I suppose I have my rights, like any other Member.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have no desire to prevent the gentleman talking; but of course he knows that we have District day only once in two weeks, and we should like to make the best possible use of our time.

Mr. SIMS. I have not the slightest idea of delaying the business of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. When the gentleman from Michigan has finished what he has to say, I will take the floor in my own right.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to be courteous to the gentleman, and I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know one thing about this particular bill and this particular plat of ground, but I have had some experience in these matters. It is true that full and complete dedication can not always be had, because there may be minors who own some of the land. That may be the case here. But I want to call the committee's attention to what I regard as a mistaken policy upon the part of Congress, and that is to be continually authorizing the building up of suburban towns away out where they have no water, where they have no gas, where they have no sewerage, where they have nothing except an old field full of hills and hollows.

What follows? It is true, so far as opening up the streets or authorizing them to be opened, that nobody is hurt, because the property owners pay damages by way of benefits. I mean for dedication purposes. But as soon as these streets are authorized by Congress, immediately the commissioners first and then the Appropriation Committee are asked to make an appropriation to improve these streets, and sometimes they are asked to make appropriations to improve streets that have no improved street connection with the city and the town that is to be built up. Then there comes a demand for a water main, then a demand for a gas main. Gas mains do not cost the Government anything. Then comes the demand for a public school; that is at public expense. Then comes a demand sometimes for a library.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We have a bill of that kind on the calendar now.

Mr. SIMS. Perhaps somebody gives a library, but then comes a demand for attendants and maintenance.

I remember very well a few years ago when the major of police asked for an increase of 100 members of the police force. The strongest argument he made in favor of it was that Washington was scattered all over creation, and he showed—I do not remember how many—towns that I never dreamed of being in the District of Columbia which had to be policed with the police force that they had. He made a very good showing that it was impossible to put a proper police force in all of these little suburbs all over the District of Columbia and have enough left to properly police the congested portions of the city, where they were having robberies from the person in broad daylight. You can read Major Sylvester's report and see that that is a fact.

What is the interest of the city and the Government? What do we want to improve and build up these little out-of-the-way towns for—out too far to send the children to school in the city and too far out to come to church in the city—unless it be that the employees of the Government along a street car line want cheap homes in order to avoid the excessive rents in the city of Washington. Where that is the case I think it ought to be encouraged. I do not know anything about this particular case.

I had a friend who asked me to go before the appropriations subcommittee and ask it to improve a street that had been authorized for a good while. I got the map, and all maps look alike when you look on the face of them. I went to the members of the subcommittee and asked them why they did not do this. They said it was so far down in the list reported to them by the commissioners that they could not reach it. I then went to the commissioners, and they said they were doing the best they could. Finally I thought I would do what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] says he did, except that I did not get an automobile, for I was not able to—I went out part of the way in the street cars and then walked the balance of the way. I went to the street, or the proposed street, that I had asked the Appropriations Committee to appropriate for, and what was it? There was a hollow where you would have to put dirt in nearly as high as the roof of this building. I was complaining to the Appropriations Committee about it, I was complaining to the commissioners for not doing that which would cost an immense amount of money to do, and when I got out there I found instead of a village or town there were only two or three houses out in the woods.

Now, I do not know anything about this particular proposition, but I do think we ought to be careful about authorizing the building of a street away out five or six miles from the thickly settled portion of the city, that will be used as a foundation upon which to build demands for the expenditure of money in improving streets, then to grade and asphalt them, and then for water mains, schoolhouses, and all that kind of thing. All those things, as you know, bring a charge upon the Government, and where there is nothing but speculative purpose behind it, I do not think we ought to encourage it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the gentleman will agree with me that in all these street-opening matters the Committee on Appropriations goes out after it is authorized, and upon looking it over, if they do think it is proper, there is no further action.

Mr. SIMS. My recollection is that when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] was chairman of the subcommittee, that it did that very thing, but when he began to get old very rapidly—I suppose it was making the trips over these places——

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman from Tennessee ought to say that the gentleman from Massachusetts is getting old. He is still one of the youngest men in the House.

Mr. SIMS. He was removed as chairman of that subcommittee, and I supposed it was a matter of mercy. [Laughter.] Now, I believe Brother GARDNER of Michigan is chairman of that subcommittee.

Mr. MANN. He was promoted, not removed.

Mr. SIMS. Well, promoted then, and Brother GARDNER was demoted, because he was made chairman of that particular subcommittee.

Mr. MANN. He was promoted also.

Mr. SIMS. I thought that was the smallest subcommittee of the whole committee.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Tennessee will agree with me that the subcommittee, composed of gentlemen like Mr. GARDNER of Michigan and Mr. BURLESON, would be exceedingly careful about authorizing additional expense.

Mr. SIMS. Was the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] along?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He was not on this trip. The time has not come for action by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SIMS. I am not intending to either commend or condemn this particular project, but I have had experience enough and have gone out here enough and looked after things of this sort enough—and I do not mean this particular project—to lead me to the conclusion that a policy ought to be adopted by the House of not encouraging the building up of little suburbs away out which will be followed up by expense unless they are such as will be utilized by the government employees and by people who live in the District, who may thus have a suburban home when they can never have any other sort.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who paves these streets?

Mr. SIMS. The District of Columbia and the Government of the United States pays for the improvement of the streets.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is, building the streets?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The modus operandi is to first get its authorization. That does not cost anything?

Mr. SIMS. No; not in this kind of a case.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then the very minute they get the right to open up this street they commence harassing and bedeviling the Appropriations Committee and the city authorities to build the street, and that begins the cost to the United States and the District of Columbia, and that process goes on perpetually, does it not?

Mr. SIMS. The street would be worth nothing if it was not improved; and naturally, I suppose, if they want the street for street purposes, they seek an appropriation for its improvement. I would not call it "bedeviling." It may not amount to that. I do not know how strong a term to use in the matter. The Appropriations Committee could tell the gentleman exactly what kind of pressure is brought to bear, but I myself, personally, brought a little pressure to bear, and when I found out what I brought it upon and what it was I became very quiet.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman prefers the word "harass."

Mr. SIMS. I do not know whether they would call it "harassing" or not, but in any event when people want to build a town they want the streets improved, especially when it does not come out of their own pockets.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do they not improve the streets they have now?

Mr. SIMS. They have not got any.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I mean the streets in the city of Washington.

Mr. SIMS. I can not answer for that. I never go out at night unless it is to go to church; and consequently I do not know anything about the bad places in the streets.

Mr. COUDREY. Are we to infer from the gentleman's remarks, Mr. Chairman, that he is opposed to laying out these suburban tracts?

Mr. SIMS. As a matter of policy; yes.

Mr. COUDREY. What is to become of the common people, the people who work in the departments and whose wages have not been increased in so many years?

Mr. SIMS. I have excepted all cases where the object and purpose is to furnish that class of people with homes; but when you go away out over here east of the Eastern Branch and go to building streets way out in the sage grass, in the hills and hollows, the working people are not inhabiting those places.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri that there are hundreds and hundreds of acres of vacant land between the city proper and this place where these streets are proposed to be opened.

Mr. COUDREY. They may have to go out there to buy where the property is cheap, for the farther out they go the cheaper it is.

Mr. SABATH. Is there any possible way of reaching this property so that these people could go out there and purchase now?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know. I have said all the time that I know nothing about this particular project. We might ask the chairman of the committee whether there is an improved and open street from the city out to this place. In other words, is this an extension?

Mr. SABATH. These people to whom I refer could not get down there; they do not go in automobiles.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know whether they can or not; I have never been out there.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. Is this an extension, or are there any improved streets up to this place?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why, certainly. This is opening Van Buren street. If gentlemen here will look at this map: Here is Piney Branch road, one of the leading roads in the District. Van Buren street is already opened up to Piney Branch road from this point marked red, and there are more or less houses there. Now, a part of this marked in green, 80 per cent, that is to be dedicated, and the little part in red is the part to be condemned in order to complete the street from Piney Branch road to Third street. Now, there is another advantage in opening this street. As I have just stated, the other day we passed a bill granting the Baltimore and Transit Railroad Company the right to go through this marked red down to the end of this marked green, and it is simply following out what we have done in innumerable cases in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. Is it an improved street?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; Van Buren street is an opened, improved street to Piney Branch road through to green here on the map.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman's information is wrong.

Mr. SIMS. Is there asphalt there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; there is no asphalt, but the street is opened.

Mr. SIMS. You mean legally open?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but there are no houses.

Mr. SIMS. Can people travel on a legal highway, or do they have to have an actual one?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I could not travel through there at all; I had to walk.

Mr. COUDREY. Would you expect them to build houses out there until they had a street there?

Mr. SIMS. No; I should think not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The street is open on paper, but there are no houses there.

Mr. COUDREY. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky until they do have streets opened they do not build houses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And then you will want to macadamize——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We are not asking for an appropriation for that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, the next step will be to ask to macadamize.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is up to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SIMS. I do not desire to occupy all of my time. I am not making any attack on this proposition unless it comes within the scope of the general objection which I have had to all of this building up—not building up, but creating villages where they do not exist—by having streets authorized to be opened, and by private parties, perhaps, spending a little of their money and advertising the sale of lots and then begin to come to the Congress of the United States to spend public money on that on which none would have been spent and which are not needed, and on which no poor man hunts a home until his attention was called to it through some real estate promoting agency. As I said, I do not want to condemn a matter which I do not know anything about. I do not know anything about this bill and I am perfectly willing to accept the word of gentlemen on the committee who have investigated it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up any additional time except to say this, that I believe this is a very meritorious proposition, and that it should be passed.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Some gentlemen have asked the chairman whether this property is owned by two, three, or four owners, and the gentleman has stated that he does not know.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is right.

Mr. SABATH. Is it very hard to ascertain by whom this property is owned?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I desire to say this: That members of the committee might be repeatedly embarrassed upon the floor if they had that information. As far as I am concerned I have not sought in a single instance to know whether the property was owned by Smith, Brown, Jones, or Robinson. All I desire to know is this: Is it a proper thing to be done? And with me it was simply a proposition of whether or not it is meritorious.

Mr. SABATH. Do you know if this property is owned by one owner that he should condemn all of that property for these streets?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, not necessarily.

Mr. SABATH. That is being done in every other city in the United States, and I do not know why it should not be done here, especially when the District or this Government is paying for the paving and improvement of the street.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They are not paying any of this expense whatever.

Mr. SABATH. There is no expense to it, of course, so far, but there will be.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is true with any street and every street, not only in your city, but in this city and every other city of the Union.

Mr. SABATH. In our city the property owners are obliged to pay for the paving of the streets.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman can not compare any other city in this Union with Washington. This is a federal city, in which the District and General Government are in partnership half and half, and until you change the organic law there is not any use of spending time discussing how other cities in this Union pay for the paving of their streets.

Mr. SABATH. I am of the opinion that where the property owner has such advantage as having the streets paved at the expense of the government that he could easily dedicate the entire 80 feet for street purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] very well said a few moments ago, sometimes they are minors and sometimes they are people who will not dedicate. They do not care anything about public improvement, and that is why there is a law of condemnation, so that in some cases you can compel people under the law to help make improvements here and elsewhere.

Mr. SABATH. If this is owned by one man, or two men, who are desirous of opening the street, that would not require condemnation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why should the rule be different if there are only two or only a dozen?

Mr. SABATH. They all derive the benefit out of the improvement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, first, is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 40.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to report the bill back with the recommendation to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is too late now to move to strike out the enacting clause; that the proper motion would be to lay it aside with an unfavorable recommendation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How does it come to be too late? The motion was made as soon as the vote was announced.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose that the motion to strike out the enacting clause is in the nature of an amendment, and, all amendments having been voted on, it is too late.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be reported back to the House with a recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

CIRCUS LICENSES.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 13473) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to section 7 of paragraph 23 the following:

"Every building, tent, space, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports, or theatrical performances pertaining to or being a part thereof, are exhibited, including shows or exhibitions of horsemanship, marksmanship, and the like, depicting tribal scenes, costumes, or customs, and the like, commonly known as wild west shows, and exhibitions commonly known as dog and pony shows or the like, shall be regarded as a circus: Provided, That said wild west shows and the like shall pay a license tax of $50 per day, and said dog and pony shows and the like shall pay a license tax of $10 for each and every day less than six consecutive week days, and $50 for six consecutive week days."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the bill has not been read as yet for amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Do you want to ask some questions? If so, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman in what respect this bill changes existing law?

Mr. BORLAND. Well, I can answer the gentleman's question perfectly for the information of the committee. The present law makes a flat rate for circuses and outdoor amusements of $200 a day. The commissioners are of the opinion that that rate is too high in the case of wild-west shows and dog and pony shows which are of a minor character. This bill makes three classes. The regular circus pays $200 a day. Under this amendment the wild-west show will pay $50 a day, a dog and pony show will pay $10 a day, for not exceeding six successive days. That makes three classes of outdoor amusements and will permit many of these minor exhibitions now prohibited by the high fee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I understand from the gentleman's explanation that wild-west and dog shows have heretofore been obliged to pay a license fee of $200 a day?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. They were construed under the terminology as being a circus. I would like to direct the gentleman's attention to the phraseology found in line 10 of page 1, which is as follows: "Or theatrical performances pertaining to or being a part thereof." I wish to ask in that connection whether performances such as are carried on in the vaudeville houses in this city, where there are some acts showing performing animals, like the performing leopards recently in one of the vaudeville houses, would not be included under the phraseology and be obliged to pay the license fee as here set out?

Mr. BORLAND. I believe that the words in line 9 are designed to cover outdoor or temporary exhibitions. These regular theaters pay their regular license and are covered by the express words in another statute.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not agree with the gentleman as to the limitation of this amendment, that you except from the operation of the bill the performance of dog or other animal exhibition in vaudeville theaters, for the phraseology of the bill is:

Every building, tent, space, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances pertaining to or being a part thereof are exhibited.

I think the gentleman will agree that that phraseology is broad enough to include theaters where such performances are taking place. I hardly think my friend would have in mind requiring them to pay a tax of $10 a day or $50 a week for performances of that kind.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no such intention as taxing these performances. Where performances of the same kind are given in the theaters they pay their regular license. A dog or pony show is designed to cover a temporary performance.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the phraseology broad enough to include the character of performance I have just referred to?

Mr. BORLAND. I take it it would be if there were no other section taxing a theatrical performance except this provision; but there is a section regulating theaters, and they pay their regular theater license. These two sections would be construed together.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman kindly inform the House what is the license fee of the regular theater and moving-picture shows?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can answer the question of the gentleman. It is $100 a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to say that, in my opinion, there is no sort of question that under this bill, if one of the regular theaters in this city permits a horizontal-bar performance upon its stage, or the simplest kind of acrobatic feat, that it comes under this bill and is taxed under this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the particular language of this bill, I think there should be some limitation excepting theaters from the effect of this measure.

Mr. BORLAND. Undoubtedly an amendment could be added there for the purpose of saying that it should not apply to a place of amusement now paying a regular license.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any amendment in mind to cover that suggestion?

Mr. BORLAND. I have not, because I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Michigan), there were—ayes 28, noes 40.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 48.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINCETON PLACE.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 19636) authorizing the extension of Princeton place NW., in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within six months after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Princeton place NW., from Georgia avenue to Rock Creek Church road NW., with a width not less than 60 feet, upon such lines as the Commissioners of said District of Columbia may deem best for the public interest: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for and in respect to the land to be condemned for said extension, plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the said condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payments of the amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMANENT SYSTEM OF HIGHWAYS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 18818) to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways, District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to prepare a new highway plan for that portion of the District of Columbia bounded on the southerly part thereof by Broad Branch road, on the eastward part by Rock Creek Park, on the northeastward by Utah avenue, on the north by North Hampton street, and on the northwestward by Nebraska avenue, and to include in said new highway plan a new plan of Broad Branch road from Nebraska avenue to Rock Creek Park, under the provisions contained in the act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and an amendment to said act approved June 28, 1898; that upon the completion and recording of said new highway plan it shall take the place of and stand for any previous plan for said portion of the District of Columbia; and that the portion of the highway thereby abandoned shall revert to the abutting owners.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "North Hampton" and insert in lieu thereof "Northampton."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, in line 10, page 2, after the word "owners," to insert:

When the land necessary for the streets to replace them shall be dedicated for street purposes in accordance with the amended highway plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "owners" insert "when the land necessary for the streets to replace them shall be dedicated for street purposes in accordance with the amended highway plan."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CONDEMNATION OF STREETS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 16332) to provide for the condemnation of streets or parts of streets under the plan for the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the substitute in lieu of the original bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That whenever in the subdivision of a tract of land in the District of Columbia the owner or owners of such tract shall reserve from subdivision any portion thereof, and shall fail to or refuse to dedicate the streets or highways within the reserved portion as shown on the plan of permanent system of highways, or whenever there exists adjacent to a subdivided tract within which all the streets or highways indicated on the highway plan have been dedicated, a tract, any or all of the streets through which are needed to give access to the said subdivided tract, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized, in their discretion, to institute condemnation proceedings to acquire for street purposes in accordance with the highway plans any or all land comprised in the said streets within the limits of any portion reserved from subdivision, or within the limits of any tract adjacent to a tract within which all the streets have been dedicated, which the said commissioners may deem desirable for the purpose of extending existing or proposed streets or of connecting streets already of record according to the said highway plan.

"SEC. 2. That the said condemnation proceedings shall be instituted under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia: Provided, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land condemned for such streets or highways, plus the cost and expenses of said proceedings, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, under the provisions of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said code. And there is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, such amount or amounts as may be necessary to pay the cost and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, unless the bill is clear to the committee, I will ask that pages 2 and 3 of the report be read, which gives the report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The necessity for legislation of this character was first submitted to the committee by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in the following letter:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, December 21, 1909.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit herewith draft of a bill to provide for the condemnation of streets or parts of streets under the plan for the permanent system of highways in the District of Columbia, with request for its enactment.

Under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, as amended by an act approved June 28, 1898, a plan for a permanent system of highways outside of the city of Washington was adopted, and the proposed highways have been made a matter of record in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia.

It is provided in these acts that no further subdivision of any land in the District of Columbia shall be admitted of record in the office of the surveyor of said District, or in the office of the recorder of deeds, unless the subdivision is in conformity to such plan. When a tract of land is subdivided, therefore, the owner is required to dedicate that portion of his land which is comprised within the proposed streets as laid down on the plan, and to subdivide the balance of his land into lots fronting on these streets. In this way the streets are acquired without any cost to the District of Columbia.

In some instances, however, it has been the practice of owners subdividing their land to leave unsubdivided certain portions of such land covered by highways laid down on the highway plan, and to sell such portions by metes and bounds. In consequence, persons buying such portions build within the lines of proposed streets, and when these streets are opened it will be necessary to condemn houses as well as the land itself, which will cause the cost of opening the streets to be very expensive.

Two blueprints are inclosed herewith, which illustrate these conditions. On one of them it will be seen that a tract of land has been subdivided in blocks and lots, and certain streets laid down on the highway plan have been dedicated, but a portion of the tract through which a proposed street, namely, Thirty-eighth street, would run has been left unsubdivided, and it is understood that parcels from this unsubdivided portion have been sold by metes and bounds extending into the limits of this proposed street, which is shown in red on the inclosed blueprint. The owner did not subdivide this portion and dedicate the street, as he did not deem it advantageous to his interests to do so.

On the other plat a similar condition is shown, where a portion of a tract has been subdivided into blocks and lots, and streets dedicated, and a portion of the tract through which a proposed street would run is left unsubdivided. This proposed street (Forty-first street), which is shown in red on the blueprint, was not carried through because of the lack of advantage to the owners. Parcels, including the proposed street, the commissioners understand, have been sold by metes and bounds, and will probably be built upon.

It is proposed by the draft of bill inclosed that the commissioners shall be given authority in such cases to condemn the land within the lines of the proposed streets, where they have not been dedicated by the owner, and to assess the total cost of such condemnation proceedings, including the value of the land, upon abutting and adjacent property which will be benefited by the opening of the street. The bill also provides that the commissioners shall be given authority to condemn such streets through agricultural land adjacent to such subdivisions, where the situation of the latter is such as to render it desirable to have a connecting street outside of the limits of the land subdivided, for the purpose of giving access and development to such land.

The subdivision of tracts of land in the manner above indicated is growing very frequent, and threatens in some cases to render it highly impracticable, on account of the expense involved, to extend the highways through such tracts. The need of this legislation is very apparent.

The bill is drawn in accordance with the approved form of street-extension measures, and the commissioners recommend its early enactment.

Respectfully,

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

After consideration of the original bill and several consultations with the engineer commissioner, Maj. William V. Judson, the latter submitted the foregoing amendment in the nature of a substitute, accompanied by the following letter:

OFFICE OF ENGINEER COMMISSIONER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 15, 1910.

DEAR SIR: Referring to H. R. 16332, introduced at the suggestion of the commissioners, attention has been invited by Representative BORLAND, of your committee, to certain indefinite features of the measure, consideration of which has resulted in a new draft of bill for the same purpose, which I hand you herewith, requesting that it be substituted for H. R. 16332.

Mr. BORLAND has been consulted and expressed the belief that the new form of bill meets his views of the matter.

As heretofore explained, the commissioners believe this legislation to be most important and to be urgently needed if the highway extension plans are to be properly carried out.

It may be proper to suggest that should the scope of the commissioners' authority requested in this bill be considered for any reason to be too broad, Congress might insure its control as to the results of the measure by requiring the commissioners to submit annually report, with suitable maps and explanatory notes, covering all cases where this legislation was resorted to for the purpose outlined.

It is literally a fact that unless the commissioners be given the discretion to condemn small lengths of street without awaiting in each case congressional authority by way of a special act, the street-extension plans, so desirable of complete execution, will in many cases be vitiated.

I can not urge too strongly that this measure be enacted into law.

Respectfully,

W. V. JUDSON,
Major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, Engineer Commissioner, District of Columbia.

Hon. S. W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives, Washington.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, these two letters make the situation clear. It is the intention of the District authorities, as it ought to be, to compel people when they subdivide agricultural land, to plat the streets of those lands according to the approved system, according to the permanent plan of highways.

The owners of tracts have devised a scheme by which they evade the act. They are compelled before they can plat to dedicate the streets in the part actually plated. But the surrounding parts of their own tracts which they leave unplatted they sell lots by metes and bounds, sometimes abutting on a private way. So that when it finally becomes necessary for the District to extend the permanent system of highways through their land, it is found that the land has been sold by metes and bounds, and the permanent cost is largely increased.

It seems necessary to compel the owners before attempting to get advantage of the city improvements by platting their land and selling it, to dedicate the public highways without expense to the District. Every pressure of the law ought to be put on them to compel them to do it, and they should be compelled to do it as a part of the actual platting. This bill will enable the commissioners to reach the fragments that lie around the platted portion, or which are necessary to reach the platted portion, and compel also the simultaneous dedication or acquirement by proper condemnation proceedings of that ground for streets before it is built up or before the value is enhanced by platting the adjoining ground. If you wait until it is built up, wait until the value has been enhanced, the expense of course is increased, and for that reason the commissioners have recommended the bill. The objection I had to the original bill was that in its wording it might leave it doubtful whether the owner was compelled to dedicate in any case. We want to confine this new act to the case where he does not plat the land, but does plat the adjoining land and attempts thereby to get advantage by selling the unplatted land by metes and bounds. With that change recommended by the commissioners, I believe it ought to pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, that feature of the bill which has been discussed by the gentleman from Missouri was approved by practically everybody in the committee. The trouble arises in the fact that when they come to remedy the defect about which the gentleman from Missouri has just spoken they have put in, in my judgment, a provision a hundred times worse that the original provision, and that provision will be found on page 3, from the first line down to line 16. The original bill, as discussed by the gentleman from Missouri, provided that a man should open up his entire holdings. That was all right. He should be compelled to do that; but in making the redraft they went ahead and provided that the owner of the property who desires to cut up his land into lots should cut up the whole of his tract, but in addition, that he, through the commissioners, can go still further and compel other people to dedicate their land for streets that he may cut his up to better advantage. It uses a very board word—"adjacent." Webster defines "adjacent" as "lying near to." It does not have to adjoin; but if another tract of land "lies near to" the tract sought to be cut up, the commissioners can order that subdivided, too, and streets dedicated to the public.

Now, there is another still more dangerous proposition in it. In lines 10, 11, 12, and 13 it says:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized in their discretion to institute condemnation proceedings to acquire for street purposes in accordance with the highway plan, any or all lands comprised in the said street within the limits of any portion reserved from subdivisions, or within the limits of any tract adjacent to a tract within which all the streets have been dedicated, which the said commissioners may deem desirable for the purpose of extending existing or proposed streets, or of connecting streets already of record according to said highway plan.

I say that under this the Commissioners of the District are given the broad privilege of going out and condemning wherever they may choose to condemn, and in that way have a perfect right to do that which the Congress this morning declined to give them the right to do, and that is to compel them to come to congress and ask for the street to be opened. This is a broad, blanket provision, and gives to the commissioners the right to open streets anywhere out on a tract of land lying near another tract of land that has been subdivided, without coming to Congress for that privilege. It is against that that I protest.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to this bill by two old friends, nonresidents of this city, who are here usually a short time in the winter and who own some unimproved property on Girard street. The street extends some distance beyond their unimproved lot. They had no knowledge of any of the proceedings which occurred, but it seems that some one away beyond their lot, desiring to open up the street, so to cut up their land for building purposes, secured an act of Congress, had all the condemnation proceedings, took the land necessary for the street, reckoned up the amount of damages and costs, and then came back onto the street to their lot and assessed them over $3,000, more than one-half of all the value of the entire lot. That was the first intimation that they had that anything had been done.

Under the method of procedure which has been heretofore adopted—namely, obtaining an act of Congress for the extension of a street—there has been some opportunity for owners of unimproved property, nonresidents, learning something about it, but here the very first step you take is that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have the right to do this without coming to Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And without notifying anybody.

Mr. TIRRELL. Without giving notice to anybody, after having laid out a plan of streets and alleys for the whole city, passing upon their own plan and approving it, or in the first place causing a street to be opened up and then proceeding to assess the damages.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman know that in not a good many cases, but in at least a few cases that have been brought to the attention of the commissioners, where under the highway plan people are required to open up the streets, in some instances a triangular piece of land has been left on the end that they did not want to plat, and they have left it right in the way of where there is a street open on either side. They have then gone to work and sold it by metes and bounds, and the only way in which the District, of course, can acquire that property hereafter, and perhaps after a building is put upon it, is to condemn it at great expense. The object of clothing the commissioners with this additional authority is this, people can do this when Congress is not in session, and the commissioners should be authorized to act at any time; and my judgment is, after talking with the commissioners, that there is no thought or intent of abusing that privilege, which will be exercised probably twice or three times in the course of a year.

If, as I said, people desire to disregard the law and sell land that is right in the proposed line of a street which is opened upon either side of it, even erecting buildings upon it, it is going to be very costly for the District to acquire that property, and that is the object of this legislation.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, my genial friend has supposed one case out of ten thousand, and it is not fair to select one case out of ten thousand, or even out of one hundred, and make that case illustrative of what ought to be the rule. Because there happens to be some little triangular piece left, which is not worth much anyway, and which a person is holding for the purpose of getting more damages than he otherwise would receive, is no argument why you should establish a rule. Why, this very afternoon, after discussion of one or two bills where the commissioners had extended streets out in the country, the House decided it would not pass the bills, because there had not been adequate thought or proper reasons given. How many would there be under an unlimited power by which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia could lay out any street at any time on a plan which lays out the whole city in streets and alleys?

Mr. JAMES. They can open the streets Congress has just denied them the right to open.

Mr. TIRRELL. Certainly they would. You can not parallel such a case in the legislature of any State of the Union. Here are hundreds of streets and alleys laid out on this plan, and you may just as well say that they could all be opened to-morrow, and might be, if this bill passes. Then there is another thought which occurs to me in regard to this matter, and that is in regard to the assessment of damages. Who ever heard of street damages under any street legislation of any State which should say that a road or a street from over here to there should have land condemned for the extension of it and reckon up the value of that land and the costs, and then say to the man owning land half a mile or so away "you shall pay so much," and then to another, "and you so much," and then go over to some other street and say to an owner there, "you shall pay so much."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is not the intention of the bill.

Mr. TIRRELL. That is what they can do under the authority they now have——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, no.

Mr. TIRRELL. Their authority, we may say, is almost absolute; suppose you go to the jury which we have here, and what sort of a jury is it? Is it a jury chosen as ordinarily chosen in this country? Not at all, as I understand it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not selected and conducted under an orderly procedure?

Mr. TIRRELL. I understand it is; but is it not a jury of 5 or 6——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TIRRELL. We have here a jury of 5 or 6 to pass upon the land——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In some of the States you have 12 and in other States you have 8 and here you have 5. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says 6 in his State and in my State it is 12. Instead of a jury of 12 entailing additional expense, why can not you have 4 or 5 men to do this work?

Mr. BORLAND. Now, as I take it, the gentleman's objection is to the power of the commissioners at their discretion to institute condemnation proceedings in adjoining lands——

Mr. TIRRELL. No.

Mr. BORLAND. That is the main objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does not use the word "adjoining," but uses the word "adjacent," and Webster defines adjacent as lying near; if it is in the same neighborhood it can be done.

Mr. BORLAND. One of the principal objections is to the clause permitting the condemnation of adjacent land. There is no objection to the main feature of the bill. Is that what I understand?

Mr. TIRRELL. There is a vital objection to the authorization of the commissioners.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the objection to compelling the man platting the land to dedicating to the public all that he ought to dedicate?

Mr. TIRRELL. He does not plat the land necessarily; the commissioners plat the land. They have laid this out on a plan and they plat the land.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the gentleman opposed to compelling the landowner who plats the land to dedicate what he ought to dedicate?

Mr. TIRRELL. A plat of the land is made on a plan which has already been made and he parts with his land. I have not any objection to his receiving the benefit that he ought to have. I have no objection to the just and equitable way in which land is taken as I understand throughout the United States.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact: In pretty nearly every city of the size of Washington and some much smaller, where these juries of freeholders exist, the city council goes ahead and enforces its condemnation proceedings either under general law or by special act and a jury assesses the benefits. Now, a similar law exists in the District of Columbia, and it may assess benefits for street openings to land that does not abut upon the part opened. It may not be so in many cases, but it is in every city I know.

Now, as far as this bill is concerned, if it will avoid the gentleman's objection to have the words "adjacent land" stricken out, I personally would be in favor of doing it, because the main thing, in my judgment, is to compel the men who plat their land and who attempt to juggle the highways and defeat the permanent plan of highways to abide by the permanent plan and plat their land and dedicate all that ought to be dedicated. That is the main purpose of this bill. If the gentleman's objection is directed to the words "adjacent land," perhaps I am willing to strike it out.

Mr. TIRRELL. I think it should be stricken out, and I think any system under which land is condemned and taken for extensions and street purposes which allows the cost and damages to be assessed upon some one a quarter of a mile away or upon another street is inequitable and unjust and, I believe, unconstitutional, because what would prevent the commissioners from going any distance, if we adopt that system, and arbitrarily——

Mr. BORLAND. I will say this as to what would prevent them: They have only a few isolated cases intended to be reached by this, and they say in their report that if the power is considered to be too broad provision should be made that they should report annually the number of cases in which this law has been exercised.

Mr. TIRRELL. I suggest that if they say that they think it is already too broad.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman offer the amendment?

Mr. BORLAND. I will offer an amendment.

Mr. TIRRELL. Now I want to say one or two things more about this bill. What protection has any man who owns property here that his property will not be taken, and that he will not wake up surprised some morning over the fact that he no longer is the owner? Where is there any notice such as is given in any other city, by which the public can ascertain what is going to be done?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is, under the law for the opening of highways, a sufficient notice. There is every precaution surrounding it. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, and I am sure he will bear with me a moment, that a few years ago there was more or less criticism about the street-opening law here in the District. There was a special committee appointed from the Committee on the District of Columbia, which prepared a new law that seemed to meet the wishes of Congress at that time, and since then all of these street-opening cases have been under that law, and I think it has given, I may add, almost universal satisfaction. The law is broad, and every precaution, it seems to me, is taken to give the property owner and everybody else sufficient notice.

Mr. TIRRELL. What is the requirement about notice?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have not the law just at hand at this moment. There is sufficient notice, however, and I am sure the gentleman, as good a lawyer as he is, would say that the notice is ample.

Mr. TIRRELL. I have just cited an illustration where the assessment was placed on a little lot on Girard street of over $3,000, more than half the value of the lot, under proceedings which had been enforced in the District of Columbia where the owners had never had the slightest notice or intimation of any of the proceedings from the beginning to the end.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How long ago was that?

Mr. TIRRELL. This letter does not state how long.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I fear it was before this law was passed, because certainly there could be no complaint at this time about proper notice being given.

Mr. TIRRELL. There is no notice now required to owners who are nonresidents, and there are a very large number of nonresidents who own property in this city, and you can not find on the statutes any law which requires the commissioners to notify those people.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The notice is given by advertising, just as it is in other cities and States. I suppose the law is that way in your State, as it is in mine. You can not always get personal service on people.

Mr. TIRRELL. I shall offer an amendment on that very point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I may say to the gentleman that here is a bill proposing to give to the commissioners authority which they have never had, and concerning that new authority that is here given there is not one word said about giving notice.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They proceed under the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is nothing in this bill or elsewhere which says they must. This is entirely a new matter. There is no statute upon the books which concerns the privileges that are given to the commissioners under this bill; and, consequently, there must be no law requiring it to be advertised or any other kind of a notice given.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It says, on page 3 of the bill, in line 12, that they shall institute condemnation proceedings to acquire for street purposes in accordance with the highway plan. Now, there is a well-established law in this District under which they can proceed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the gentleman's attention also to the phraseology as found in section 2, lines 21, 22, and 23, as follows:

That the said condemnation proceedings shall be instituted under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The language refers to the condemnation proceedings the gentleman has just referred to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am sure if you had an opportunity to read it you would not raise a single criticism as to the law as it exists in the District of Columbia to-day. Every safeguard, it seems to me, has been thrown around both the resident and the nonresident owner.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true if this bill is passed the commissioners can open highways and streets without coming to Congress for that authority?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is one object of the case cited here. But the gentleman from Missouri offers to amend the bill by striking out "territory adjacent," to meet the objections of the gentleman from Kentucky, and let the bill cover these cases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will support the amendment to strike out "adjacent property."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman support the bill after the amendment is agreed to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is in the interest of the public. Discussion may develop other objections, but so far as I am advised now I will vote for the other part of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is left of the bill if the motion to strike out prevails—that provision which gives authority to the commissioners to condemn highways when any of the property which is described here is adjacent but which is intended to be adjoining the subdivision that has already been platted?

Mr. BORLAND. What is left will be this, that where the landowner only plats a portion of his land he must necessarily dedicate the street in that territory.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman's amendment will extend to the fractional part not platted by the owner of the property?

Mr. BORLAND. It will not extend that, but refers to the part already platted; and then, as to any other portion, the bill says that the commissioners, in their discretion, may condemn the street to the adjacent land not owned by that property owner, but gives the right to reach the platted portion. That is the part of the bill that the gentleman from Kentucky objected to, and I offer an amendment to leave that out.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the second proposition on all fours, so that the people may connect the portions of the highway?

Mr. BORLAND. I think the gentleman will readily see that where the landowner is going to ask to plat his property, so as to get city prices, he ought to dedicate the property.

Mr. JAMES. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri whether or not, under the provisions of this bill, if it becomes law, the commissioners can open any street which they desire?

Mr. BORLAND. They can only do it through the property of an owner who has already had a portion of his land platted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My answer to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is that they can not, after adopting the amendment, open up streets upon any land adjacent, lands lying near to the plat, which is now being cut out.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understood the gentleman from Missouri is to offer an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that under this bill, as it stands now, the commissioners would have the right to do the very thing he was complaining should not be done. If there is a house upon the land where they propose to open the highway, they can condemn the house and open the street.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, in order to meet one point which is illustrated by the history of the cases of these two friends of mine, on assessment of their lots, and to provide for the numerous cases which must exist of this proceeding in the city of Washington, on account of the large number of nonresidents, and the fact that I know that in many cases, at least I have been told so, that these people do not get notice of what is being done, and have no opportunity to appear to protect their rights, I will offer the following amendment, to be added to line 20, on page 3, which I think is fair and just now to add to this bill if it is going to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment may be read in the time of the gentleman for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Proposed amendments of House bill No. 16332:

"That before deciding upon the opening or extension of a street under the provisions of this bill the commissioners shall give notice by publication in two morning and two afternoon newspapers of general circulation, published in the city of Washington, of the time and place of the hearing. Such notices shall be published once a week for three successive weeks, the first publication to be at least thirty days before the hearing.

"The commissioners shall also, at least fifteen days before such hearing, mail to each nonresident taxpayer who shall have registered with the secretary of the board an address to which such notices are to be mailed, a copy of the notice of hearing as published, which may be condensed, provided that it shall designate the streets proposed to be extended or opened and the time of the hearing."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] that he accept that, and when we have time to produce the provision in the code the gentleman offering the amendment will see that it is not necessary.

Mr. BORLAND. That amendment is so absolutely unnecessary that it seems a waste of time to discuss it. If we amend the bill so that the only application is where a man is voluntarily platting his own land, that man has notice of the entire proceeding, and he should not impose upon the District the expense of any further notice. It is absolutely out of the question for a man to come in here and plat land and say that he does not know that the District is liable to open up streets through the remaining part of his land.

Mr. TIRRELL. Is there any provision now by which a nonresident gets any notice of the proceeding?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I made the suggestion that the gentleman from Missouri accept the amendment on condition that the bill remain as it is, but of course if the amendment is adopted, then there would not be any necessity for this one.

Mr. BORLAND. I should like to offer an amendment eliminating the portion referring to lands of others than the platting proprietor. If that is done, I believe it will obviate any necessity for the gentleman's amendment; and before his amendment is voted on, for the information of the gentleman, I will move to strike out, in line 6, page 3, all after the word "highways" down to and including the word "dedicated," in line 8; and in line 15 strike out all after the word "subdivision" down to and including the word "dedicated," in line 17. The words to be stricken out are these:

Or wherever there exists adjacent to a subdivided tract within which all the streets or highways indicated on the highway plan have been dedicated.

And in lines 15, 16, and 17 strike out the words:

Or within the limits of any tract adjacent to a tract within which all the streets have been dedicated.

That, I think, strikes out all reference in the bill to adjacent lands and leaves it applying to the lands of the dedicating proprietor.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the reading of the committee substitute demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that is the regular order. It ought to be read. Several amendments have been proposed.

The Clerk read the proposed committee substitute, as follows:

That whenever in the subdivision of a tract of land in the District of Columbia the owner or owners of such tract shall reserve from subdivision any portion thereof, and shall fail to or refuse to dedicate the streets or highways within the reserved portion as shown on the plan of permanent system of highways, or whenever there exists adjacent to a subdivided tract within which all the streets or highways indicated on the highway plan have been dedicated, a tract, any or all of the streets through which are needed to give access to the said subdivided tract, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized, in their discretion, to institute condemnation proceedings to acquire for street purposes in accordance with the highway plans any or all land comprised in the said streets within the limits of any portion reserved from subdivision, or within the limits of any tract adjacent to a tract within which all the streets have been dedicated, which the said commissioners may deem desirable for the purpose of extending existing or proposed streets or of connecting streets already of record according to the said highway plan.

SEC. 2. That the said condemnation proceedings shall be instituted under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia: Provided, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land condemned for such streets or highways, plus the cost and expenses of said proceedings, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, under the provisions of said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said code. And there is hereby appropriated, out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, such amount or amounts as may be necessary to pay the cost and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, if it is in order, I desire to offer an amendment, in line 6 of page 3, to strike out all after the word "highways," down to and including the word "dedicated," in line 8; and in line 15 of page 3, after the word "subdivision," strike out all down to and including the word "dedicated," in line 17.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri will permit, I suggest that everything should be stricken out of line 8, down to and including the word "tract," in line 10, striking out the words:

A tract, any or all of the streets through which are needed to give access to the said subdivided tract.

Mr. BORLAND. I considered that, but that might properly remain in there, even if we dedicate only through the undedicated portion.

Mr. KAHN. But does it make sense if you strike out the words immediately preceding, and let it stand in that way? Does not that language refer to the portion which you have stricken out?

Mr. BORLAND. I think that should remain in there.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will read it, he will see that the phraseology as he leaves it in the bill is very awkward, and that the very purpose will be accomplished, according to the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. The language would be very awkward if you did not strike out the words suggested.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I will add that to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, strike out beginning with the word "or," in line 6, down to and including the word "tract" in line 10.

Also beginning with the word "or," in line 15, and striking out down to the word "dedicated" in line 17.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, on the general condemnation proposition I want to ask a question. When it is proposed to open a street and condemnation proceedings are instituted, to what extent and how far out on either side are the benefits assessed against the adjacent or adjoining property? What is the rule?

Mr. BORLAND. My impression is that under the existing law the jury assesses the benefits, and that there is no prescribed benefit district. I will ask the gentleman from New Jersey if I am not correct?

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. In some cities we have a prescribed benefit district. If a street is opened, it is customary in a good many jurisdictions for the jury to assess the benefits within the benefit district.

Mr. HINSHAW. Would this extend as far as two or three blocks?

Mr. WILEY. Yes; we have a case where it is an open thoroughfare and the benefits extend nearly half a mile out.

Mr. HINSHAW. In the condemnation proceedings notice by publication is given nonresidents, and personal service is made on residents within the territory.

Mr. WILEY. I think on both.

Mr. HINSHAW. If it is contemplated to assess to the extent of half a mile, would those people have notice?

Mr. WILEY. Yes; but I want to say to the gentleman that a half mile would be an extreme case.

Mr. TIRRELL. I want to say to the gentleman that although he has stated the fact I want to have the gentleman state whether it is necessary that my friends should have something incorporated in the law on the proposition that I spoke of.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think that this is the first District day that we have been here without the code, but I will say that I am sure when I come to present to the gentleman the law he will see that notice is ample for residents and nonresidents and for minors and incompetent people. The law was carefully prepared by the committee, and we have never had any complaints of it. I think, as I have said, the gentleman will be entirely satisfied with the safeguards that are already thrown around it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the substitute as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

USE OF SQUARE 328, WASHINGTON, FOR MANUFACTURING PURPOSES.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I now call up the bill (S. 1864) to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes of square 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress of February 1, 1907.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to promote the purposes of the act approved February 1, 1907, allowing the manufacture of ice on square No. 328, in the city of Washington, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to issue permits for the laying and maintaining of a line of railroad or a switch from square No. 300, across Twelfth street and into said square No. 328, by an overhead track, to be approved by said commissioners, and for the laying of a conduit and pipes from the said square No. 328, across and under Water street, to and into the Potomac River, for the taking of water from said river to be used for manufacturing purposes in said square, but for the purposes of said overhead track no present grades of Twelfth street shall be disturbed, and said overhead track shall have a clearance of at least 18 feet above the curb of said street, and said overhead track and the conduit and pipes hereby authorized shall be located as may be directed by the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and be laid and maintained under their inspection in such locations as they may prescribe, and the cost of such inspection and of replacing the pavements, curbs, and sidewalks disturbed by said work shall be paid by the parties to whom the permits shall be granted.

The following amendments recommended by the committee were read:

Strike out of line 8, page 2, the word "fourteen," and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

Add to section 1, after the word "granted," in line 16, page 2, the following provisos:

"Provided, That the corporation, company, or individual, its successors or assigns, to whom under authority of this act permission may be granted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to construct or maintain the overhead track and line of conduit hereinbefore authorized shall pay for the privilege of the construction and maintenance in public space of the said overhead track and conduit an annual franchise tax of $100, which sum shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia during the month of May of each year subsequent to the granting by the commissioners of the original permit for the work: Provided further, That failure to pay to the collector of taxes the said sum annually within the period named shall operate to annul and render void the privileges herein authorized in respect to the overhead track and conduit referred to: And provided further, That any sums paid to the collector of taxes in accordance with this measure shall be credited as are other taxes of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the franchise tax of $100 above referred to shall be in addition to any and all other taxes now or hereafter imposed by law."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report in this case be read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. SMITH of Michigan), as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1864) to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes of square No. 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress of February 1, 1907, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, when amended as follows:

Strike out of line 8, page 2, the word "fourteen," and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

Add to section 1, after the word "granted," in line 16, page 2, the following provisos:

"Provided, That the corporation, company, or individual, its successors or assigns, to whom under authority of this act permission may be granted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to construct or maintain the overhead track and line of conduit hereinbefore authorized shall pay for the privilege of the construction and maintenance in public space of the said overhead track and conduit an annual franchise tax of $100, which sum shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia during the month of May of each year subsequent to the granting by the commissioners of the original permit for the work: Provided further, That failure to pay to the collector of taxes the said sum annually within the period named shall operate to annul and render void the privileges herein authorized in respect to the overhead track and conduit referred to: And provided further, That any sums paid to the collector of taxes in accordance with this measure shall be credited as are other taxes of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the franchise tax of $100 above referred to shall be in addition to any and all other taxes now or hereafter imposed by law."

The Washington Market Company, which now owns the above square, is building upon this square a large cold-storage warehouse to be immediately available, and especially to be available if the plan of Congress for having no private buildings on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue is carried out, including the destruction of the company's market buildings.

On the west side of this square 328 is a large area owned by the railroad company and now covered by its tracks. It is proposed to have one of these tracks extended across Twelfth street overhead into the square. There can be no possible objection to allowing this track to be thus constructed, as the place is solely a business section.

In the production of ice and artificial refrigeration there is need for large quantities of water to flow over the cooling condensers. For this purpose the water of the Potomac River can be used instead of aqueduct water. Square 328 is about 300 feet from the Potomac, and a pipe from the square under Twelfth street and under the water front can reach the harbor by going about 400 feet. There is no possible objection to allowing this pipe to be laid for the purpose of obtaining the water.

Two bills, having the same title and purpose as the Senate act herewith reported, were introduced in the House of Representatives and referred to this committee. They are H. R. 6182 and H. R. 10421. These bills were duly submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for examination and report. The following reply to the submission of H. R. 10421 is identical in terms with their reply to the other bill:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, November 27, 1909.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on House bill 10421, Sixty-first Congress, first session, to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes of square No. 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress of February 1, 1907, which you referred to them for examination and report.

The object of this bill is to permit an overhead railroad siding from the railroad yards west of Twelfth street, across that street into square 328, which is bounded by Eleventh, Twelfth, E, and F streets SW., and to permit the laying of underground constructions from said square across and under Water street to the Potomac River.

Both of these constructions are for the purpose of facilitating the business of the Washington Market Company, which was authorized by act of Congress of February 1, 1907, to conduct a cold-storage business and to manufacture ice on the square in question. The commissioners know of no objections to the passage of the bill, under the conditions laid down therein, and would recommend that it be given favorable consideration.

Respectfully,
HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND,
President Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to do two things: One is to permit these people to build an overhead bridge across the street, that they may transport their ice into the building which they propose to erect in the near future, and also to lay a pipe from square 328 into the Potomac River for the purpose of getting water to be used for condensing purposes, as set forth in the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I understand this bill has already been beaten three times in the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. I do not know that it was ever beaten.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is its mortuary record?

Mr. SIMS. It has been defeated twice and referred to the committee for investigation of ownership a third time, which was an adverse action. It failed to pass That is what I call defeated. I may be mistaken as to the number of times. Anyway it failed to pass the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the bill was never in its present form, and I think I can say this in all candor, that when the bill was voted on the last time there were a great many Members of this House who thought we had in mind authorizing the construction of a track across Pennsylvania avenue down about Seventh street. Many Members voted under a mistaken opinion of where this is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is very material. I wish to invite attention to the latter part of lines 6 and 7, on the first page. By those lines a concession is granted, but it does not show to whom the concession is granted. It is just granted to anybody—to nobody in particular.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is to be taken in connection with the first part of it—to promote the purposes of the act approved February 1, 1907, and that is this company.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, over on page 2, in lines 3 and 4, another concession is granted, and that is to lay conduit and pipes. That concession is not granted to anybody in particular. Now, then, I wish to invite, especially, attention to line 3, on page 2, which contains the words "conduit and pipes." Upon first reading it might be taken that "conduit and pipes" are synonymous terms. I contend they are not. Webster defines a conduit as a channel or a pipe. Therefore I take it for granted that these terms have been advisedly used; that they want not only pipes, but also a conduit. In other words, they want a channel.

Now, then, this concession is asked for the purpose of bringing in water to the ice factory to cool the condensers. When this water has been brought in for the purpose of cooling the condensers, what is to become of it? There, I say, the word "conduit" comes in; that this water may be returned to the Potomac River through an underground pipe or through an open channel above the surface; that under this bill either of these privileges is granted.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What objection can there be to letting these people get their water from the Potomac River for the purposes set forth in the report?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will answer that in a moment. I say that I wish to call especial attention to the fact that, in my judgment, these three words in line 3, page 2, "conduit and pipes," are advisedly used; that they want to get both a pipe to get the water and a conduit or channel through which to return the water to the Potomac River, inasmuch as the bill recites that it is to be used for condensing purposes.

I want to say to the committee that I was down at this place yesterday, and there I saw something that I do not think has ever been developed in any discussion of this bill. I have read the discussion of it in the RECORD when it was up the last time, and there I found no mention of what I have in mind. Right where this conduit is to empty into the Potomac River is a wharf that is being used. Vessels were there using it yesterday, and if this conduit and these pipes are allowed to enter the Potomac River there, in order to make the channel deeper at that place you would have to encounter the pipes laid under a provision of Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What does the gentleman say to the last section of the bill, that Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I say that may be done by Congress; but before you can deepen this boat landing you must come back to this body and run the gauntlet of getting another bill through. That is my objection to it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Before we can do that we would certainly have to get authority to deepen the Potomac River first, which would be a much more difficult task than to amend this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Appropriations have been made at this Congress for the purpose of doing this very thing. I do not say at that particular point, because I do not know, but all around the Anacostia Flats an appropriation has been made at this Congress for deepening the stream, and I believe that the time is not far off when Congress will be asked for an appropriation to deepen this stream at this very place; and before you can do it you will be compelled under the provisions of this bill to come back here and get an act of Congress before you can disturb the pipes or conduit you authorize to be laid there.

Mr. WILEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How, if this is a discharge pipe into the Potomac River, is it going to interfere with the deepening of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The intake pipe, in my opinion, will interfere with the deepening of it, and I object to the outgoing pipe because it may be a channel running over the surface of the street, directly through the place where property must be handled upon this wharf.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is not the gentleman willing to leave that provision in the bill to the judgment of the commissioners?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I am not. I am not willing to leave any act of Congress for anybody to carry out when we can make it as plain as we would like to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What does the gentleman suggest in the place of the words "conduits and pipe" in order that these people may have water from the Potomac River?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My suggestion is to defeat this bill. Then we will not be granting to a private corporation the use of public highways for private use. I am in favor of letting street cars and all those kind of things use the highways where the people can receive the benefit, but I am absolutely and positively opposed to granting to any private corporation the right to use the streets for their own private purposes. I say that this is an entering wedge for one of the most vicious purposes that can be imagined. When you have done this in one case, there is no telling how many times you will be asked to do it in the future.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman, that I do not believe that there is a city in this Union that has a river, as they have here, like the Potomac River, where they have railroads and other facilities, in which the common council would not be very glad to grant the privileges that are asked for, both as to pipes to get water from the Potomac River and also the privilege of laying overhead tracks. The original bill named 14 feet as the height; as amended it is 18. The committee went and looked at the street and premises and amended the bill so as to make it 18 feet instead of 14, and certainly that ought to be far enough above the street to satisfy anybody. It requires the company, in addition to what was never done before in any bill of this kind, to pay $100 a year.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I suppose there is no question this is for the Washington Market Company?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not the slightest.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be advisable to state it in the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think that is clearly set forth on the first page, where it says, "That to promote the purposes of the act approved February 1, 1907, allowing the manufacture of ice on square No. 328." That was the act, I understand, that gave the authority and refers distinctly to this company.

Mr. MANN. Then, I will call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the proviso which rebuts that presumption, which provides, "That the corporation, company, or individual, its successors or assigns, to whom, under authority of this act, permission may be granted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. That is very much broader than the Washington Market Company.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is the only company that is empowered under that act to do business on square 328.

Mr. MANN. It is the only company to whom this permit ought to run.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand by that provision that the corporation, company, or individual refers to this company, which, by the provisions of the act of Congress, is permitted to do work on square 328.

Mr. MANN. But the amendment of the committee contemplates a possibility of some other company or an individual.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is not the intention, I desire to say, of the committee. We have not any intention of that kind.

Mr. MANN. The proviso says "corporation, company, or individual" to whom authority is granted. Now, would the gentleman have any objection——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It says "to whom under authority of this act," referring to the act which gives them the right to do business on square 328.

Mr. MANN. Under the gentleman's contention no authority can be granted to an individual to do this, and no authority can be granted to anybody but the Washington Market Company, so does not the gentleman think that the Washington Market Company should be stated, so as to remove all possibility of any question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have not the slightest objection to making it even more clear, although I think it refers expressly to that act.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman would have inserted, between lines 7 and 8, on page 1, the words "to the Washington Market Company," so that it would read:

Are hereby authorized to issue permits to the Washington Market Company for the laying and maintaining of a line of railroad.

And then in the proviso, strike out the words "corporation, company, or individual" and insert the words "the Washington Market Company," it would cover that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has incorporated in the bill what seems to be a very valuable provision, both here and as a precedent for the payment of an annual franchise tax. I notice, however, that while the bill grants permission for the construction of overhead tracks, conduits, and pipes, the text only refers to the overhead tracks and conduits. Would it not be advisable, in line 24, page 2, to insert after the word "conduits" the words "and pipes," and insert the same provision in line 7, page 3, after the word "conduits," so that it would cover the whole thing?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have no objection to that if the gentleman thinks it is not broad enough to cover it now. I desire to say to the gentleman that the committee feels that this legislation is proper and correct, and we have not any desire to have in the bill anything other than that there shall be no mistake as to who is referred to or as to the amount of tax that is to be added in order that they may have these two added privileges.

Mr. STAFFORD. You do not mean to relieve them of any tax that is now imposed or that is to be hereafter imposed?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This is in addition to the tax they are already paying.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the original proposition which came before Congress several years ago proposed to authorize the Washington Market Company to locate an ice-manufacturing establishment anywhere in the District of Columbia it might choose so to do. The proposition was defeated by the House. Then the Washington Market Company came in and asked permission to construct this ice-manufacturing cold-storage plant upon square 328, and that was granted. Last year there came before the committee a proposition to permit this company to construct this overhead track and this underground connection. That was recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to make some inquiry as to the rights of the Washington Market Company upon the ground that it now possesses or uses down on Pennsylvania avenue. I believe there was an answer some time ago sent to Members of the House in reply to the inquiry made by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I had some occasion at one time to submit some observations on that reply, which was inaccurate in some respects at least.

But, as I understand this proposition now, it is simply to permit the Washington Market Company, which has the market down on Pennsylvania avenue, and which has more or less of a plant, as I am informed, although I do not know the facts about it, on square 328, to make its connection first by a railroad, in order that it may utilize its ice manufactory and cold-storage plant, and connect with the river, so as to get water to its plant for manufacturing purposes. While ordinarily I should be opposed to permitting any company to make connection with the river by pipes, still, in the city of Washington, where we are already threatened with some shortage of filtered water, it may be desirable to permit a company to connect with the river where it is not necessary to have water which is of the kind for drinking purposes, potable water, but where it may obtain water for manufacturing purposes, as I understand is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is the purpose of this bill. And then there is the further provision, in addition to giving permission to extend this pipe, a precedent which is possibly not to be found anywhere else, that these people shall pay for the use of the street an annual license tax of $100, in addition to all its other taxes. I suppose that the $100 will be a very large amount to pay for the use of the property it really uses, as it simply crosses the street.

Mr. KAHN. The conduit would run up the street?

Mr. MANN. Run under the street.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Two hundred feet.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It may be 600 feet for the reason that they desire to start at the northern end of the building.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But it says where it shall be from.

Mr. MANN. It does not interfere in any way with the use of the street by the public.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not in the slightest.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, in order to overcome one of the objections of the gentleman from Kentucky, I wish to move to amend by striking out the letter "a," on line 3, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the words "of an underground," so that it shall read:

For the laying of an underground conduit.

Mr. MANN. That is what a conduit is.

Mr. KAHN. I have always so understood it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It may be defined as a channel or pipe.

Mr. MANN. All right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, I just want to say a word. That would not meet my objection, for the reason that these pipes, as I stated, would go right into the stream, where it is used for boat landings and for wharves; and if you ever want to deepen the water at that place you would require another act of Congress before you could do so.

Mr. KAHN. I offer that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The bill has not been read for amendment. I have an amendment on page 2.

Mr. SIMS. We have the right to have the bill read for amendments, and I wish to discuss it in general debate. The gentleman is only showing what amendment he proposes.

Mr. KAHN. I was under the impression that the bill had been read for amendments.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposing this bill under any mere strained construction of the word "conduit." I think the bill ought to be defeated on its merits. Here is a proposition to add to an already existing manufacturing plant in the city. When I was on this honorable committee I always opposed authorizing manufacturing in the District of Columbia. This is the seat of government. It is not a place to build up manufacturing plants. I do not see why we should authorize one character of manufacture and not another.

Now, if I understand, this company does not own square 328.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand they own square 328.

Mr. SIMS. I understand they do not own the property occupied down where the market is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is not square 328. This is down by the river, where the new plant is to be, and where they want an overhead line into it.

Mr. SIMS. I am mistaken as to where the square 328 was.

Mr. CURRIER. I think the gentleman was mistaken when he said that this "manufacturing establishment," as he calls it, is to be in the heart of the city. It is way down on the bank of the river where it is practically a railroad yard.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman is laboring under the same mistake that many Members labored under when the bill was up once before, as I said a while ago. They seem to think that it was right down here on Pennsylvania avenue near Seventh street, when, as a matter of fact, square 328 is down near the river.

Mr. SIMS. I am glad to find I was mistaken about that.

Mr. CURRIER. May I make another suggestion to the gentleman?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. CURRIER. My understanding is that this is not a bill to authorize the establishment of anything like a manufacturing plant. That has already been done, and this company has spent a very large amount of money down there on the bank of the river, under authority of Congress. This is simply a question whether Congress will give them the right to utilize the plant they have constructed under the authority of this body.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They can buy the water from the District of Columbia right now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They have not even a smokestack down there. They are getting their power from a gas engine.

Mr. SIMS. This report says:

The Washington Market Company, which now owns the above square, is building upon this square a large cold-storage warehouse to be immediately available, and especially to be available if the plan of Congress for having no private buildings on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue is carried out, including the destruction of the company's market buildings.

I had not read that part, and it removes one of the objections I had in mind. I misunderstood where square 328 was. I am glad I was mistaken in that; but it proposes to have a railway track 18 feet over a street on the river front.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, no; it is not on the river front.

Mr. SIMS. How far from the river front?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should say four or five hundred feet.

Mr. SIMS. It is over Twelfth street?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; it is on Twelfth street.

Mr. SIMS. And that street does go to the river front?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; it goes to the river front.

Mr. SIMS. And now we are asked here to authorize the erection of an elevated steam railway track. It is a steam railroad, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I suppose it could be used for that.

Mr. SIMS. Eighteen feet above Twelfth street, where it is seriously contemplated to extend not only the utilitarian but the esthetic improvement of the river front. Is not that true?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not at that point.

Mr. SIMS. Within a short distance, and for the purposes of a private company, to do a private business in which the city has no more interest than that of any other private company.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. To do a private business in the interest of the public.

Mr. SIMS. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a case where he and I got sat down on hard by the House of Representatives when we tried to do that very thing for a poor man who lived out here somewhere and who wanted to conduct the water of a spring down into the District of Columbia, to the end that he might make ice of that pure water, to be sold to the people of the District of Columbia. The objection was made that we were granting franchises and privileges and the use of a street to a private individual. I put my support of that bill upon the idea that it was for the general good and the public health to have that pure water manufactured into ice here, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and I did all we could to pass that bill, but the House established the precedent that they would not, and they talked as though they never would, pass a bill to authorize the use of the streets or public property for the benefit of a private individual or company.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me suggest to the gentleman that that bill never got into the House. It was killed in committee.

Mr. SIMS. If that is true, it does not change the matter. The committee sat down on it and said they would not support any such measure as that. I thought it was the Committee of the Whole, but if it was the District Committee, it was just as effective. The man did not get in.

Mr. MANN. Did both gentlemen advocate a bill that was turned down by the committee? I thought they were the committee.

Mr. SIMS. It did not appear so in that case.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman supported that bill and I hope he will support this.

Mr. SIMS. That had a public purpose, to improve the public health, to allow the manufacture of ice in competition with the ice trust. You know we discussed that bill a great deal in the committee. Here is a bill in all respects similar, except not so good, to permit this company, instead of using water that they would have to pay for, to take water out of the river, and to use the streets and parks for their purpose, and to put a bridge 18 feet over a street, which, if it ever has to be removed by reason of the improvement of the city, will have to be paid for.

Furthermore, the use of railroad engines, smoke producers; and the gentleman knows how hard we have tried to pass bills, and have passed them through the House, to apply the smoke laws of the District of Columbia to the steam railways, and that we could not do it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. SIMS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Right across the street from square 328 is a great yard for the storage of freight cars, and steam engines are flying back and forth there all the time producing smoke.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; I know it. The gentleman and I have reported bills unanimously, passed this House unanimously, applying the smoke laws to the railroad steam engines, and never could get them beyond another legislative body.

But this is extending it to that extent; we are extending the smoke nuisance. Furthermore, we are authorizing a private concern to extend a track, and the fact that it is only a few hundred feet makes no difference.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is only extending it across the width of the street.

Mr. SIMS. I thought it was several hundred feet.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; simply across the street.

Mr. SIMS. Well, I am opposed to the use of a street for private corporations. It looks to me even more objectionable than the use of the street for the little spring that the man wanted to bring down here. I want to say that I am glad I was mistaken in supposing that it referred to the square by the market house down here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 7, page 1, after the word "permit," insert the words "to the Washington Market Company."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I also move to amend, on page 2, line 18, by striking out the words "corporation, company, or individual" and inserting the words "Washington Market Company."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend, in line 24, by striking out the word "and" and inserting, after the word "conduit," the words "and pipes."

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 24, page 2, strike out the word "and," and after the word "conduit," insert the words "and pipes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend the committee amendment in line 7, page 3, by making the same amendment: Strike out the word "and" and insert, after the word "conduit," the words "and pipes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The other committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, in line 12, page 2, after the word "located," the words "and from time to time moved," so that it will read:

And said overhead tracks, conduit, and pipes hereby authorized shall be located and from time to time moved as may be directed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

That will meet the objection offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 12, after the word "located," insert the words "and from time to time moved."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 2, line 3, by striking out the word "a" and inserting the words "an underground."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. I move to further amend, on page 2, line 11, after the word "the," by inserting the word "underground."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, just before I went out my attention was called to a bill where somebody was proposing to erect a bridge so low that you could not drive a load of hay under it.

Mr. COUDREY. Mr. Chairman, that has been changed from 14 to 18 feet.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it all right now?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division, requested by the Chair, who announced that he was in doubt, there were—ayes 36, noes 56.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred Members present—a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. JAMES. That demand comes too late.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The result has been announced, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, after the point of no quorum is made and decided is it not too late to call for tellers on the original motion?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the question the Chair is ascertaining.

Mr. SIMS. That is the point of order that I desire to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been referred to a precedent touching the right to demand tellers after a point of no quorum has been made. The Chair reads from section 5999, volume 5, Hinds's Precedents:

The right to demand tellers as a further evidence of the vote is not waived by the fact that a question has been raised as to the presence of a quorum on the division and the Chair has counted the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that demand and ask that the committee do now rise and report back the several bills with the recommendation that they do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his demand for tellers?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. That being done, the motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation fails.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has already moved that the committee rise and report the bill which was acted upon in accordance with the action taken by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If that motion is voted down, my motion would be in order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would withdraw that motion, Mr. Chairman, and make this motion: That the committee do now rise and report back the several bills as amended, with the recommendation that they do pass as amended, pending the demand for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will remember that there were two bills laid aside with the recommendation that they do lie upon the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is my motion as to this one.

The CHAIRMAN. And as to the last bill, there has been no recommendation made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has the result of the last vote been announced?

The CHAIRMAN. The result of the last vote has been announced by the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Since the demand for tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that the gentleman from Michigan having withdrawn his demand for tellers, the motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation failed.

Mr. MANN. I did not hear the Chair. I beg the Chair's pardon.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan can not withdraw his former motion and substitute in its stead another motion, because when he withdrew the motion, then the control of the floor reverted to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who made the motion that the bill be laid aside with a recommendation that it do lie on the table. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan mean to include in the operation of his motion the bill which was recently discussed, the last bill under consideration before the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not. That stays upon the calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make my motion that the committee report this bill to the House with a recommendation that it do lie on the table.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan first moved that the committee rise. He afterwards said he would withdraw that motion and in its stead he would move that the committee rise and report certain bills with a favorable recommendation. Now, the point I urge upon the Chair is that he withdrew the first motion which he made, and after he made that motion and before he withdrew it the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] obtained the floor and moved that the bill lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Official Reporter will kindly report the order in which the several motions were made.

Mr. JAMES. Therefore the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is in order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is a question of whether he had the floor to make that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was recognized.

Mr. JAMES. The floor reverted to the gentleman from Kentucky when the motion of the gentleman from Michigan failed. It does by reason of the parliamentary law of this House.

Mr. MANN. May I make this suggestion to the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. In one moment. The notes of the Official Reporter show that the gentleman from Michigan first made the motion that the committee rise, prior to the announcement of the result by the Chair, and before it was in order. Further, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] made his motion immediately after the result of the vote was announced, and consequently when it was in order, and the latter motion is now before the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the motion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My motion is to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the several bills to the House in accordance with the orders already made.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WANGER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration certain bills relating to the District of Columbia and had directed him to report that the bills H. R. 19554, H. R. 13473, and S. 1864 lie upon the table, and that amendments to sundry other bills be agreed to and that the bills as amended do pass.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 19402.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19402) to enable the Telepost Company to construct its plant, operate the same, and transact its business in the District of Columbia, and to make necessary connections with other parts of its system.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 22390.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22390) to require all companies doing telegraph business in the District of Columbia to pay a tax on their gross receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and the title was amended.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 19636.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19636) to authorize the extension of Princeton place NW., in the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 16332.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16332) to provide for the condemnation of streets or parts of streets under the plan for the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 20370.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20370) authorizing the widening of First street NE., in the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 1864.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1864) to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes in square 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress in February, 1907.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. It is recommended from the Committee of the Whole House that this bill do lie upon the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do concur in the recommendation that that bill do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. It appears to the Chair that the motion would be directly to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, I make the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nine gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. On the motion to adjourn?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Twenty gentlemen have arisen; not a sufficient number.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The other side, Mr. Chairman.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Twenty-one have arisen. Eighty-nine have voted in the negative; not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I again raise the question of no quorum.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The decision was made that there was no quorum, and evidently a quorum is not present; but the gentleman made the motion that the House do now adjourn, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Chair has declared no quorum present, but has not yet ordered the doors closed.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to lay the bill upon the table. A quorum not being present, under the rule the Clerk will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

As many as are in favor of the motion that the bill do lie on the table will answer "yea," as many as are opposed will answer "nay," those not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 97, answered "present" 18, not voting 178, as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 15, 1910.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

Mr. KEAN called the Senate to order and directed the Secretary to read a communication from the President pro tempore, which was read, as follows:

PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE, UNITED STATES SENATE,
March 15, 1910.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I hereby appoint Senator JOHN KEAN to perform the duties of the Chair.

WM. P. FRYE,
President pro tempore.

Mr. KEAN thereupon took the chair as presiding officer and directed the Secretary to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the credentials of the Hon. LE ROY PERCY, elected a Senator from the State of Mississippi, have been read and placed on the files of the Senate. Mr. PERCY is now present, and I ask that the oath of office be administered to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator elect will please present himself at the desk.

Mr. PERCY was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. MONEY, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

OFFICERS OF THE REGULAR ARMY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 3d instant, a tabulated statement showing, as of January 31, 1910, the latest date for which complete returns have been received from the army, the names of all officers of the army on detached service other than temporary, their rank, regiment or corps, etc. (S. Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of John C. Calhoun, presented by the State of South Carolina, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of South Carolina.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable copper-process plates, to be bound with these proceedings.

WASHINGTON GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. BROWN. I am informed on inquiry that the report submitted from the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia on Senate resolution 172 yesterday has not been printed. I therefore ask that the subject may go over until to-morrow, in order that we may have the report before us.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is entirely satisfactory to me. I trust that order will be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the resolution is on the calendar.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to ask at this time also that the resolution as amended and the report be printed in the RECORD, so that we shall have the resolution and report before us to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object to that. Let the original resolution, the resolution as amended, and the report be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The original resolution submitted by Mr. BROWN February 7, 1910, is as follows:

Senate resolution 172.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be requested to inform the Senate what legal authority, if any, exists for the present capitalization of the Washington Gas-Light Company, a corporation existing and doing business in the District of Columbia, and what legal authority, if any, exists for an increase of the present capitalization of said corporation.

The amendment to the resolution reported yesterday by Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia, was to strike out all after the word "Resolved" and to insert:

That the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to make an investigation into the affairs of the Washington Gas-Light Company, a corporation authorized under and by virtue of acts of Congress and doing business in the District of Columbia, and to report the facts to the Senate. In making such investigation said committee shall especially inquire into the capitalization of said company, including its stocks, bonds, and certificates of indebtedness, when and by what authority issued, their volume and value; also its holdings in other companies, their character, and value; also the extent, character, cost, and value of the physical property of said company, the cost of operation, dividends declared, how and when paid, the volume and quality of gas sold and price collected therefor, the chaarcter of service, and all other matters relating to the business of said corporation.

Said committee is authorized to employ experts, administer oaths, take testimony, send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer to report its hearings, to sit during the session of Congress or during recess, and to have the testimony taken printed.

All necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The report submitted yesterday by Mr. BROWN is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 398, Sixty-first Congress, second session.]

WASHINGTON GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia, submitted the following report, to accompany Senate resolution 172:

The resolution proposes an inquiry into the affairs of the Washington Gas-Light Company. This is a corporation chartered by the Federal Government under act of Congress approved July 8, 1848. The resolution is sustained by several reasons, among them being the following:

1. The Washington Gas-Light Company, being a creature of Congress, Congress is responsible for its behavior. In order to discharge this responsibility Congress should know all the facts incident to the business of the company, its capitalization, the extent, character, and value of its properties, the quality and cost of its service to the public.

2. Such information is not obtainable from the annual reports of the company made to Congress.

3. The act of 1848 limited the authorized capital stock of the company to $50,000, which has since been increased to $2,600,000, some of which, it is claimed, is without legislative sanction.

4. The company has outstanding certificates of indebtedness equal to its capital stock, to wit, $2,600,000, bearing 6 per cent interest, all of which, it is claimed, is wholly unauthorized by law.

5. It is impossible for Congress to determine what is a reasonable charge for gas unless Congress shall first know the value of the plant, the amount actually invested, and the cost of production.

THE LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THE COMPANY.

The act of 1848 contained this provision: "And be it further enacted that the capital stock of this corporation shall not exceed $50,000."

Section 10 of said act provides:

"And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to authorize the said Washington Gas-Light Company to make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, draft, check, order, promissory note, change ticket, or anything else promising or agreeing to pay money, intended to circulate as money, or the tendency of which shall be to circulate as money or currency; and the violation of any one of the provisions of this section shall be a forfeiture of the charter herein granted, and a fine of $50 against each of the directors voting for the same." [Approved July 8, 1848 (chap. 96, Stat. L., 724).]

This act was amended August 2, 1852, by the insertion of the words "three hundred and" just before the word "fifty." The same act amended section 7 of the original 1848 statute by inserting immediately after the word "Washington" the words "and Georgetown." The latter amendment did not purport to do anything more than to allow the company to do business in Georgetown as well as Washington. This left the total authorized capital stock in the year 1852 at $350,000. Subsequently, in January, 1855, Congress passed an independent act, section 1 of which reads as follows:

"That the Washington Gas-Light Company be, and is hereby, authorized to increase the capital stock thereof $150,000" (sec. 1, chap. 22, 10 Stat. L., 835), bringing the authorized capital stock in 1855 up to $500,000.

Subsequently, by act of Congress approved May 24, 1866, the capital stock was further increased $500,000. This purported to be an act amending the 1848 statute, section 2 thereof being as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the capital stock of said company be, and the same is hereby, increased $500,000, subject to the same liability as is provided in the eleventh section of the original act of incorporation, approved July 8, 1848."

By this act the total authorized capital stock of the company reached the sum of $1,000,000 in 1866.

Subsequently, by an act approved May 29, 1872, Congress increased the capital stock $200,000 and granted the privilege to the company further authorizing an increase of $1,000,000, as the same might be required from time to time, in extending the plant in the District of Columbia east of Rock Creek. The act is an independent, not an amendatory act, and reads as follows:

"That the capital stock of the Washington Gas-Light Company be, and the same is hereby, increased $200,000, with the privilege of increasing it not exceeding $1,000,000, as the same may be required from time to time, for extending their works in the District of Columbia east of Rock Creek: Provided, however, That said increase of capital stock shall not be made from undivided profits of said company which may have already accrued, or may hereafter accrue, but from capital actually paid in: Provided, also, That said increased capital stock shall be subject to all the conditions of the charter of said Washington Gas-Light Company." [Approved May 29, 1872 (chap. 135, 17 Stat. L., 192).]

So that it appears in 1872 the total authorized capital stock of this company was $2,000,000.

Subsequently, by an act approved June 6, 1896, entitled "An act relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia," the company was authorized, under section 5, to still further increase its capital stock to an amount equal "to the actual cash value of the plant and the necessary cost of further extension or further enlargement of the plant," its cash value and cost to be ascertained by a proceeding under the direction of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Section 5 reads as follows:

"That neither the Washington Gas-Light Company nor the Georgetown Gas-Light Company shall hereafter issue any greater number of shares of stock than shall be equal to the actual cash value of said plants and the necessary cost of the future extensions or future enlargement of plants, which cash value and cost of extensions shall first be ascertained and authorized upon petition therefor to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, under such regulations as the chief justice and the justices thereof shall prescribe; also, if either of the said corporations shall desire hereafter to issue bonds upon their property, secured by mortgage or otherwise, upon petition therefor to said court, setting forth the necessity thereof and the amount of stock issued and outstanding, it may and shall be lawful for said court or the chief justice and justices thereof, as the case may be, or one of them, upon public notice, to be prescribed by the rules of said court, to permit the issuance of such bonds and mortgage as desired: Provided, That the amount of stock and bonds issued shall not exceed the actual cash value of said plants and the cost of such extensions or the enlargement of plants: And provided further, That the Washington Gas-Light Company is hereby authorized to issue such additional amount of capital stock as will provide for the conversion into such stock of its outstanding certificates of indebtedness, which conversion of said certificates is hereby authorized to an amount not exceeding six hundred thousand dollars." [Approved June 6, 1896 (chap. 335, 29 Stat. L., 252).]

The last provision of the act quoted is the first word by Congress in recognition of the outstanding certificates of indebtedness formerly issued by the company. It will be noted that this provision authorizes their "conversion into capital stock to an amount not exceeding $600,000." The court records of the District of Columbia and of the United States Supreme Court disclose that the company sought to increase its capital stock under provisions of section 5 above quoted. A petition was filed by the company in the trial court of the District in which it was prayed that there might be a judicial investigation as to the value of the plant and that the company might be authorized to increase its capital stock to the full value thereof as provided in the act.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia appeared in the suit and questioned the constitutionality of the act on the ground that the same vested the judiciary with a power unauthorized by the Constitution.

Pending the trial in the district court, the commissioners filed a petition in the court of appeals asking for a writ of prohibition directed to the trial court against further proceedings in the suit brought by the company to increase its capital stock.

The court of appeals sustained the petition and granted the writ of prohibition, from which judgment the Washington Gas-Light Company appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States on February 25, 1908.

Pending the appeal in said court and before the case had been reached for submission, Congress attached to the annual appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1909, the following proviso:

"Provided, That section 5 of 'An act relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia,' approved June 6, 1896, and all remedies therein provided be, and the same are hereby, repealed, and all pending proceedings thereunder shall be vacated, and no judgment, decree, finding, permit, or valuation of any kind mentioned or intended to be mentioned in said section shall be made or ascertained." (Par. 2, chap. 250, 35 Stat. L., 703.)

This proviso not only repealed section 5 of the 1896 act, but it also ended the lawsuit involving the right of the company to increase its capitalization then pending on appeal in the Supreme Court of the United States. This proviso also vacated all proceedings had under section 5, by the company, including the authority to convert $600,000 of certificates into capital stock; so that it is a serious question whether the conversion of the $600,000 of certificates of indebtedness before referred to into capital stock is valid. Congress has no information as to when this conversion was made. The only evidence it has is that the capital stock was at some time or another increased by the amount of $600,000. This evidence is to be found in the last annual report of the company giving its outstanding capital stock as $2,600,000.

It may be said in this connection that while the appropriation act of 1909 for the District of Columbia was not approved until March 3, 1909, in which section 5 of the 1896 statute was repealed, there was pending in the Senate a bill entitled "An act to regulate the price of gas in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes." It likewise repealed said section 5 and at the same time authorized an increase of the capital stock of the company to an amount sufficient to cover outstanding stocks, bonds, "and certificates of indebtedness." This bill, however, was never reported back to the Senate from the committee to which it was referred.

From the legislative history of the company since its charter was granted in 1848, it is clear—

First. That the capitalization of the company is within the control of Congress.

Second. That the company has accepted such authorizations as Congress has given it and has acted thereunder.

Third. That the company availed itself of that portion of section 5 (since repealed) of the 1896 act, authorizing it to convert certificates of indebtedness in the sum of $600,000 into capital stock.

Fourth. That the certificates of indebtedness were issued without any express authority of law; their validity and so much of the capital stock as they represent is therefore open to serious question.

Fifth. If certificates of indebtedness represent no actual indebtedness due from the company, but, in fact, represent earnings and profits, they operate as an unauthorized increase of capital stock in violation of law.

It is obvious that Congress never intended the company should have power to issue any certificates of indebtedness. The charter act of 1848 discouraged any undertaking of that kind when it provided in section 11 of the act as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That each of the stockholders of the Washington Gas-Light Company shall be held liable in his or her individual capacity for all debts of the said company, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit as other debts or liabilities before the court of tribunal having jurisdiction of the case." [Approved July 8, 1848 (chap. 96, 9 Stat. L., 724).]

Congress in all of the legislation referred to has asserted its control of the capital stock issued by the company manifestly for one purpose, that purpose being to protect the public against extortionate charges for gas, based on an excessive capitalization. If an investigation should develop that the $2,600,000 evidenced by certificates of indebtedness bearing 6 per cent interest in fact, represent undivided profits and do not represent in any sense a valid indebtedness, it is clear the public has been wronged. Such wrong can not be remedied by Congress unless and until Congress first ascertain the truth about the actual consideration for such certificates.

THE PRICE OF GAS.

The original act of 1848 was silent on the subject of gas prices. The act of June 25, 1860, was the first attempt of Congress to fix the price. The price was made at 35 cents per hundred cubic feet, subject to discount at 10 per cent if paid at a certain time. (12 Stat. L., 722.)

The act of 1862 fixed the price from the 1st day of July, 1862, at 28 cents per hundred cubic feet of gas furnished to the Government and 30 cents to other consumers. (12 Stat. L., 534.)

The act of January 30, 1865, repealed said acts of 1860 and 1862, prohibiting the company from receiving on and after December, 1864, for the benefit of its stockholders a greater price for gas than 40 cents per hundred cubic feet, subject to a 10 per cent discount on all government bills and 5 per cent for all other consumers. (13 Stat. L., 426.)

The act of June 23, 1874, entitled "An act regulating gas works," fixed the price of gas at the rate of $2.50 per thousand cubic feet furnished the Government, and to other consumers $2.75 per thousand feet. (18 Stat. L., 277.)

The act of June 6, 1896, fixed the price of gas for the Washington Gas-Light Company at a rate not to exceed $1.10 per thousand feet until the 1st day of July, 1901, and after that at $1 per thousand cubic feet. This rate has recently been reduced by the company to 90 cents per thousand cubic feet if paid at a certain time, but raised the rate to $1.10 if not paid then, in clear violation of law.

The last annual report of the company, made to Congress February 1, 1910, purporting to give a detailed statement of its business for the year ending December 31, 1909, shows the net earnings, after deducting operating expenses, to be $646,631.50. This was 12 per cent plus on a capitalization of $5,200,000, assuming the certificates of indebtedness to be a part of the capitalization. If we exclude the certificates of indebtedness, a net earning of 24 per cent plus on the actual capital stock is reported by the company. It goes without argument that such a net income is excessive, unless the facts shall disclose that the actual value of the plant and the actual amount invested is far greater than its capital stock. On page 2 of the report it appears that what is called "a regular" dividend of $260,000 had been paid the stockholders; also an "extra" dividend of $260,000, or in all 20 per cent paid in dividends during the year. In addition to these dividends the company expended $263,524.06 in extensions, constructions, etc., and had left a surplus of $238,355.03.

When this report of the company for 1909 is considered in connection with its history since 1848, as shown on the legislative journals of Congress and as shown by the various reports of congressional committees, it would seem to be the duty of Congress to inquire fully into the affairs of the company. From the hearings had by former committees of Congress and from their reports it may be learned that the dividends kept pace with every increase in the capital stock. Indeed, the company appears to have been unable to increase the capital stock fast enough to keep the dividends at a reasonable rate on their face. The treasurer of the company, in a letter to the Hon. Samual J. Randall in 1881, declared that "for the thirty-one and one-half years the average of cash and stock dividends had been 16.8 per cent." After 1881 the dividends seem to have averaged much higher—10 per cent in 1882, 50 per cent in 1883 on $2,000,000 capitalization, 10 per cent in 1884, 12½ per cent in 1885, although the company earned 17½ per cent according to the Spooner report.

On February 3, 1896, the company, in answer to an inquiry, informed Congressman J. W. Babcock that the company had paid in the year 1895 dividends in the sum of $600,000, or more than 23 per cent on its capital stock, and had remaining a surplus of $89,922.38.

It must be conceded that Congress has the power to regulate the charge for gas. How can Congress exercise this power with justice to the company and the public in the absence of information touching the facts sought to be elicited by this resolution?

The company is entitled to a fair and reasonable return on its investment; the value of the investment in dollars must be known in order to determine what would be a fair and reasonable return. This return must be paid by the public. From every standpoint the inquiry should be ordered.

Again, the inquiry should be ordered to the end that a proper standard for the capitalization of all public-service corporations may be declared and established by Congress. Capitalization is the key to government control and regulation of all corporations subject to its jurisdiction. The company under discussion and inquiry furnishes to Congress an immediate opportunity to declare a wise and prudent public policy in respect to capitalization of corporations generally. The opportunity should not be lost.

The committee reports the resolution back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass, amended as follows:

Strike out, after the word "Resolved," in line 1, all the remaining lines from 1 to 7, inclusive, and in their place insert the following:

"That the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia is hereby authorized to make an investigation into the affairs of the Washington Gas-Light Company, a corporation authorized under and by virtue of acts of Congress and doing business in the District of Columbia, and to report the facts to the Senate. In making such investigation said committee shall especially inquire into the capitalization of said company, including its stocks, bonds, and certificates of indebtedness, when and by what authority issued, their volume and value; also its holdings in other companies, their character, and value; also the extent, character, cost, and value of the physical property of said company, the cost of operation, dividends declared, how and when paid, the volume and quality of gas sold and price collected therefor, the character of service, and all other matters relating to the business of said corporation.

"Said committee is authorized to employ experts, administer oaths, take testimony, send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer to report its hearings, to sit during the session of Congress or during recess, and to have the testimony taken printed.

"All necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate."

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 779), which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, a report of the International Waterways Commission, dated January 8, 1910, on the regulation of Lake Erie, together with the appendix, table, and plates.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 14, 1910.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment numbered 21 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15384) making appropriation for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, having met, after full and free conference report to their respective Houses that, as to the amendment in disagreement, the Senate recedes.

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 16332. An act to provide for the condemnation of streets or parts of streets under the plan for the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia;

H. R. 17744. An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same, and to provide for the punishment thereof;

H. R. 18818. An act to authorize certain changes in the permanent system of highways, District of Columbia;

H. R. 19402. An act to enable the Telepost Company to construct its plant, operate the same, and transact its business in the District of Columbia, and to make necessary connections with other parts of its system;

H. R. 19636. An act to authorize the extension of Princeton place NW., in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 20370. An act authorizing the widening of First street NE., in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 22390. An act to amend paragraph 5 of section 6 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," so as to require all companies doing telegraph business in the District of Columbia to pay a tax on their gross receipts.

MANUFACTURE OF ICE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1864) to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes in square 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress in February, 1907, which were, on page 1, line 7, after the word "permits," to insert "to the Washington Market Company;" on page 2, line 1, to strike out "a," and insert "an underground;" on the same page, line 8, to strike out "fourteen," and insert "eighteen;" on the same page, line 9, after "the," to insert "underground;" in line 10, after the word "located," to insert "and from time to time moved;" and on page 2, line 16, after the word "granted," to insert:

Provided, That the Washington Market Company, its successors or assigns, to whom under authority of this act permission may be granted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to construct or maintain the overhead track and line of conduit hereinbefore authorized shall pay for the privilege of the construction and maintenance in public space of the said overhead track, conduit, and pipes an annual franchise tax of $100, which sum shall be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia during the month of May of each year subsequent to the granting by the commissioners of the original permit for the work: Provided further, That failure to pay to the collector of taxes the said sum annually within the period named shall operate to annul and render void the privileges herein authorized in respect to the overhead track, conduit, and pipes referred to: And provided further, That any sums paid to the collector of taxes in accordance with this measure shall be credited as are other taxes of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the franchise tax of $100 above referred to shall be in addition to any and all other taxes now or hereafter imposed by law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN OATES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 864) to correct the military record of John Oates, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws John Oates shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as private in Company D, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, on the 21st day of September, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

And to amend the title so as to read "An act for the relief of John Oates."

Mr. BULKELEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN M. MILLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 863) to correct the military record of John M. Miller, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws governing the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, or any branch thereof, John M. Miller shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a first sergeant of Battery K, Fifth Regiment United States Artillery, on the 14th day of December, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

And to amend the title so as to read "An act for the relief of John M. Miller."

Mr. BULKELEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

DEWITT EASTMAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 614) for the relief of Dewitt Eastman.

Mr. BULKELEY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BULKELEY, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO the conferees on the part of the Senate.

GRANT OF LANDS TO SEATTLE, WASH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed and the calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5432) to grant certain lands to the city of Seattle, Wash., for the protection of the source of its water supply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

Mr. HALE. I will not object to this bill, but after it is disposed of I ask that the Senate shall proceed with the calendar in order.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the public lands in township 20 north, range 10 east, township 21 north, ranges 9, 10, and 11 east, and township 22 north, ranges 8, 9, 10, and 11 east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington, are hereby withdrawn from all location, settlement, and entry under the public-land laws: Provided, That this withdrawal shall in no way operate to interfere with the right of any settler or other claimant under the public-land laws to complete a claim to any portion of such land heretofore lawfully initiated.

SEC. 2. That within the area hereby withdrawn the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, through its proper authorities, is hereby granted the right to purchase within two years from the date of the passage of this act, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, any of the public lands within the drainage basin of Cedar River and its tributaries, for the purpose of water storage, supply of its waterworks, and the protection of such source of supply, said purchase to be made through the local land office of the district in which the lands are situated, and upon which purchases patents shall issue as in other cases provided: Provided, That the city, before making such purchase and within one year from and after the passage of this act, shall cause to be executed at its own expense a survey defining the limits of said drainage basin, and shall file in the General Land Office a plat of such survey, said survey to be made under the supervision of and to be approved by the United States surveyor-general for the State of Washington.

SEC. 3. That upon the filing of the plat as prescribed in the foregoing section the withdrawal provided for by this act shall cease to operate upon any of the lands withdrawn and not shown by such plat to be included in the drainage basin; and the withdrawal provided for by this act shall cease to operate upon all lands included in such drainage basin which at the expiration of two years from and after the passage of this act the city of Seattle shall not have purchased.

SEC. 4. That if the lands purchased by the city of Seattle under this act, or any portions thereof, are attempted to be disposed of by or for the said city or to be used for any purpose other than that herein specified, in that event the said lands shall revert to the United States, and this condition shall be expressed in the patents to be issued under the terms of this act: Provided, however, That the city of Seattle may at any time dispose of any dead, down, and mature timber upon the lands purchased as provided herein, but shall otherwise maintain the lands as a forest park in connection with the protection of the water supply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask a question regarding this bill. What is the value of this land per acre?

Mr. PILES. The lands are already in a forest reserve, and it is for the purpose of protecting the Cedar River watershed that the city desires to acquire the land. The bill provides that it shall be forever held as a forest park in connection with the protection of the water supply. As a matter of fact, the land is not to be used for any commercial purpose, but simply for the preservation of the watershed, and the city is to pay $1.25 per acre for it, the usual price that the Government charges for such lands.

Mr. BURTON. I noticed that as originally introduced the bill provided that the price paid should be $2.50 per acre.

Mr. PILES. That is correct, but the Committee on Public Lands found that all other bills of similar character have been passed at a price of $1.25 per acre, and they thought it was unjust to require the city to pay $2.50 an acre when the land is already in a forest reserve and would, under the terms of the bill, remain as a park.

Mr. BURTON. It is to be noted that in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior he states:

Inasmuch as the lands involved are situated within national forests, it is suggested that before final action is taken the Secretary of Agriculture be requested to submit a report in the matter.

Has the Secretary of Agriculture submitted any report in regard to this bill?

Mr. PILES. No; the Committee on Public Lands did not think that was necessary. The committee understood the situation fully, and they had ample information on the subject. The Senator will see from the face of the bill that the land must be maintained as a park. So I can not see wherein the Secretary of Agriculture could find any possible objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the city of Seattle, Wash., to purchase certain lands for the protection of the source of its water supply."

Mr. BURKETT subsequently said: I should like to inquire what was done with calendar 373, being the bill (S. 5432) to grant certain lands to the city of Seattle, Wash., for the protection of the source of the water supply. It was apparently passed over between calendar Nos. 372 and 374.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from Washington called up the bill, and it was passed.

Mr. BURKETT. Earlier in the day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Earlier in the day.

Mr. BURKETT. I am sorry that is true. It seems to me the bill is in rather peculiar shape. There are some details of it which ought to be considered. I have no disposition, however, to move that it be reconsidered.

Mr. PILES. I will be glad to talk it over with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. It appears to me the bill ought to be reconsidered and amended. That is the reason why I called the attention of the Senate to it.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HALE. Now, let us have the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the calendar, under Rule VIII.

The bill (S. 3724) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. HALE. Let the first five bills on the calendar go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 3724 will go over. The titles of the succeeding bills will be announced.

The bill (S. 1630) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from Washington to the Arlington property was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 12316) to provide for the government of the Canal Zone, the construction of the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 5485) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of areas of public land pending report and recommendation to Congress or for examination and classification was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 530) to amend an act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto, so as to extend the benefits thereof to the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 5715) providing for the establishment of building lines and special building restrictions in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over without prejudice.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 116) to amend an act to correct chapter 271 of volume 35, United States Statutes at Large, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the joint resolution may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

The next bill on the calendar is the bill (S. 6737) to create a court of commerce and to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is the unfinished business. It will go over also.

The bill (S. 3806) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been already read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the bill may be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 19633) to authorize Aransas Pass Channel and Dock Company to construct a bridge across Morris and Cumming Channel was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] left at the desk a request that the bill shall go over in his absence.

Mr. JONES. I wish to state that when the bill was reached yesterday, the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] then in the chair, announced that it was the desire of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that the bill should go over, and I suppose that the same order applies to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

MORRISON CHANNEL BRIDGE, MICHIGAN.

The bill (H. R. 21221) to authorize the city of St. Joseph, Mich., to construct a bridge across Morrison Channel of the St. Joseph River, Michigan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BONDING OF OFFICERS.

The bill (H. R. 18902) to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon," was read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That seems to be a very important bill, and it occurs to me that some Senator ought to make an explanation of it or else the bill ought to be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that the bill shall go over?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that it may go over unless some explanation of the changes which it proposes in the statute shall be made.

Mr. HALE. Is there a report filed with the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There does not seem to be a report with the bill here. The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] reported the bill. He is now here.

Mr. DEPEW. There is a report on the bill made by the Judiciary Committee of the House. I have it here. The bill simply changes the approval and filing of the bonds from the Attorney-General's office to the Treasury Department. The Attorney-General wrote a letter to the House Committee asking for the passage of the bill, stating that he did not have the machinery or equipment to take care of the bonds, and that the Treasury Department did. That is all the change there is in the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN HYDE.

The bill (S. 1056) for the relief of Benjamin Hyde was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "four thousand six hundred and thirty-three dollars and forty" and insert "four hundred and seventy-four dollars and sixty-five," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Benjamin Hyde, the sum of $474.65, for extra materials and labor furnished by said Hdye in the construction of a temporary post-office at Chicago, Ill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESA VERDE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 1751) to amend an act entitled "An act creating the Mesa Verde National Park," approved June 29, 1906, was considered as in Committee on the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the word "Park," to strike out "the 5-mile strip;" on page 2, line 1, after the word "park," to strike out "and 5-mile strip" and insert "and the ruins in the 5-mile strip south of the park, and the construction and improvement of roads leading thereto;" and, in line 5, after the word "park," to strike out the words "or strip," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may, upon terms and conditions to be fixed by him, grant leases and permits for the use of the lands or development of the resources thereof, in the Mesa Verde National Park, and the fund derived therefrom shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the administration, protection, and improvement of the park and the ruins in the 5-mile strip south of the park, and the construction and improvement of roads leading thereto: Provided, That such leases or privileges shall not include any of the prehistoric ruins in said park, or exclude the public from free and convenient access thereto.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BACON. If there is a report with the bill, I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. HUGHES March 7, 1910, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1751) to amend an act entitled "An act creating the Mesa Verde National Park," approved June 29, 1906, having had the same under consideration, report it back favorably, and recommend that it do pass as amended.

The bill was referred by your committee to the Secretary of the Interior for his views in regard to the same. His letter is attached hereto and made a part of this report. The amendments recommended are in accordance with his suggestions.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 4, 1910.

SIR: In compliance with your request of June 4, 1909, I submit the following report and recommendation in connection with S. 1751, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act creating the Mesa Verde National Park," approved June 29, 1906.

The act of Congress approved June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 616), reserved the public lands therein described from settlement, entry, sale, or other disposal, and set the same aside as a public reservation designated as the Mesa Verde National Park, placed the same under the control of the Secretary of the Interior and authorized him to prescribe rules and regulations for the management and care thereof.

The proviso to section 2 of the act provides that prehistoric ruins situated within 5 miles of the boundaries of the park on Indian and public lands should be under the custodianship of the Secretary of the Interior, and should be administered by the same service established for the park.

The act, however, made no provision for the granting of privileges or leases for the accommodation of tourists, the development of the resources, or for the use of the revenues derived therefrom.

Senate bill 1751, now under consideration, covers these points, and in so far as it relates to the lands within the Mesa Verde National Park and the amendments hereinafter suggested relating to the care of the ruins in the 5-mile strip south of the park, I recommend its enactment into law.

As to the so-called "5-mile strip," however, which embraces approximately 50,000 acres of entered, patented, and granted land; 40,000 acres of vacant public lands, a considerable area of which appears to have no prehistoric ruins upon it, and about 45,000 acres of land of the Southern Ute Indian Reservation, I do not favor the enactment of the bill into law for the following reasons:

1. As to the public lands mentioned I do not think that provision for their leasing or disposition should be made in this bill, but that they should be held, leased, or disposed of under the existing public-land laws or such general laws as Congress may hereafter enact.

2. As to the lands in the Southern Ute Indian Reservation within the 5-mile strip and abutting the park on the south, there are a very large number of prehistoric ruins which should be protected and cared for, and means of access thereto provided. I do not favor the leasing under this bill, and the expenditure of the proceeds therefrom for the maintenance of the park and 5-mile strip in this Indian reservation, for the reason that if the lands within the Indian reservation are leased the proceeds should be given to or used for the Indians, for whom the reservation was created.

In the interest of the protection of these ruins it is highly desirable, however, that at some future time this tract of land, after the extinguishment of Indian title, be added permanently to the park, and steps will shortly be taken by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs looking to the negotiation with the Ute Indians for the exchange of this land in the 5-mile strip for certain lands located in the southeast corner of the Montezuma National Forest. It is understood that the Ute Indians are desirous of making this exchange, and the supervisor of the Montezuma National Forest has recommended that the entire Ute Mountain division be eliminated from the forest, for the reason that it contains no merchantable timber and is not regarded as forest land, never having produced timber of commercial value.

I have the honor, therefore, to recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "and five-mile strip," in line 6, page 1, and the striking out of the words "and five-mile strip," in line 11, page 1, and the inserting in lieu thereof "and the ruins in the five-mile strip south of the park, and the construction and improvement of roads leading thereto;" also the elimination of the words "or strip," in line 1, page 2, leaving the provisions of the bill, if it be enacted into law, applicable only to the Mesa Verde National Park so far as the granting of leases and permits for the use of the lands or development of the resources thereof is concerned.

Very respectfully, R. A. BALLINGER, Secretary.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO LA JUNTA, COLO.

The bill (S. 2984) to grant certain lands to the town of La Junta, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "and," to insert "the northeast quarter of section;" on page 2, line 3, after the word "use," to strike out "and behoof forever;" and in line 5, after the word "shall," to strike out "forever," so as to make the section read:

That the following-described tract of land, situate in the county of Otero and State of Colorado, namely, sections 21, 22, 23, and 24, and the north one-half of sections 25, 26, 27, and the northeast quarter of section 28, or so much thereof as may be desired, in township 23 south, range 55 west, of the sixth principal meridian, containing 3,840 acres, more or less, be, and the same is hereby, granted and conveyed to the town of La Junta, in the county of Otero and in the State of Colorado, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre by said town to the United States, to have and to hold to its use for an arid park and other public purposes; and for these purposes the town of La Junta shall have the right, in its discretion, to control and use any and all parts of the premises herein conveyed, subject to the existing laws and regulations concerning public parks, and in making such improvements as may be necessary for the purposes above set forth: Provided, however, That the grant hereby made is, and the patent issued hereunder shall be, subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person or persons in or to the above-described premises, or any part thereof, and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, in line 21, after the word "describe," to insert—

And in the event that the same shall not be used for a public park for three successive years the same shall revert to the United States. Declaration of forfeiture under this act may be declared by the Secretary of the Interior.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the town of La Junta on accepting this grant to provide for the proper care and protection of the land herein described, and to use the same for the purposes herein granted: Provided, That said town shall not have the right to sell or convey the land herein granted, or any part thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described, and in the event that the same shall not be used for a public park for three successive years the same shall revert to the United States. Declaration of forfeiture under this act may be declared by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I want to call attention to an apparent inconsistency in the phraseology of this bill created by the adoption of the amendment added at its close. In the bill on page 2, in lines 3 and 4, there is authorization for making a grant to the town, "to have and to hold to its use for an arid park and other public purposes." "Other public purposes" might mean waterworks or a building for a police station or anything of that kind, while at the end of the bill it is provided: "In the event that the same shall not be used for a public park for three successive years the same shall revert to the United States." It would seem to me that the language "or other public purposes" ought to be inserted at that point, or, rather, ought to be omitted in lines 3 and 4.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, this is called "an arid park," but there are other park uses to which it is devoted and they are covered by the words "other purposes." The whole of it is limited by the fact that it must be a public park by the amendment. An arid park is one devoted to the growth of peculiar vegetation which will not grow anywhere else. It is to be a resort, and in that sense is a public park, but it is arid in its character and it is not the usual public park. Unless it is confined to that use and is available within the time fixed it lapses, whatever the uses may be.

Mr. BURTON. It is, however, stated, the Senator from Colorado will observe, in the portion of the bill which was framed and introduced before this amendment that the grant shall be "for an arid park and other public purposes."

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. What is the use of the language "and other public purposes?" Is it not inconsistent with the limitation to use as a park?

Mr. HUGHES. As I understand that, the following words make sure of the fact that the "other public purposes" are of the character of park uses. An arid park is one thing and a public park is another thing. This is a public park of the arid kind, and it is limited to park purposes. That is the purpose of the last language, so that the other expression might not be misunderstood.

Mr. BURTON. If that is true, why is not the language "for an arid park" sufficient without the words "and other public purposes?"

Mr. HUGHES. Because it must be used as a public park or else the town would not have the authority under the state law to pay for it or to use it.

Mr. BURTON. I am not disposed to object to the passage of the bill, but it seems to me more fortunate language could have been chosen to convey the meaning that is intended.

Mr. HUGHES. That is possible, but we had to use language which would bring it within the power of the town under our cities and towns act and at the same time bring it under the laws here. The two taken together, we think, accomplishes that purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF MINES IN INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The bill (H. R. 13915) to establish in the Department of the Interior a bureau of mines was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. I move that that bill be placed on the calendar under Rule IX.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DICK subsequently said: Mr. President, I move that the bill (H. R. 13915) to establish in the Department of the Interior a bureau of mines may be restored to its place on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment. I inquire what was the Senator's request?

Mr. DICK. My request was to restore the bill creating a bureau of mines to the calendar under Rule VIII. It was transferred this morning, I understand, to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that was done on my motion this morning. That bill can never be considered and disposed of under Rule VIII. It is of that importance and there is so much opposition to it that it naturally belongs to the calendar under Rule IX. It is for that reason I made the motion, and I do not agree to a reconsideration of the motion.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The bill (S. 6708) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce," was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, while I shall at the earliest opportunity ask for the consideration of that bill, I think it might as well go over to Rule IX. It will doubtless have to be considered under that rule at any rate, and I ask that that disposition be made of it this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

JAMES B. FERGUSON.

The bill (S. 1021) to appoint James B. Ferguson a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps of the Army and place him on the retired list was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGE IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 6793) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River in the counties of Okanogan and Douglas, Wash., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment in section 1, page 1, beginning in line 3, to strike out—

That the assent of the United States of America is hereby given to the Okanogan Electric Railway, a corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, and such other persons and municipal corporations as may be associated with it, to construct and maintain a bridge over the Columbia River between the counties of Okanogan and Douglas.

And to insert—

That the Okanogan Electric Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River, between the counties of Okanogan and Douglas, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation.

So as to make the section read:

That the Okanogan Electric Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River, between the counties of Okanogan and Douglas, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at the town of Bridgeport, in the State aforesaid, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OKANOGAN RIVER BRIDGE IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 6794) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Okanogan River, in the county of Okanogan, Wash., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, beginning in line 2, to strike out—

That the assent of the United States of America is hereby given to the Okanogan Electric Railway Company, a corporation incorporated by the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge over the Okanogan River in the county of Okanogan, in the State aforesaid, at a point known as Defflins Ferry, situated.

And to insert—

That the Okanogan Electric Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Okanogan River in the county of Okanogan, Wash., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Defflins Ferry.

So as to make the section read:

That the Okanogan Electric Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Okanogan River in the county of Okanogan, Wash., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Defflins Ferry, about 7½ miles from the junction of said Okanogan River with the Columbia River, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Emma K. Frank, widow of Royal T. Frank, late brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, $30.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to propose an amendment. On page 8, line 3, I move to strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty." The evidence which we had received at the time of making up the bill justified only the amount which was allowed. Since that time I have ascertained that the claimant is absolutely helpless, needs the constant aid and attention of another person, is very aged—I think over 80 years of age—and I think, following our rule, the amount should be raised to $50.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty," so as to make the item read:

The name of Oscar Hugh La Grange, late colonel First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SADDLE MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 5629) to set apart certain lands in the State of Oregon as a public park, to be known as the Saddle Mountain National Park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator who introduced the bill is present I would like to ask him what will be the size of the park.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and reported by him. The Chair is not informed as to the size of the park.

Mr. BACON. As the Senator from Oregon is not here, I will not press the inquiry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The bill (H. R. 10321) for the relief of homestead settlers under the acts of February 20, 1904; June 5 and 28, 1906; and March 2, 1907, was announced as the next business in order, and the Secretary proceeded to read it.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say there is a mistake about this bill. It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, but was never considered by that committee, and I was about to ask to have it referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. In the meantime the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] reported it as coming from the Committee on Public Lands, when we had never considered it in that committee.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the matter never came to my observation until the bill was reached on the calendar. It is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It refers to Indian matters entirely, and was taken up at the last meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs, assuming it had been referred to that committee. It is clearly within the jurisdiction of that committee.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator so move?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GAMBLE. Would it not preserve the jurisdiction of the respective committees to move that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. NELSON. Exactly. I ask that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the committee has been discharged and that the bill is on the calendar.

Mr. HALE. You do not need to do that.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. Do I understand——

Mr. HALE. The bill has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; I may say that the Committee on Indian Affairs considered the bill at its last session. It is a matter of very much importance, especially the second section of the bill, because the time of payment comes on the 1st day of April, and it is necessary that action should be taken before that day. It was entirely a misapprehension on the part of the Committee on Indian Affairs, because we assumed that the bill had gone there, as it is entirely within the jurisdiction of that committee. If its consideration by the Senate this morning would be proper I would be very glad to have the bill considered, because it is a matter that has been delayed. I reported it from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with a unanimous report.

Mr. NELSON. I think the bill ought to go to the committee, where it really belongs.

Mr. LODGE. It has gone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has gone. It is not here.

Mr. GAMBLE. While the bill is before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that it——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the bill is before the Senate. The Chair understands that the bill has gone to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LODGE. It has gone to the committee. The motion to refer was carried.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was carried, and the bill has gone to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent, if it be in order, Mr. President, that I be permitted to report House bill 10321 and that the same be considered, the bill having already been fully considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs and a unanimous report made.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I think I see a way out of the difficulty.

The Red Lake item is on the Indian bill, and the other item no doubt is germane to it. So the House, by amendment, can put the other States onto the Minnesota case in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. What does it cover?

Mr. CLAPP. It covers the subject of extending the time of payment. I have no doubt it would be germane. I do not think the Senator would object.

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly not——

Mr. CLAPP. The other States can be put on in conference, and you will get your legislation in ample time to meet the conditions.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Minnesota say that the conference committee can put on claims which have never been considered by either House of Congress?

Mr. CLAPP. This is not in any sense a claim. It is a proposition to extend the time of making payment where lands have been sold under these Indian treaties and Indian laws.

There is an item on the Indian appropriation bill extending the time as to the land on the Red Lake ceded reservation, in Minnesota. I have no doubt the House can accept that amendment with an amendment adding these other subjects.

Mr. HALE. The House——

Mr. ALDRICH. Adding subjects never considered by either House?

Mr. HALE. I suppose the Senator from Minnesota means, not that the conference committee can do it, but that the House itself, when the bill reaches the House, can put on another amendment, and that they undoubtedly could do. But the conference——

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is, if it goes back to a stage where amendments would be in order. But a proposition never considered by either House could not be added in conference.

Mr. HALE. It can only be done by one of the Houses. The conference committee could not do it.

Mr. CLAPP. The House can accede in conference to the Senate amendment with an amendment which is germane to it.

Mr. LODGE. No. They can not add any new matter which has not been before either House. It would be utterly beyond their power.

Mr. HALE. No new item.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg leave to differ. I think if the Senators understood just the situation, both would agree with me.

Mr. HALE. Why does not the Senator report his bill from the committee and have it put on the calendar, and then he can call it up to-morrow morning? That will settle all difficulty.

Mr. GAMBLE. I simply ask unanimous consent to report the bill at this time——

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. GAMBLE. As the bill has been partially considered, coming from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to make the following report.

Mr. NELSON. I object to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. NELSON. I think it is irregular, under the rules. The bill has been referred to that committee at this moment, and as the first part of the bill is already included in the Indian appropriation bill I shall object to its being included in this bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. In compliance with the suggestion made by the senior Senator from Minnesota, I would follow my request by moving an amendment to strike out the first section of the bill, which applies to the State of Minnesota.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is not before the Senate for amendment.

Mr. GAMBLE. No.

Mr. LODGE. It has just been referred. It is not before the Senate at all.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am not proposing to amend the bill at this time, but that amendment would cure the objection raised by the Senator from Minnesota. It was entirely a misapprehension by the committee.

Mr. NELSON. I believe the bill ought to go to the committee, and then the committee can amend it by striking out the first paragraph.

Mr. GAMBLE. That will be entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the calendar will be stated.

ALLOWANCE TO UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

The bill (S. 7090) fixing the expense allowance for travel and attendance of United States district judges when necessarily absent from their place of residence on official duty in any other place in their districts was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to allow the judges of the district court of the United States $6 per day as expenses of travel and attendance for each day that any such judge shall be necessarily absent from his place of residence in holding court or in the discharge of other judicial duties in any other place in the district whereof he is judge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GIFTS TO GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 7096) granting permission to certain officers of the United States to accept gifts from the governments of foreign states, and authorizing the Department of State to deliver said gifts, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that Capt. James M. Miller, Commander Herbert O. Dunn, Chaplain H. I. Reaney, Lieut. Victor A. Kimberly, Lieut. Henry L. Brinser, Asst. Surg. Theodore N. Pease, and Paymaster Charles R. O'Leary, all of the United States Navy, and First Lieut. Frank C. Lander, United States Marine Corps, be authorized to accept, respectively, photographs tendered to each of them by the Mexican Government through the Department of State of the United States.

That Capt. B. F. McCalla, United States Navy, be authorized to accept the swords tendered to him by the Emperor of Germany through the Department of State of the United States, and a Peking war medal tendered to him by the King of Great Britain.

That Arthur M. Beaupré be authorized to accept a silver inkstand tendered to him while he was secretary of legation and consul-general at Guatemala by the British Government through the Department of State of the United States.

That First Lieut. Thomas H. Jackson, First Lieut. Edmund M. Rhett, Second Lieut. John H. Poole, all of the United States Army; Lieut. Frederick L. Chapin, United States Navy; and Gen. H. V. N. Boynton, commissioner of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, be authorized to accept, respectively, a photograph of His Royal Highness Prince Henry of Prussia tendered to each of them by the prince through the Department of State of the United States.

That Capt. Dorr F. Tozier, United States Navy, be authorized to accept a sword tendered to him by the King of Great Britain through the Department of State of the United States.

That George H. Bridgeman, formerly American minister at Bolivia, be authorized to accept a silver inkstand tendered to him by the British Government through the Department of State of the United States.

That E. C. Hadley and Albert Whitten, light keepers at Cape Ann, Rockport, Mass., be authorized to accept, respectively, a watch tendered to each of them by the Canadian government through the Department of State of the United States.

That Hamilton King, American minister to Siam; Paul Nash, formerly secretary of legation at Bangkok; and J. P. Sleden be authorized to accept, respectively, a jubilee medal tendered to each of them by the King of Siam through the Department of State of the United States.

The Department of State is authorized to deliver to the widow or heir at law of Rear-Admiral J. W. Nicholson, deceased, a gold medal tendered to him by the King of Sweden and Norway through the Department of State of the United States.

That Surg. William C. Braisted, Untied States Navy, be authorized to accept a war medal tendered to him by the Emperor of Japan through the Department of State of the United States.

That Rear-Admiral C. H. Davis, United States Navy, be authorized to accept a silver cup and salver and silver punch bowl and cups tendered by the Governments of Great Britain and Russia through the Department of State of the United States.

That Lieut. Commander Irvin V. Gillis, United States Navy, be authorized to accept a war medal tendered to him by the Emperor of Japan through the Department of State of the United States.

That Capt. O. C. Hamlet, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, be authorized to accept a gold cigarette case tendered to him by the Czar of Russia through the Department of State of the United States.

That Commander Richard T. Mulligan, United States Navy, be authorized to accept a silver cup presented to him by the President of Guatemala through the Department of State of the United States.

That Rear-Admiral Charles S. Sperry, United States Navy, be authorized to accept a silver flower bowl mounted on a wooden base tendered to him by the Emperor of Japan through the Department of State of the United States.

That Col. John P. Wisser, United States Army, be authorized to accept a photograph tendered to him by the Emperor of Germany through the Department of State.

The Department of State is authorized to deliver to the various persons named the gifts herein specified.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the report made in the case be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois asks that the report be printed in the RECORD. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The report submitted by Mr. ROOT on the 10th instant is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 373, Sixty-first Congress, second session.]

GIFTS AND DECORATIONS TO OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. ROOT, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 7096:

The Committee on Foreign Relations having had under consideration applications under Article I, section 9, paragraph 8, of the Constitution, reports as follows:

The paragraph provides:

"No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them, shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state."

There are now pending in the Committee on Foreign Relations 200 requests for the consent of Congress under this constitutional provision to the acceptance of gifts and decorations tendered by foreign governments to officers of the United States. The subject-matter of all these requests is described in the accompanying pamphlet, in which we have numbered the requests from 1 to 200, inclusive. It seems that requests of this character should be passed upon in accordance with some declared principle of action, so that one officer should not have his request refused and another receive authority as the result of accidental circumstances attending the presentation of the request.

The existence of the prohibition in the Constitution indicates that the presumption is against the acceptance of the present, emolument, office, or title. A habit of general and indiscriminate consent by Congress upon such applications would tend practically to nullify the constitutional provision, which is based upon an apprehension, not without foundation, that our officers may be affected in the performance of their duties by the desire to receive such recognition from other governments. A strong support for the view that the practice should not be allowed to become general is to be found in the fact that the Government of the United States does not confer decorations or titles or, unless in very exceptional cases, make presents to the officers of other governments. It is not suitable that we should permit our officers to receive courtesies which we do not reciprocate by extending similar courtesies to the officers of other governments. We are of the opinion that the following rules should be observed:

1. That no decoration should be received unless possibly when it is conferred for some exceptional, extraordinary, and highly meritorious act, justifying beyond dispute a special mark of distinction.

2. That no presents should be received except such articles as are appropriate for souvenirs and marks of courtesy and appreciation and having an intrinsic value not disproportionate to such a purpose.

3. That the acceptance of presents within the limitation above stated should be further limited to cases in which some exceptional service or special relation justifying the mark of courtesy exists between the recipient and the government offering the present.

4. That no offer of any other title or emolument or office should be considered.

5. We consider that membership in learned societies, even though the appointment thereto may have a quasi governmental origin, should not be considered as coming within the constitutional provision, and it may well be that as to certain trifling gifts, such as photographs, the rule of de minimis lex non curat should be deemed to apply.

Applying the foregoing rules, we recommend that the consent of the Congress be given to the acceptance of the presents offered to officers of the United States in the cases identified in the annexed pamphlet as Nos. 1 to 8 inclusive, 28 (the present but not the decoration), 29, 31 to 35, inclusive, 36, 84, 85, 86, 98 to 100, inclusive, 106, 125, 134, 144, 147, 174, 188, 197. We recommend that consent be refused in all the other cases specified in the pamphlet, including all the offers of decorations. We omit consideration of No. 77, which has been acted on by the Congress.

I. Requests for authority to accept certain gifts and decorations to officers of the United States by foreign governments, pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations June 23, 1906.—II. Requests for authority to accept certain gifts and decorations transmitted by the State Department to the Committee on Foreign Relations from June 23, 1906, to February 15, 1910.

I.

1. Capt. James M. Miller, United States Navy.
2. Commander Herbert O. Dunn, United States Navy.
3. Chaplain H. I. Reaney, United States Navy.
4. Lieut. Victor A. Kimberly, United States Navy.
5. Lieut. Henry L. Brinser, United States Navy.
6. Asst. Surg. Theodore N. Pease, United States Navy.
7. Paymaster Charles R. O'Leary, United States Navy.
8. First Lieut. Frank C. Lander, United States Marine Corps.

Photographs presented to them by the Mexican Government.

Reason for giving.—The photographs were presented as a memorial for their services on board the U. S. S. Columbia when she carried the remains of the late Ambassador Azpiroz to Mexico.

9. Lieut. Gen. A. R. Chaffee, retired, United States Army.

Commission and insignia of the office of Grand Commander of the Legion of Honor, conferred upon him by the French Republic.

Reason for giving.—In recognition of his recent visit to France as the head of the special mission of American army officers to witness the grand maneuvers of the French army.

10. Brig. Gen. William Crozier, United States Army.
11. Capt. Daniel T. Moore, United States Army.

63. Dr. H. D. Geddings, United States Marine-Hospital Service.

Decorations of the Cross of Officer of S. S. Mariaio e Lazaro and the Cross of Chevalier, respectively.

Reason for giving.—These decorations were conferred by the Italian Government in recognition of investigations of the highest importance, which consisted in verifying and confirming the Italian studies and discoveries on the nature of yellow fever.

64. Capt. Stephen L'H. Slocum, United States Army.

South African war medal tendered by the King of Great Britain.

Reason for giving.—Captain Slocum was United States military attaché to South Africa during the Boer war, and this decoration was tendered after the conclusion of that war.

65. Lieut. William P. Scott, United States Army.

Decoration of Liakat Medal of Merit from His Majesty the Sultan of Turkey.

Reason for giving.—It appears from the note of our United States minister to Constantinople, "at the request of the first secretary of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan, I am sending you under separate cover the decoration of the Order of Merit, which His Majesty desires to confer on you as a token of his appreciation of the part which you played in the battle of Manila."

66. John Fowler, United States Consul at Chefoo, China.

Decoration of the Double Dragon, conferred upon him by the Chinese Government.

Reason for giving.—It appears from the note of the Chinese Government * * * "during the Boxer troubles in the year 1900, you and the other consuls cooperated with the local authorities in maintaining peace and order."

These decorations were conferred upon all of the foreign consuls.

ALLOTMENT TO APACHE AND OTHER INDIANS.

The bill (S. 6152) providing for the allotment of land to the Apache and other Indians under the charge of the War Department, Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "authorized," to strike out the words "and directed," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to allot equally to each of the Apache and other Indians under the charge of the War Department, Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., not less than 60 nor more than 80 acres of farming land, under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat., p. 388), and amendments thereto. Said allotments to be made from the lands ceded to the United States by the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, Oklahoma, by agreement entered into February 17, 1897, or land which has been otherwise set apart for the location upon or permanent use of the Indians within the Fort Sill Military Reservation; or in lieu of the allotments being made from the above-described lands, said allotments may be made in whole or in part from any other lands embraced within the said Fort Sill Military Reservation, as may be hereafter authorized by the President: Provided, That when the lands allotted, or any legal subdivision thereof, are only valuable for grazing purposes, such lands shall be allotted in double quantities: Provided further, That in event any of said Indians who are hereby authorized to receive allotments desire to secure allotments of land not embraced within the said Fort Sill Military Reservation, the Secretary of the Interior may make provision for and allot other land, in his discretion, under authority of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF THE MIAMI INDIANS.

The bill (S. 3793) for the relief of the Miami Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act to report the facts upon the claims of the Miami Indians against the United States, provided such claims shall be presented within ninety days from the passage of this act.

The Court of Claims is authorized, upon the final determination and payment of such claims, to hear and render judgment upon the claim of attorneys for compensation, the same to be paid out of the appropriation made in settlement thereof.

Mr. CLAY. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a report accompanying it.

Mr. CLAY. Is it short?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report is No. 380. Does the Senator ask to have it read?

Mr. CLAY. Does the bill come from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will yield a moment, I should like to make a statement to the Senate in regard to this bill and the next two measures on the calendar, Senate bill 3792 and Senate joint resolution No. 24. They are claims which have been pending for a long time, and the department recommended sending them to the Court of Claims for judgment.

Mr. HALE. How large is the amount involved?

Mr. CLAPP. The amounts vary from about $30,000 in one case to somewhere in the neighborhood of $200,000, I think, in another. But the committee, instead of sending them to the Court of Claims for judgment, thought it would be better to send all three to the Court of Claims for a finding of fact, giving them ninety days in which to make their case before the court, and in sending the claims there to provide for the attorneys' fees, which is always a matter of contention and frequently the subject of contract and contracts sometimes considered to be out of proportion to the amount involved. In that manner we will get the finding of the Court of Claims as to the facts in the cases to be sent back to the committee, and the committee then once for all can dispose of the cases one way or the other, and in the same proceeding get rid of the question of attorneys' fees.

Mr. CLAY. Who is to represent the Government in the Court of Claims?

Mr. CLAPP. An officer of the Department of Justice. I could not tell you who it will be.

Mr. CLAY. I do not desire to make any reflection on the Court of Claims or any other court, but it is a very busy court, and I must confess that sometimes I have not been able to understand the judgments that have been rendered by it.

Mr. CLAPP. The committee did not propose in these matters to take any chances on judgments. We have amended each of the three measures in the same way. We simply propose to send the three cases to the court for a finding of fact, so that we will have some concrete figure before us upon which once and for all to dispose of them one way or the other and get rid of these matters.

Mr. HALE. Then, Mr. President, this is what will happen, I take it, that when the court, under the provisions of these bills, shall establish certain facts instead of proceeding to give judgment the finding of the court will be presented to Congress, in both the House and the Senate, and will be referred to the Committee on Claims, so that the whole subject-matter of final action in assuming the claim and paying the bill will be not with the court, but with committee.

Mr. CLAPP. That is correct.

Mr. HALE. That is a correct statement of what would happen?

Mr. CLAPP. It is a correct statement of what would happen. Of course following that would come the importunity to committees that would be based upon a favorable finding of fact, but instead of sending the claims to the Court of Claims for judgment, as was recommended, we thought we would send them there and let the court make the finding. I have stated the fact to the Senate. I am not particular about it, only we did want to get rid of these claims one way or the other, and I thought, and the committee thought, the best way would be just to send the claims to he Court of Claims for a finding of fact. The three cases are practically similar. I do not care to discuss the merits of the claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The bill (S. 3792) for the relief of the Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Michigan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act to report the facts upon the claims of the Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Michigan against the United States, provided such claims shall be presented within ninety days from the passage of this act.

The Court of Claims is authorized, upon the final determination and payment of such claims, to hear and render judgment upon the claim of attorneys for compensation, the same to be paid out of the appropriation made in settlement thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF OSAGE INDIANS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) empowering the Court of Claims to ascertain the amount of the civilization fund paid by the Osages and applied to the benefit of other Indians, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act to report the facts upon the claims of the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians to the civilization fund: Provided, That such claims shall not be presented within ninety days from the passage of this act.

The Court of Claims is authorized, upon the final determination and payment of such claims, to hear and render judgment upon the claim of attorneys for compensation, the same to be paid out of the appropriation made in settlement thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CLAPP. In view of the time I ask that Senate bill 5314 be taken up in place of the one immediately preceding, as it is quite important.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 5314) to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 5, after the word "pay," to strike out "to the Secretary of the Interior, to be held in trust by him," and in line 7, after the word "thereto," to insert "in advance for each year of such extension," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all payments heretofore deferred by law and the payment which falls due in 1910 on the land in Oklahoma sold in pursuance of the act entitled "An act to open to settlement 505,000 acres of land in Kiowa-Comanche and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory," approved June 5, 1906, may be, in the discretion and by the order of the Secretary of the Interior, postponed upon the following conditions, to wit: One of said payments shall be made at the regular time of payment in 1911, and one other of said payments shall be made annually thereafter until all of such payments are made: Provided, That as a condition precedent to said extension in each case the settler shall pay for the benefit of the Indians entitled thereto, in advance for each year of such extension 4 per cent on the amount of such deferred payments where the settler had no preference right and 5 per cent on the amount of the deferred payment where such settler was given a preference right, but the payment of said 5 per cent shall be made in lieu of the interest payment required by the act entitled "An act giving preference right to actual settlers on pasture reserve No. 3 to purchase land leased to them for agricultural purposes in Comanche County, Okla.," approved June 28, 1906.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

The bill (S. 5783) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to vacate certain lands in Oklahoma reserved for a town site, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the word "four," to strike out "north" and insert "south," and in section 2, line 6, after the word "Government," to insert: "And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby further authorized to allot lands of said town site in equal amounts to San-a-was and Moe-tak-dah, two enrolled Comanche Indian women who have not heretofore received allotments," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to vacate the north half of section 3, township 4 south, range 14 west, in Oklahoma, reserved for a town site in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 20, 1906, entitled "An act for the establishment of town sites and for the sale of town lots within the common lands of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians in Oklahoma."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reimburse the 29 purchasers of lots within said described lands, out of any money in the Treasury belonging to the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, upon the conveyance of such lots by said purchasers to the United States Government. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby further authorized to allot lands of said town site in equal amounts to San-a-was and Moe-tak-dah, two enrolled Comanche Indian women who have not heretofore received allotments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT OF COMMERCE, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 6737.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6737) to create a court of commerce and to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I suggest the want of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Clay	Guggenheim	Percy
Beveridge	Crane	Hale	Perkins
Borah	Crawford	Heyburn	Piles
Bourne	Cullom	Hughes	Purcell
Bradley	Cummins	Jones	Root
Brandegee	Curtis	Kean	Scott
Briggs	Depew	La Follette	Shively
Bristow	Dick	Lodge	Simmons
Brown	Dixon	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Bulkeley	Dolliver	Martin	Smoot
Burkett	du Pont	Money	Stone
Burrows	Elkins	Newlands	Sutherland
Burton	Fletcher	Nixon	Taliaferro
Chamberlain	Flint	Oliver	Warner
Clapp	Frazier	Overman	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger	Page
Clarke, Ark.	Gamble	Paynter

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CUMMINS addressed the Senate. After having spoken about two hours and fifteen minutes he yielded the floor for the day.

[For Mr. CUMMINS's entire speech see Senate proceedings of March 18.]

Mr. HALE. Before this matter goes over, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the condition of public business. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has asked nothing that is not most fitting and proper. He has confined himself to the question, wasting no time—which he never does—and has occupied the floor continuously for something over two hours, and it would be unreasonable to ask him to continue longer. I suppose, probably, nobody is now willing to take the floor upon this question. But before the bill goes over, in the interest of the Senate and the public business generally, I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia, in charge of this bill, what his proposition is for to-morrow? The calendar has been practically cleared; the appropriation bills, at this stage in a long session, have never been further advanced than they are now, and there has been a general disposition and assent to the occupation of the ground by this bill from day to day. But to-morrow morning, after fifteen or twenty minutes consumed in the routine of the morning business, the Senate will be confronted, unless the Senator from West Virginia is ready to go on with this bill, with a vacuum.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. The Senator will wait a moment. There will be no business before the Senate. The calendar has been practically closed. The appropriation bills received have been passed. There has never been such a record, as I can submit here, at this stage of a long session. There are only four appropriation bills left, waiting the action of the Senate upon this bill. The agricultural appropriation bill is in conference. The army appropriation bill has passed finally to-day. The deficiency appropriation bill has been passed. The District of Columbia appropriation bill is in conference. The fortifications appropriation bill is in conference.

Mr. CULLOM. There will be another deficiency appropriation bill, I think.

Mr. HALE. The Indian appropriation bill is in conference. The legislative bill will soon be here from the House. There are only four bills of importance left.

Mr. BAILEY. Appropriation bills.

Mr. HALE. Appropriation bills; great bills. Were it not for this one most important and most engrossing bill—I am not very risky, from my long experience here, in predictions—I would venture the prediction that the Senate would be ready to adjourn and would adjourn by the 1st day of May.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maine will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HALE. I always yield to the Senator from Texas, because I know——

Mr. BAILEY. I can supply him with the means of filling that vacuum, if it should happen. We have a bill to extend the right of self-government to the last two of our Territories. Whenever those who are in charge of this bill are not ready to proceed with it, all of us would be delighted to clean up that territorial condition and to extend statehood to New Mexico and Arizona; and I think the Senator from West Virginia would rather lay this bill aside in order to complete a work that he began forty years ago.

Mr. HALE. That is the very thing I am afraid of. There are plenty of projects that would be brought forward——

Mr. BAILEY. I object to that word. That bill is not a project. "Project" means——

Mr. HALE. I will substitute the word "scheme," if that suits the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. That is really worse.

Mr. HALE. I supposed it was when I substituted it.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Maine is going to improve it that way, I will withdraw the original suggestion.

Mr. HALE. I am calling the attention of the Senate to the actual condition. Everybody has got out of the way for this bill. I do not object to that. It stands invested in the public mind, and in the mind of the administration generally, with great and perhaps overmastering importance, but I want to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia, who is in charge of the bill and who ought not to be sluggish in keeping it before the Senate and in pushsing it to action at all possible times, to the concrete situation which will develop to-morrow morning. The calendar was practically completed this morning. As I have said, I have never known the general business of the Senate to be so far advanced as it is now. To repeat myself, after fifteen minutes of routine morning business there will be nothing to do. I do not know whether the Senator from Iowa, who never avoids his duties here, who never consumes time unnecessarily, but sticks to his text, will be willing at half past 12, not later than that, an hour and a half before 2 o'clock, when this matter will come up as the unfinished business, to go on.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Maine yield?

Mr. HALE. I am most happy to yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will answer that question most unhesitatingly and at once. Yes; I shall be quite ready to go on at that time or at any time. I do not want to postpone the consideration and final action upon this bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that does not in the least surprise me, and I know the Senator will not feel that I was in any way urging him; and if the Senator is ready to go on, then I trust somebody—I hope the Senator in charge of the bill—will ask the consent of the Senate that instead of waiting until 2 o'clock, as nothing else is before the Senate, the Senator from Iowa may be permitted to go on.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, we may just as well understand this matter. This bill is not going to be rushed in that way. I am ready to adjourn just the minute you pass your appropriation bills and the statehood bill. I would be perfectly willing to leave this bill on the calendar, on the table, or any place else, except to put it on the statute book. But we may just as well understand the situation. Of course, I know perfectly what the Senator from Maine is driving at. He wants to expedite the business of Congress——

Mr. HALE. The expedition of public business.

Mr. BAILEY. And bring about an early adjournment. But this is a bill of very great importance, and if there is an adjournment before the dog days, I think the Senator from Maine will be rather more fortunate than I now believe he will be.

Mr. HALE. Oh, Mr. President, I am not so hopeless and straggling in my condition of mind as all that. I do not believe you can keep the Senate here until the dog days.

Mr. BAILEY. I have myself seen them prefer their comfort to wise legislation, and it may be that way again.

Mr. HALE. I am not ever very sanguine about an early adjournment, but I would hope that when the Senator from Iowa, who has entertained the Senate and stuck to his text for two hours, expresses himself as entirely willing, in the expedition of the public business, to go on to-morrow morning at the end of the routine morning business, we shall not find the Senator from Texas, strongly as he may desire to stay here until the dog days and keep away from Texas, objecting.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Texas does what the Senator from Maine does. He is always willing to go home when the Congress adjourns; and I am generally readier to adjourn than is the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. No; I think the Senator is equally ready. Both of us have contributed——

Mr. BAILEY. In view of the majorities and the minorities in the Chamber, I think I am always more ready for adjournment than is the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I have never known the Senator from Texas to obstruct, and I do not believe when it comes to the test that he will obstruct now.

I am entirely content to leave this matter just as it is and let the Senate go into executive session, and we will take up the matter in the morning. But I do not want the Senator from West Virginia to forget that by common assent everything else is out of the way, and he is to be allowed to proceed and consume the reasonable time of the Senate in considering these matters. Pretty soon, Mr. President, other appropriation bills will come in. I can guarantee that when those bills are ready there will be no delay, so far as concerns asking the Senate to proceed to their consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. Even to the extent of putting the pending bill aside.

Mr. HALE. That was the understanding when the bill was taken up—that it was to be subject to appropriation bills. That is always so.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine if he does not consider it fair that somebody on the committee should explain to the Senate the merits of this railroad bill? Is it not of great importance that we should be given some light on the subject, and that we be shown in what respect the bill helps the shippers and the American public at large? We must have the merits of the bill laid before the Senate before we can discuss it intelligently.

Mr. HALE. I think so, Mr. President; and I have had no apprehension that we would not have that explanation. I have only been afraid that we would have too much of it.

Mr. BAILEY. No; not too much explanation, but too much criticism.

Mr. HALE. Both.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there is no Senator in the Chamber who has had the experience of the Senator from Maine, as he is oldest in service of any member in this body, and yet I think we can safely challenge the Senator to search his recollection and find a single instance in which, when the opening speech on a most important bill, as he has himself recognized it, has not been finished, there has been a movement to hasten its consideration and determination. It is an isolated case; it is the first time it has occurred.

Mr. HALE. I began by stating that I thought the Senator from Iowa had gone to the most proper limit, that we ought to adjourn, and that the whole matter ought to go over and give the Senator an opportunity of a night for rest, to be in readiness in the morning. I am not pushing things to-night.

Mr. BAILEY. But you are instructing the Senator from West Virginia to do it to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. Only I want the Senate to understand that some of us, the time having been yielded to this bill, will insist as it goes along that we shall occupy just as much time continuously on this bill as possible.

Mr. BAILEY. We may just as well understand it, Mr. President. The Senator from West Virginia did not address the Senate as chairman of the committee, and I understand—of course I have no better authority for it than the public prints, although they generally find out in the neighborhood of what is contemplated—that it is not the purpose of the friends of this measure to discuss it; that they are going to have a vote just as quickly as they can exhaust the discussion against it; and I think that is a part of the policy indicated now.

I think the Senator from West Virginia, unless that had been agreed upon or substantially understood, would have brought his bill before the Senate and would have addressed the Senate at such length as he thought necessary to explain its provisions.

I think while the Senator from Georgia is reminding us of the unusual procedure it would not be out of place for me to say that so far as I know, so far as either my personal experience or my reading instructs me, this is the first time that the minority have ever opened the debate.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish the Senator would allow me a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to say a word.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not claim that the Senator from Iowa is in the minority in this body.

Mr. BAILEY. He signed the minority report.

Mr. ELKINS. I have been asked a question by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and have been trying to answer it for more than twenty minutes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to speak for just a moment before the Senator from West Virginia proceeds——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. In order to relieve him of an inference that might grow out of what has been said in the last few minutes, it is only fair to the Senator from West Virginia for me to state that the delay which has occurred within the last four or five days in bringing up the bill now under consideration has been at my request; and the Senator from West Virginia has, with exceeding kindness and generosity, recognized the somewhat difficult position in which I have found myself, and I am very grateful to him; and I would not want any Member of the Senate to believe that he had in any wise failed in his duty in urging this measure forward.

I wish to say, in answer to the suggestion of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that I supposed that this bill would be comprehensively laid before the Senate through observations made by some member who signed the majority report; but upon making inquiry I was told that no member signing the majority report desired to present the bill to the Senate, and therefore I have found myself in the rather awkward position of bringing forward in the first instance the views of the minority. I should be very glad if before we have gone very far in the debate some Senator who believes in the bill would tell why he believes in it.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], that to-morrow, I take it, the Senator from Iowa will conclude his remarks, and then some other Senator will want to speak. I have hardly ever found a condition in the Senate where nobody wanted to speak. If there ever comes a time in the progress of the consideration of the bill when no Senator is ready to speak, we can then proceed to vote on the bill and amendments.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from West Virginia is not, after reporting a bill of this importance to the Senate, going to permit it to come to a vote without giving us the benefit of what he knows about it?

Mr. ELKINS. Of course I, as chairman of this committee and as one of the majority who made the report, want to conduct the consideration of the bill while before the Senate in a way that will at least expedite its passage most. Sometimes one can win a great many votes by not talking at all [laughter], and one can destroy his case by talking, or, rather, talking too much.

Mr. BAILEY. That is, if you do not believe in your case.

Mr. ELKINS. The bill speaks for itself. I believe in it; and I will give some reasons for my belief in it at the proper time.

Mr. BAILEY. I have had a suspicion all the while that this bill is not so dear to the heart of the Senator from West Virginia as some other bills that have been considered in this body. I was really trying to ascertain how many men on that committee favor the bill.

I think this bill is here with a minority of that committee in favor of it, although it appears to come as a majority proposition.

Mr. ELKINS. The bill was reported by a majority of the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. That is, a majority of those present.

Mr. ELKINS. Well, is not that sufficient?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; for the legality of the proceeding.

Mr. ELKINS. That is all that is required here.

Mr. BAILEY. But it is not sufficient to satisfy an inquiring mind like mine.

Mr. ELKINS. You can not challenge the legality of the report in that way.

If the Senator from Texas will permit me to answer the question of the Senator from Maine, I will be very much obliged.

Mr. BAILEY. I cheerfully withdraw myself from the colloquy between those Senators, reserving the right to renew the interruption.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the bill was reported in regular form and by a majority of the committee. I do not want to try to induce undue haste in the consideration of this bill, but I do want to have it and all amendments brought to a vote as early as practicable after hearing all the Senators who want to speak.

I take it from what I have heard around the Chamber that there are a number of Senators who want to speak on the bill. When there are no Senators to speak, I intend to ask for a vote. Whether I want to speak or not is a matter that concerns me and the committee I stand for and represent. If I think I have the votes and can put the bill through, I am willing to vote on it at as early a day as practicable. This is my position, and I think it is fair to the Senate and all parties concerned.

Mr. BACON. I should like to suggest to the Senator from West Virginia——

Mr. ELKINS. If nobody wants to speak——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ELKINS. If the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Texas wants to speak, I am sure they will credit me with fair dealing in the consideration of the bill before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator from West Virginia I want to suggest, in view of the statement of the Senator from Iowa as to the facility with which amendments have been accepted from the outside and rejected and again put in, that there will be no difficulty, under the same influence, in getting the vote which the Senator is so anxious to get.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator from Iowa did not say that there was any amendment accepted from the outside or the inside or from any source. The Senator understood very well what the Senator from Iowa meant. I do not object to having the assistance of the Attorney-General of the United States in preparing this or any other bill.

Mr. BACON. I was not speaking of that.

Mr. ELKINS. When I am trying to get a bill drafted or prepared I do not object to anybody helping me to frame it, if the person willing to do so is capable and can render aid and help.

Mr. BACON. What I spoke of was the absolute acquiescence of the committee in whatever might be suggested from the outside, and it was in that connection that I suggested that there would be equal facility in getting a vote.

Mr. ELKINS. There might be a division of opinion on the acquiescence of the committee. The committee took, I think, five or six hundred pages of testimony on the bill, and we considered it for five or six weeks. I do not know how much longer the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Iowa would want us to consider a bill. We gave it all the attention we could and all that was required under the circumstances.

Now, to-morrow, I hope that some Senator for or against the bill will be ready to speak on it. I do not say that I am myself going to speak, but I do say to the Senate that when there is no Senator found ready to speak, I will ask that we proceed to a vote, no matter whether there has been much or little discussion.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, before a conclusion is reached along the lines suggested—that we take up this bill for consideration at the close of morning business, regardless of the hour—I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Committee on the Revision and Codification of the Laws of the United States, after six months of continuous work, in and out of hours, has presented to the Senate the result of its work in the shape of a bill now on the calendar, and it had been my intention, with the permission of the Senate, to occupy the time other than that occupied by the unfinished business in the consideration of that great measure. We have reported the judiciary title, and it is embodied in a bill now on the calendar.

I assume that the committees of the Senate which have been considering this question will be conceded the opportunity and the right to present that measure for the final action of this body. While it is not my intention to attempt to antagonize the bill under consideration, it is my intention to ask the Senate to occupy the time other than that to which the unfinished business is entitled for the consideration of that measure.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has indicated his desire to finish or pursue his remarks to-morrow morning. To that, of course, I should make no objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will state, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will be quite ready to go on whenever the bill comes before the Senate, whether at half past 12 or at 2; it is immaterial to me.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not desire it to be understood that I intend to ask that the bill for the revision of the laws be taken up to-morrow, but on the following day and each succeeding day as it may be entitled to consideration I shall press it upon the consideration of the Senate. We can be engaged in no more profitable work than the consideration of the judiciary title of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. ELKINS. I should have said further to the Senate, in answering the question of the Senator from Maine, that there is a most elaborate report on the bill made by the majority of the committee and printed in pamphlet and in the RECORD, and a minority report, also printed in the RECORD. The bill has been read three times in the Senate. I take it, if Senators will read these reports they will understand precisely the points in controversy and the merits of the bill. I supposed that all Senators were informed on the bill. Many of them do not want to speak; many of them do; and it is my desire that every Senator wishing to be heard shall have the amplest opportunity to discuss the bill fully.

PELAGIC SEALING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 430), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By the terms of section 1963, United States Revised Statutes, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is directed, at the expiration of the lease which gives the North American Commercial Company the right to engage in taking fur seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, to enter into a new lease covering the same purpose for a period of twenty years. The present lease will expire on the 30th of April, 1910, and it is important to determine whether or not changed conditions call for a modification of the policy which has so far been followed.

The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor unite in recommending a radical change of this policy. It appears that the seal herds on the islands named have been reduced to such an extent that their early extinction must be looked for unless measures for their preservation be adopted. A herd numbering 375,000 twelve years ago is now reduced to 134,000, and it is estimated that the breeding seals have been reduced in the same period of time from 130,000 to 56,000. The rapid depletion of these herds is undoubtedly to be ascribed to the practice of pelagic sealing, which prevails in spite of the constant and earnest efforts on the part of this Government to have it discontinued.

The policy which the United States has adopted with respect to the killing of seals on the islands is not believed to have had a substantial effect upon the reduction of the herd. But the discontinuance of this policy is recommended in order that the United States may be free to deal with the general question in its negotiations with foreign countries. To that end it is recommended that the leasing system be abandoned for the present, and that the Government take over entire control of the islands, including the inhabitants and the seal herds. The objection which has heretofore been made to this policy, upon the ground that the Government would engage in private business, has been deprived of practical force. The herds have been reduced to such an extent that the question of profit has become a mere incident, and the controlling question has become one of conservation.

It is recommended, therefore, that the provision for a renewal of the lease be repealed, and that instead a law be enacted to authorize the Department of Commerce and Labor to take charge of the islands, with authority to protect the inhabitants, substantially as has been done in the past, and to control the seal herds, as far as present conditions admit of, pending negotiations with foreign countries looking to the discontinuance of pelagic sealing. If this result can be obtained, as is confidently believed, there is every prospect that the seal herds will not only be preserved, but will increase, so as to make them a source of permanent income.

A draft of a bill covering this matter has been prepared by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and upon request will be submitted to the appropriate committees.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 15, 1910.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 16, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 15, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock, noon.

The Chaplain, Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we bless Thee for every opportunity which is an open door through which the individual, the family, the state may pass to the higher life in Christian civilization; for every religious and philanthropic movement which leads on to that life. For every law enacted which makes it hard for the evil-minded to carry out his designs and easy for the right-minded to live a pure, noble, upright life. Especially do we thank Thee for the bill which recently passed this House looking to the destruction of the white-slave traffic so prevalent throughout the land. Grant, O most merciful Father, that it may become law. That the report of the Immigration Commission upon this subject may be read and pondered in every home and create a sentiment so strong that it will make potent the law to drive the slimy, poluting thing from off the face of the earth, and glory and honor and praise be thine forever through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REMARKS WITHHELD FOR REVISION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that a large part of the proceedings of yesterday are not published in the RECORD. Some of the proceedings are published, but I hold here in my hands a large amount of typewritten manuscript, comprising the bulk in volume of the proceedings of yesterday as written out by the official reporters, which has not been printed in this morning's RECORD. I desire to make a motion on this subject. A large number of the speeches made yesterday have been held out for revision, and some of them needed no revision at all. Some gentlemen made remarks, revised them, and handed them in, and there is no indication in the RECORD of the fact that they addressed the House at all. It seems to me the only way in which the proceedings of the House of yesterday can be correctly published is by reprinting the entire proceedings. I am told by those who have counted, that portions of yesterday's RECORD as shown in 15 places have been withheld, so that the RECORD of yesterday, with these speeches withheld, is not continuous or consecutive. So far as the proceedings of the House are concerned, they are entirely aliunde. I want to ask unanimous consent, and if I can not get that, then to make a motion, if it is in order, that the proceedings of the House of yesterday be published in full and in their proper order. I do not know what right any gentleman has to take remarks of mine, which I handed in, and hold them out, and not have them published. I did not make any general remarks at all. It may be a benefit to the RECORD to not publish them at all.

Mr. MANN. It would be a benefit doubtless, but will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Were the gentleman's remarks held out except where he was talking in somebody else's time?

Mr. SIMS. I took nobody else's time. I was recognized in my own right and made my own remarks and I revised them and turned them in.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman talked in my time and in the time of others.

Mr. SIMS. I have reference only to the remarks that I made in my own time, and not in the gentleman's time. I do not think the gentleman's remarks even are in here.

Mr. MANN. It would be no loss if they are not.

Mr. SIMS. Probably that is true. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is absolutely true. History will not care anything about it. It had its effect yesterday, if it had any, and when the permanent RECORD is made up those remarks are inserted in the permanent RECORD in their proper place, if they are sent in within ten days' time.

Mr. SIMS. But there is no record practically of yesterday's proceedings. It is so incomplete as not to state the facts as they occurred.

Mr. MANN. Well, if there ever was a day when there was talk in the House which ought not to be preserved in history, it was yesterday.

Mr. SIMS. Why not be just and let the record be blank except as to the Journal?

Mr. MANN. Well, it is, as the gentleman says; but when the final record is made up for the permanent RECORD then these remarks will be included, and goodness knows that will be publishing them often enough.

Mr. SIMS. But, Mr. Speaker, I still want to know what right any Member, or anyone else, has to hold out of the RECORD another man's remarks, and not have them published.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not think there is any difficulty about that. I suppose the situation was like this: The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] made remarks a number of times yesterday, and undoubtedly followed the practice of revising his remarks and had them sent to him, and had sent in connection with those probably the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, because the gentleman from Tennessee was interrupted in his remarks by the gentleman from Michigan, and very likely the gentleman from Michigan never looked at them last night at all. I do not think the gentleman ought to complain about that, although everybody is glad to have the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee preserved in permanent form, because they are always worth preservation, and we will see that that is done.

Mr. SIMS. If it is not an abuse of the privilege to hold out so much of the record that the RECORD itself is not a history of the proceedings that took place yesterday, then I do not know what is.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Tennessee and other gentlemen would follow the practice that I follow of never getting the manuscript from the reporters or ever endeavoring to change what I say on the floor of the House, both as to grammar and substance, the record of what takes place on the floor of the House will be far more accurate than it is now.

Mr. SIMS. I did follow the gentleman's advice, and I did not take the manuscript out of the House and handed the remarks back to the reporters before the House adjourned, but I do not know whose advice somebody else acted upon in not even permitting them to be published. I do not know whether the gentleman wants to assume that responsibility or not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would be somewhat discriminating, and he would never discriminate against the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. All this bunch of papers that I hold in my hand are a part of yesterday's record, not published at all; and to publish them out of connection with the proceedings of yesterday they will be perfectly worthless, and there can be no use in publishing them.

Mr. MANN. But when the permanent RECORD is made up, they will be published in their proper order.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman has just said that this bundle of papers will never be worth anything to the permanent RECORD. Therefore, to be just and carry out the idea of the gentleman from Illinois, I think a motion not to publish them at all would be germane.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what is pending before the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I stated I would like to make a motion to publish the entire record of yesterday in full, so that these will appear in their proper connection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to the gentleman that it would not do any good now to make such a motion, because, of course, the RECORD of yesterday has been published and has appeared this morning. Therefore to move to publish it again would not correct what has happened. Without making any such motion, the permanent RECORD, as the gentleman from Illinois says, will be published and all of it will appear. That is all the gentleman can do now to remedy what I admit was an injustice to the gentleman.

Therefore, it seems to me the gentleman ought not to make that motion. May I ask him if any other speeches were withheld except his own?

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman have the idea that I made all these speeches? [Exhibiting bundle.]

Mr. GILLETT. I should not be surprised. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. It is 40 or 50 pages of notes. I presume the gentleman means to be facetious.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. It is not a question of the rights of the gentleman particularly. There is no doubt the RECORD has fallen somewhat into disregard in the country; it is a joke.

Mr. GILLETT. It will be remedied in the future. These other remarks will be published in the RECORD, and there is no use in publishing them to-morrow when they are going to be published in four days.

Mr. MANN. Let us be perfectly just to the gentleman from Michigan in charge of the floor. He was called upon to speak many times, and I have noticed invariably that most of the gentlemen who address the House for an hour or two withhold their remarks for correction, and they subsequently appear in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. I am not criticising the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Michigan had occasion to explain many items in connection with the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I am not saying the gentleman from Michigan did it. I do not know whose fault it is, and there is nothing in the RECORD to show. I am asking that the RECORD be published to-day, as it should have been published yesterday, with these parts of the record embraced in it.

Mr. MANN. It is also fair to say the gentleman from Michigan is not present to explain the reason that these remarks did not appear, although I think everybody knows the reason—that the gentleman did not have the time after his work in the House.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I am not complaining about the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan not appearing. I am complaining of my remarks not appearing, and that nobody had the right to hold them out.

Mr. MANN. Of course that is an inadvertency.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to do justice to the gentleman from Michigan in his absence, because it was conveyed to my attention as a participant in yesterday's debate that the gentleman from Michigan had another pressing engagement last night, which prevented him from having opportunity to revise his remarks. He sent word to me through a messenger, as well as to other Members who participated in that debate, asking whether we had any objection if he would withhold that part of the remarks in which we participated. I stated, as well as another gentleman who participated in the debate, that we had no such objection. I think we all agree he was very much occupied yesterday in the discussion, and, having a pressing engagement, that it was his privilege to withhold his remarks in which he participated. I do not believe that he had any intention of withholding the remarks of any other Member. I believe, if he had known that the gentleman from Tennessee was so desirous of having his remarks appear in the RECORD to-day, that he would have certainly made an exception in that particular.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Who is making any charge against the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Tennessee inferentially makes an attack upon him that he withheld his remarks when he had no warrant to do so.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think in all fairness——

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I never made any such inferential charge; I never mentioned the name of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman referred to some 15 places in the RECORD where remarks were withheld, and those places in the RECORD refer to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan and no one else, and inferentially the gentleman did make that charge.

Mr. SIMS. I said I was told that by some of the officials. That statement was made as an argument for republishing the RECORD, so the remarks should appear in the RECORD. I had just looked over the remarks, read the RECORD, and did not find my own remarks.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman say whether the remarks of the gentleman are yet corrected?

Mr. SIMS. Why, I do not know a thing about whether they are or are not.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I should think it would be a good idea for the gentleman to ask unanimous consent for a second edition of this morning's RECORD, including the remarks, but if they are not yet corrected, would it not be just as well to postpone this until they are corrected?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know whether the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] ever saw his remarks, or whether he has corrected them or has not done so. I have not looked into them. I have not said a word about the gentleman from Michigan, and I am not making any complaint of him or anybody else for holding out their remarks; but what I am complaining of is that somebody, without authority, held my own remarks out and did not even permit them to be published.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman ask unanimous consent that a second edition of this morning's RECORD be published, which shall include all those remarks, as soon as they are corrected? That will solve the difficulty.

Mr. SIMS. That is the thing I have been wanting to do, but I did not think I could get unanimous consent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think it will be worth the money?

Mr. SIMS. No; I do not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why squander the money?

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a new edition of this morning's RECORD be published, embracing all the proceedings that took place yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the RECORD contains the proceedings of the Senate as well as of the House.

Mr. SIMS. I only mean so much of it as refers to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt as to whether or not it would take a concurrent resolution.

Mr. SIMS. I only ask as to the House proceedings; not those of the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent that the proceedings of the House of yesterday be printed in full in the RECORD of to-day as of yesterday. That is as near as the Chair can get at it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not the request the gentleman made. He asked for a second edition.

The SPEAKER. A second edition would be a virtual copy.

Mr. SIMS. I adopt the form of language used by the Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] should withhold that request until we have a chance to confer with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SIMS. I do not think he would object, because he has nothing in this morning's RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think he would object, but he has a right in this matter, and I will be forced to object to it.

Mr. SIMS. I make the motion and ask that it be pending.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that it is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests, a point of order being made, that the RECORD is printed under law and under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing. Now, it seems to the Chair that it is somewhat doubtful as to whether yesterday's RECORD can be printed to-morrow morning so far as the proceedings of the House are concerned, leaving out any reference to the Senate. It is perfectly patent to the Chair that the RECORD can be corrected, so that the permanent RECORD will be exactly as the proceedings were yesterday.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] yield?

The SPEAKER. And that would happen, probably, without any action on the part of the House. The Chair, as at present advised, would have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There seems to be, so far as I notice, no mention at all of the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in the RECORD. Why does not the gentleman from Tennessee ask to have the RECORD corrected by inserting his remarks? That is in order. They ought to be inserted.

Mr. SIMS. I do not care a particle about having my remarks printed by themselves and out of connection with the proceedings, because they mean nothing in that way.

Mr. MANN. But they will be printed in the permanent RECORD.

Mr. TAWNEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MANN. This is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Is it not in order at this time to move that the RECORD of yesterday be corrected in accordance with the facts as they occurred upon the floor of this House? If that is so, I make that motion—that the RECORD of this morning be corrected so that it will be a true record of the legislative proceedings of this House yesterday. I want to say it is high time to publish the truth——

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the reporters' notes?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Showing what occurred upon pending legislation yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the RECORD be corrected by inserting the proceedings of yesterday—those that are omitted—according to the notes of the official reporters.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

THIRTEENTH DECENNIAL CENSUS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Census I submit the following privileged report (No. 751).

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 172, enlarging the scope of inquiry of the schedules relating to population for the Thirteenth Decennial Census.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Does the gentleman know that the Senate passed a bill yesterday to the same effect?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I know that. We thought it wise to put it in the form of a joint resolution, and I submit it this morning to be placed on the calendar. I do not wish to take it up at this time.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report (No. 749) on the army appropriation bill, to be printed in the RECORD under the rules.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment numbered 21 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15384) making appropriation for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, having met, after full and free conference report to their respective Houses that, as to the amendment in disagreement, the Senate recedes.

J. A. T. HULL,
GEO. W. PRINCE,
WM. SULZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
M. G. BULKELEY,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 22643, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 22643, with Mr. DALZELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: Civilian assistant, $2,500; 2 chief bookkeepers, at $2,000 each; 4 clerks of class 4; 7 clerks of class 3; 6 clerks of class 2; 15 clerks of class 1; 10 clerks, at $1,100 each; 28 clerks, at $1,000 each (including 4 transferred from Bureau of Equipment); 12 clerks, at $900 each; 2 copyists, at $840 each; 5 assistant messengers; messenger boy, $600; 3 messenger boys, at $400 each; laborer; and two laborers, at $600 each; in all, $110,040.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill one or two questions. I notice there is an increase of something like $4,000 in the total appropriation for this bureau. For instance, 28 clerks at $1,000 are provided for, while in the legislative bill of last year there were only 24. I see the number of copyists are increased from two to eight.

Mr. GILLETT. No; the gentleman is mistaken. There is an apparent increase, but really there is no increase. These copyists are four clerks who were employed in the Bureau of Equipment. Theoretically, they were on their pay roll, but they have been detailed to this department. Now, we take them up in this department and drop them from the Bureau of Equipment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Are they eligible for this transfer under the civil-service laws?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. Then this does not affect their civil-service status at all?

Mr. GILLETT. Not at all.

Mr. LANGLEY. The copyists are increased to eight. Can the gentleman give me any information as to that? There were only two in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. GILLETT. There are only two copyists now in the bill. There is no change made.

Mr. LANGLEY. I see I was mistaken in that; but there is a total increase of something like $4,000 in the amount appropriated for this bureau.

Mr. GILLETT. That is these four transfers which I speak of.

Mr. LANGLEY. All right. There is, I assume, a corresponding reduction elsewhere.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, when the Hydrographic Office paragraph was reached in the consideration of the bill on Saturday I had intended to ask permission to submit some remarks with regard to the observations made by Robert E. Peary, of the United States Navy, but being absent at that time, I was not able to do so. I now ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with regard to the hydrographic work and explorations of Robert E. Peary.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is the gentleman going to submit proofs that Peary reached the North Pole?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am going to state some facts pertaining to the explorations he made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The services of skilled draftsmen and such other technical services as the Secretary of the Navy may deem necessary may be employed only in the Bureau of Yards and Docks to carry into effect the various appropriations thereunder and be paid from such appropriations: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year 1911 shall not exceed $40,000; a statement of the persons employed hereunder, their duties, and the compensation paid to each shall be made to Congress each year in the annual estimates.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, my information is that there were only $30,000 appropriated last year for this service in the Bureau of Yards and Docks. I see the amount here provided is not exceeding $40,000.

Mr. GILLETT. That is correct. The reason why we increased this from $30,000 to $40,000 was that there was $10,000 carried on the naval bill, and we had a consultation with the chairman of the Naval Committee, and it was agreed to drop that amount from their bill and increase it a like amount here.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the rental of Mills Building, authorized by act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, $24,500.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the committee that here is a sample of perhaps the greatest extravagance that is to be found in this bill—rent of buildings. I want to ask your attention to the rents as they come in this bill. We have endeavored in the committee room to correct them, and we can not do it; and I put you on notice now, that if there is ever any correction, or if we ever get these rents lowered, it will have to be done on the floor of the House.

Take the old Jeff Davis Building, on G street, now called the "G Street Building." It rents by the year for an extravagant sum. Here is this Mills Building, right across from the Navy Department, used as an annex to the Navy Department, for which a rental of $24,000 a year is paid. In my humble opinion it is too much.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the gentleman's judgment of the value of that building?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, that is just what I was going to state, if the gentleman from Georgia will allow me. I think the gentleman from Georgia very much exaggerates this case. I have no doubt that in many cases extravagant rents are paid, but when this particular building was first taken, the Committee on Appropriations carefully examined into it. It was built, as I remember, for the express purpose of being rented to the Navy Department, under an agreement with that department, on a 5 per cent basis, and has been under that contract ever since.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the gentleman that I was on that committee that made that careful investigation?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And we absolutely took the statements of other people. There was not a member of the committee who knew anything about it, and there is not a member of the committee to-day who knows for himself what it cost.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course everything has to be learned by taking the statement of somebody.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand; but the evidence in that case came from interested parties.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman claim that Mr. Woods, the Superintendent of this Capitol, is an interested party?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman express any opinion as to the value of the Mills Building?

Mr. GILLETT. I can. My information is that the rent was arranged on a 5 per cent basis, and if the gentleman means that the Mills Building is worth only $24,000, that statement is preposterous. The gentleman remembers that it is a six or seven story building.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not mean to say that the Mills Building was worth only $24,000.

Mr. GILLETT. That was the gentleman's statement.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman said these buildings were not worth the annual rental.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I meant the G street building. I did not mean to include the Mills Building in that proposition. I said the G street building was not worth its rental.

Mr. GILLETT. The Mills Building is a high, modern office building.

Mr. MANN. It is a new building.

Mr. GILLETT. Built for this purpose.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Said to be worth $120,000.

Mr. GILLETT. It was rented to us on a 5 per cent basis.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Can the gentleman state to us what the assessment of the building is?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No; I can not.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Would not that be a good way to get somewhere near its approximate value?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; but we have not gone into it since the original contract was made. It was built for the purpose of being rented to the Government. We were satisfied it was a good contract for the Government. So far as I know, I think it is the best of any of the buildings that the Government rents.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Is the first floor of the Mills Building used for the Government?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; the entire building. It was built for that purpose.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. I thought the first floor was used for something else.

Mr. GILLETT. No.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As I understand, the Mills Building was erected within the last six or seven years, and is a modern, high-class building.

Mr. GILLETT. Very.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I should think $400,000 or $500,000 would be a cheap price for it.

Mr. GILLETT. I think this is the best contract for rent that the Government has.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia to what he referred as the G street building?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is called the old Jeff Davis Building. It is on G street, right by the War Department. The suggestion I wanted to make was this: To bring the attention of the House to the fact that we were paying over $400,000 for rent of buildings, and we ought not to do it.

Mr. GILLETT. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the purpose I had in making the suggestion, and not to get up any controversy over one particular building. This House will have to deal with the matter later.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We can not do it unless it comes through the committee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We have not got the time to look into the assessed and real value of the buildings; we only have the time to accept the statements of real estate men and the parties interested.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts believe that we could provide a building like the Mills Building, owned by the Government at a cost of only $24,000 a year?

Mr. GILLETT. I think we could; I do not see why we could not.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know of any building owned by the Government in Washington, even of less size than the Mills Building, that does not cost us more than $24,000 a year?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman means would we. I agree that perhaps we would not.

Mr. MANN. I mean could we and not would we. I am not talking about theoretical conditions.

Mr. GILLETT. I agree that we would undoubtedly build a more expensive and elaborate building than the Mills Building.

Mr. MANN. I think for the same amount of space we would spend twice as much money in the construction of a building as the Mills Building cost.

Mr. GILLETT. And we would have a handsomer building.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman's time extended in order to ask him a few questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I notice in the appropriation act for the naval service last year that there is a provision "for rent of buildings and offices not in the navy-yards." The question I want to ask the gentleman is why it is necessary for this separate provision in this bill for the Mills Building?

Mr. GILLETT. That is for buildings probably outside of Washington.

Mr. LANGLEY. It does not say so.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I should like to state to the gentleman from Georgia that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is beginning a thorough investigation into the subject of all the rentals being paid in the District, the buildings occupied, their suitableness, their sanitary or insanitary character, their safe or unsafe character, as to their being a safe place for the preservation of the records of the Government, and as to the safety of the lives of the occupants of the building. Apparently, on the surface, the Mills Building contract is one of the best that the Government seems to have entered into from the standpoint of the Government. There are certainly many others that seem subject to criticism.

We have asked, under a resolution of the House, information from the Treasury Department upon this subject, which will be available soon. It was remarked on the floor of the House recently that the same information is contained in a supplement to the Book of Estimates; that is true only in part. The resolution covers many other leases, and covers much broader ground than the data furnished in the Book of Estimates. The committee needs the additional information. I think the House can be assured that within the near future, certainly during this present session of Congress, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will endeavor to inform itself and the House very fully on this subject and be in a position to make some recommendation regarding the entire question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is what I wanted to bring out; I did not know that that movement was on foot. I am satisfied.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriations made for the naval service shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Navy Department at Washington, D. C., except for personal services in certain bureaus, as herein expressly authorized.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, who is absent, I want to ask a question regarding the Hydrographic Office. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, and attached to it is a list of the employees in that service. The question I want to ask is whether or not these employees are appointed independent of civil-service regulations. I see that there are about 20 of them, with salaries ranging from $600 to $1,400.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know how that could be.

Mr. LANGLEY. They are employed out of the lump sum.

Mr. GILLETT. What lump sum?

Mr. LANGLEY. Contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no; that does not employ clerks. They can not be employed out of that lump sum. The law does not permit that.

Mr. LANGLEY. They are employed, nevertheless.

Mr. GILLETT. They are employed by special provision, not out of that lump sum. They are under the civil service. They must be.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is the gentleman speaking of the employees in the Hydrographic Office?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes. They are employed at various places—at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and other points.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They are employed through the civil service.

Mr. LANGLEY. They are?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. My information has been to the contrary.

Mr. MANN. They did not use to be. I do not know whether they are or not.

Mr. GILLETT. When I answered that they were not under that lump sum, I supposed the gentleman was referring to the employees here in Washington. Of course this bill generally does not deal with anything except employees in Washington. That I do not know about.

Mr. LANGLEY. The Secretary says:

I have the honor to inform you, in reply to your letter of the 26th instant, that the employees enumerated in the statement of expenditures of the contingent fund of the department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, under the head of "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses, Hydrographic Office," were employed at the various branch hydrographic offices outside of Washington, D. C.

Mr. GILLETT. Is that in this bill or in the naval bill?

Mr. MANN. The item in the bill and the item in the law, notwithstanding the statement of the Secretary of the Navy, is for service of necessary employees at branch offices, $17,960.

Mr. LANGLEY. I understand what the item is to which the gentleman refers, but that does not answer the question as to whether these employees——

Mr. MANN. That is not the item named by the Secretary. There is no such item in the bill as that named by the Secretary.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman knows what the Secretary is referring to. It is that appropriation for the Hydrographic Office that we passed on last Saturday.

Mr. GILLETT. I supposed when the gentleman said "contingent fund" that he had in mind employees in the city of Washington. We can not employ any clerks here in the city of Washington under a contingent fund, and I supposed the gentleman referred to that.

Mr. LANGLEY. Not at all. I refer to offices in the other portions of the country.

Mr. GILLETT. That I do not know, whether they are under the civil service at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are provided for specifically in this bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not find any provision that authorizes their employment independent of civil service.

Mr. MANN. There is an item in the bill at page 109, contingent expenses of branch offices and various other things, $11,000, and "for services of necessary employees at branch offices, $17,960."

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman misunderstood me. I understand there is an appropriation provided in this bill for these services; but the point I am getting at is whether these employees are appointed and paid out of a lump sum regardless of civil-service regulations or are they appointed after competitive examination?

Mr. MANN. That is a matter for the Executive to determine.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is there anybody the gentleman wants to get a job for?

Mr. LANGLEY. Not in the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not see why they must not be under the civil service.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thought the gentleman from Massachusetts might be informed on the question, as he is a conspicuous advocate of the civil-service system and of its rigid enforcement. I hope he will look into this by the time the legislative bill comes up next year.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of two special inspectors, Department of the Interior, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation (including temporary employment of stenographers, typewriters, and other assistance outside of the District of Columbia, and for incidental expenditures necessary to the efficient conduct of examinations), to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether or not the committee had any complaint before it about this per diem being too small.

Mr. GILLETT. No; no complaint was made or suggestion that it should be changed.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The inspectors to whom this per diem goes seem to be satisfied with this amount?

Mr. GILLETT. No suggestion was made at the hearing.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I find some other places in the bill where the per diem does not exceed $3, and that was my purpose in making the inquiry. In addition to that I recall when the post-office bill was under consideration in the House that in a vast majority of the instances there the per diem was $4. It struck me then that was too large a per diem and that $3 per day would be more appropriate and in line with what was right, and on this point I want to commend the committee for holding the per diem down to $3. I think it would be better to pay the actual expenses and subsistence instead of a per diem, so that the country and the people may know exactly what is being paid out. In many instances this per diem serves to operate as an indirect increase of salary.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

General Land Office: Commissioner of the General Land Office, $5,000; assistant commissioner, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be authorized to sign such letters, papers, and documents and to perform such other duties as may be directed by the commissioner, and shall act as commissioner in the absence of that officer or in case of a vacancy in the office of commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,500; chief law clerk, $2,500; 2 law clerks, at $2,200 each; 3 law examiners of surveyors-general and district land offices, at $2,000 each; recorder, $2,000; chief of division of surveys, $2,750; chief of division, $2,400; 10 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; 13 law examiners, at $2,000 each; 10 law examiners, at $1,800 each; 18 law examiners, at $1,600 each; 28 clerks of class 4; 46 clerks of class 3; 69 clerks of class 2; 72 clerks of class 1; 60 clerks, at $1,000 each; 60 copyists; 2 messengers; 10 assistant messengers; 6 skilled laborers, who may act as assistant messengers when required, at $660 each; 16 laborers; laborer, $480; packer, $720; depositary acting for the commissioner as receiver of public moneys, $2,000; clerk and librarian, $1,000; in all, $572,450.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, page 121, line 12, on the words "to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. FITZGERALD. What about it?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, we have followed the precedents.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. GILLETT. Whether the general statute authorizes this assistant commissioner as provided here or not, I am not informed, and I shall have to look at it.

Mr. MANN. There is not any general statute authorizing it.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman from Illinois has looked it up and knows, I will accept his statement. If that is true, of of course, it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that language.

The CHAIRMAN. On the gentleman's statement, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What provision is in this paragraph to prevent these subordinates being paid more than the head of the office or the assistant commissioner?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not understand the gentleman's question. The salaries are all fixed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what I assumed, but there is one man in here who, every time we increase the appropriation for that office, gets an increase of salary.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know to whom the gentleman refers. There is no increase in this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the salary for that man is not carried in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not his salary here?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it is not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where is it?

Mr. TAWNEY. In the sundry civil bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The lump appropriation is carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not his position carried in this bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; his position is not carried in here at all, nor his salary. The gentleman is referring to the chief of division, field service——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The chiefs of divisions are in this bill, I understand.

Mr. TAWNEY. He is chief inspector or special agent in charge of the field service; I should not have said chief of division.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am trying to find out where he gets his compensation.

Mr. TAWNEY. He gets his compensation out of the lump-sum appropriation carried in the sundry civil bill under the title of the protection of public domain, timber, and so forth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think that the assistant commissioner ought to be increased?

Mr. GILLETT. We have not increased it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The committee, of which the gentleman is a member, has not recommended an increase.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know it is not recommended, but I would like to get the gentleman's opinion. The fact is, the Commissioner of the General Land Office receives $5,000, the assistant commissioner $3,500, and an employee of the General Land Office, a subordinate to both of these men, is now being paid $4,200.

Mr. GILLETT. That is not in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not make any difference what it is under, it is in this office.

Mr. GILLETT. This committee has no jurisdiction.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether, in his opinion, the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office is receiving an adequate compensation?

Mr. GILLETT. Inasmuch as no suggestion has been made that it should be increased, I presume that he is.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There is no complaint made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I just wanted to get the gentleman on record, so I would be able to have that information later.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is fishing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, I am not fishing; I am trying to find out upon what theory this administration is conducting its business in some respects. Here is an assistant commissioner who is such a great man that it is provided that he shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. TAWNEY. That provision was put in there because of the importance of the office or because some gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol wanted to be sure that the proper man would be appointed as assistant commissioner.

Mr. MANN. Or because the amendment originated in the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to agree that any such improper motive actuated the Congress in enacting this provision.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not say it was an improper motive. I simply gave that to the gentleman as an explanation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not believe that any Member either of this House or the other House, who would have any influence in obtaining the appointment of this particular commissioner, is so lacking in confidence in the President or his predecessor as to make it necessary in order to obtain a particular appointment that the right should be reserved in the Senate to confirm the appointment.

It does seem, however, if this man is of such importance that he shall be authorized to sign letters, papers, and documents, and perform other duties, and shall be put in the same category as members of the President's Cabinet, and appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, that he must be an officer of considerable importance. I am trying to ascertain why this man is so little considered that as soon as an appropriation is made available to unearth the frauds that have been committed under Republican administration in the carrying out of the laws affecting the public domain, a subordinate of this assistant commissioner receives compensation 20 per cent in excess of the amount paid to the assistant commissioner.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that is remarkable at all?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not under this administration, although it would be in any well-conducted and well-organized government.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know that in this bill we provide for officers who are subordinate to assistant secretaries at salaries 50 per cent greater than the salary of the Assistant Secretary? I do not refer to the administration, but to Congress, in this bill, and the distinguished committee of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] himself is a distinguished member.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. That particular provision was eliminated from the bill on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes. It was put back in different form.

Mr. MANN. But it is still there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the provision to which he refers was eliminated because of the diligence of a Member of this House on the Democratic side. After the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] had fussed around for an hour or two, and then withdrew from the field——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me. While that side of the House was asleep I reserved a point of order. No Member on that side of the House was bright enough to catch the fact that it was subject to a point or order, and while the gentlemen over there were sleeping calmly I reserved a point of order and waked them up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And then discreetly retired?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; like the gentleman from New York—in his company.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But, Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman is inaccurate to the extent that the bill itself carries a provision in that way. I know it is the intention of this administration, in the readjustment of the offices creating these newfangled positions and peculiar titles—resident diplomatic officers—to pay such salaries. I know the result will be the complete demoralization of the department, but it is just what the people expect under this administration. It will merely hasten the day when it will be imperative that this side of the House be put into power in order to undo the innumerable mistakes and errors that have been piled up so that the people can tolerate the situation no longer.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman mean that it is improper that a subordinate should receive more salary than the assistant secretary under whom he serves?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think if the gentleman's secretary were to receive more salary than the gentleman from Massachusetts is receiving, the proper thing to do would be to make the secretary a Representative and the gentleman from Massachusetts the secretary.

Mr. GILLETT. This runs all through the civil list. A great many collectors throughout the country get more salary than the Secretary of the Treasury. The gentleman would not think they ought to be made assistant secretaries and the secretary of the Secretary be made the collector?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a different situation.

Mr. TAWNEY. The bureau chiefs in nearly all the departments receive a higher salary than assistant secretaries of departments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; the gentleman is very much mistaken.

Mr. GILLETT. It is true all through the service, and I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. For instance, the salary of the Director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey is $6,000, and that of the Fish Commissioner is $6,000, and the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey is $6,000.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] might also cite the case of the Director of the Census, who, although subject to the orders of the Assistant Secretary, receives $6,000, and in the decennial period $7,500, 50 per cent more than the Assistant Secretary receives.

Mr. MANN. The collector of customs in the gentleman's city might be mentioned in this connection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this situation is entirely different. Here is a position in this city——

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, all these officials I have named are in this city.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Who is working under the control of the assistant commissioner. The other situation is entirely different. The compensation of the heads of bureaus have been fixed apparently because they have some scientific attainments, but actually because they have a certain amount of political influence.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you think the salaries of government employees should be fixed according to the dignity or high-sounding title of the office or in accordance with the actual work performed by the employees?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In accordance with the usefulness of the office.

Mr. TAWNEY. The top of our service is underpaid, and there has been an effort on the part of Congress during the last three or four years to raise the salaries of those who have the responsibility of initiating things in the departments, in contrast with those who are doing simply clerical service. The gentleman will remember that the Committee on Appropriations two years ago recommended an increase in the salary of all the assistant secretaries, but it was subject to a point of order and has not been done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And was finally enacted into law.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it has not been enacted into law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this instance the gentleman has not commenced at the top. He is going over the heads, and Congress is not doing this at all. The truth is that a special fund was put at the disposal of the Department of the Interior, and every time Congress increased the appropriation for that service the department increased the compensation of this employee without any direct authorization. He is employed here in the city under the assistant commissioner and paid 20 per cent more than the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRUMPACKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 18902. An act to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon;" and

H. R. 21221. An act to authorize the city of St. Joseph, Mich., to construct a bridge across Morrison Channel, of the St. Joseph River, Michigan.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15384) making appropriations for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 863. An act to correct the military record of John M. Miller;

S. 864. An act to correct the military record of John Oates;

S. 1864. An act to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes of square No. 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress of February 1, 1907; and

S. 6431. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 13468. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 614) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Dewitt Eastman," approved January 8, 1909, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BULKELEY, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its amendment to the bill (H. R. 15384) making appropriation for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, "numbered 21."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6721. An act permitting the building of a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at Bemidji, in the State of Minnesota;

S. 7093. An act amendatory of the act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses; and

S. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution providing for a special election in the Territory of Hawaii.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pension Office: Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000; first deputy commissioner, $3,600; second deputy commissioner, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $3,000; assistant medical referee, $2,250; 2 qualified surgeons, at $2,000 each; 15 medical examiners, at $1,800 each; 8 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,250; chief of board of review, $2,250; 57 principal examiners, at $2,000 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, $2,000; 16 assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; 3 stenographers, at $1,600 each; 80 clerks of class 4; 94 clerks of class 3; 300 clerks of class 2; 320 clerks of class 1; 65 clerks, at $1,000 each; 10 copyists; superintendent of building, $1,400; 2 engineers, at $1,200 each; 3 firemen; 27 messengers; 12 assistant messengers; 20 messenger boys, at $400 each; 40 laborers; 10 female laborers, at $400 each; 15 charwomen; painter, skilled in his trade, $900; cabinetmaker, skilled in his trade, $900; captain of the watch, $840; 3 sergeants of the watch, at $750 each; 20 watchmen; in all, $1,494,020.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon this paragraph. I would call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the language in lines 12 and 13, "chief clerk, $2,500." Is not that an increase?

Mr. GILLETT. That is an increase of $250.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I thought so. I also call the gentleman's attention to the language of the bill found in lines 22 and 23, "private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, $2,000.

Mr. GILLETT. That is not new.

Mr. COX of Indiana. If that is not new, how long has he had a secretary?

Mr. GILLETT. That is provided every year. It is included in the annual appropriations for that purpose.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Nothing new at all in that?

Mr. GILLETT. Nothing at all.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, against that part of the bill increasing the salary; or I withhold the point of order, so that the gentleman may give us some information.

Mr. GILLETT. I will just suggest to the gentleman why we did it for this special employee. The reason was this: The Commissioner of Pensions very vigorously urged it on the committee that this man's salary ought to be $2,500; that the salary of the chief clerk of the Patent Office was $3,000 and that of the chief clerk of the Land Office $2,500, neither of which have as large a service under them as this man. Our information was that he was an extremely valuable and efficient clerk, and we recognize now that there is a large reduction being made in the expense of that bureau, where they are saving this year, I think, about $100,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How are they saving it?

Mr. GILLETT. By decreasing the number of employees. We dropped half of the Board of Pension Appeals a while ago, and we are reducing the service. We have reduced it 101. And this clerk has been drawing a salary of $2,250, but he used to get $2,500.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How long has he been drawing a salary of $2,250?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not remember how many years. But he got $2,500.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How long back?

Mr. GILLETT. Ten or twelve years ago.

Mr. COX of Indiana. So that for the last few years he has been drawing only $2,250?

Mr. GILLETT. And there are other chiefs of divisions drawing more salary, who have not as important duties to perform, and it seemed to us that where an official was trying to reduce the expenses we should recognize it by giving this chief this increase.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman to say that they have actually reduced the expenses in that department this year $100,000?

Mr. GILLETT. Over $100,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. You have done that by letting out employees. Is that correct?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Have not these same employees been employed in some other bureaus?

Mr. GILLETT. I presume, as far as it may be done, other bureaus will try to take them on.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This reduction occurs on account of vacancies in the office which are not filled?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. They are trying as much as possible, as men die or resign, not to fill their places. I presume there will have to be some discharges, but if the gentleman from Indiana means by his inquiry whether places are being made for them in other bureaus——

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is what I mean—whether places are being made for them in other bureaus.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, not at all. It is an absolute decrease.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It strikes me that is a satisfactory explanation, and I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Not in this paragraph of the bill, but in another paragraph of the bill, I notice that you provide an appropriation of $79,000 for something like 30 additional examiners down there. I thought that work was growing less.

Mr. GILLETT. There is no such increase. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. It is a decrease.

Mr. GILLETT. The examiners were 80, and we have reduced them to 70.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Reduced the examiners?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. The gentleman must have misread the figures.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRUMPACKER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 14, 1910:

H. R. 5272. An act for the relief of the Bridgeport National Bank, Bridgeport, Ohio.

On March 15, 1910:

H. R. 21428. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make temporary withdrawals of public lands for certain purposes; and

H. R. 17872. An act providing for the sale to Johnson County, in the State of Wyoming, of certain lands.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Patent Office: Commissioner of Patents, $5,000; first assistant commissioner, who shall perform such duties pertaining to the office of commissioner as may be assigned to him by the commissioner, $4,500; assistant commissioner, who shall perform such duties pertaining to the office of commissioner as may be assigned to him by the commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner, $3,000; two law examiners, at $2,750 each; three examiners in chief, at $3,500 each; examiner of interferences, $2,700; examiner of trade-marks and designs, $2,700; examiner of classification, $3,600; 43 principal examiners, at $2,700 each; 63 first assistant examiners, at $2,400 each; 73 second assistant examiners, at $2,100 each; 88 third assistant examiners, at $1,800 each; 110 fourth assistant examiners, at $1,500 each; financial clerk, who shall give bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, $2,250; librarian, $2,000; 6 chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; 3 assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the Commissioner of Patents, $1,800; translator of languages, $1,800; 9 clerks of class 4; 9 clerks of class 3; 17 clerks of class 2; 96 clerks of class 1; 3 skilled draftsmen, at $1,200 each; 4 draftsmen, at $1,000 each; 90 clerks, at $1,000 each; messenger and property clerk, $1,000; 90 copyists; 85 copyists, at $720 each; four messengers; 25 assistant messengers; 14 laborers, at $600 each; 45 laborers, at $480 each; 40 messenger boys, at $360 each; in all, $1,286,410.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, in line 21, after the word "each," I desire to insert the words:

Who may be promoted by executive order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, page 127, after the word "each," insert "who may be promoted by executive order."

Mr. GILLETT. To that I make a point of order that it changes existing law.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WATKINS. In the appropriation bill of 1908 it is provided that these employees may be promoted only by civil-service examination. That law, as interpreted by the Civil Service Commission, and by the President also, is now in force.

The appropriation bill of 1909 said nothing about how they should be promoted. The Civil Service Commission had the question referred to them by the President recently, and the President's interpretation and the interpretation of the Civil Service Commission was that these promotions could only be made by a civil-service examination and could not be made by executive order. This is the only class of employees now in the Government service, so far as I know, who can not be promoted by executive order. As the law now stands, they may be promoted by civil-service examination, but not otherwise. That being the case, it is clearly not a new law. It is clearly an additional manner of promotion to that which is designated in the act of 1908 and in harmony with that act, and is not intended to antagonize the legislative enactments therein contained. It simply amplifies that act and enlarges its scope.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Education: Commissioner of Education, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,000; specialist in higher education, $3,000; editor, $2,000; statistician, $1,800; specialist in charge of land-grant college statistics, $1,800; translator, $1,800; collector and compiler of statistics, $2,400; specialist in foreign educational systems, $1,800; specialist in educational systems, $1,800; 2 clerks of class 4; 2 clerks of class 3; 4 clerks of class 2; 8 clerks of class 1; 7 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 copyists; 2 copyists, at $800 each; copyist, $720; 2 skilled laborers, at $840 each; messenger; assistant messenger; 3 laborers, at $480 each; laborer, $400; in all, $65,200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. May I ask the gentleman what the object is in providing a specialist in higher education and just what a specialist is? Does the gentleman mean a "high brow?"

Mr. GILLETT. The purpose that the office of this specialist was created for, as the Commissioner of Education informed us, was to keep in touch with what was done in our institutions of higher education throughout the country, so that there should be in his office a sort of clearing house of information on that subject. He says they have a great many requests for information from different land colleges as to what is being done in different institutions of the United States; that there is often referred to them requests from foreign governments, in the Orient particularly, where they send students for higher education, to know about them. Consequently, he says that it would be of great value to the United States to have somebody in the office who made a specialty of knowing what our different colleges are doing, and that it would of course be of value to the colleges themselves. In other words, it would be headquarters where there would be information as to what all of these colleges were doing and where the information could be obtained. This is, of course, subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the result would be an organization in the course of time of a regular clearing house for information in reference to work done by different land-grant colleges here if not elsewhere. That organization would be larger than the present Bureau of Education in a few years' time if it is carried out logically.

Mr. GILLETT. Personally I am very strongly in favor of a large increase in the functions of the Bureau of Education. I do not think we are beginning to appropriate for it what we ought to, and I would welcome it in this line and also in other lines.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman that there is before the committee of which I happen to be chairman a bill providing that the Bureau of Education shall be turned into the Bureau of Health, and another bill pending before Congress providing that the Bureau of Health shall be turned into the Bureau of Education. In other words, one provides that there shall be a new Bureau of Health, which, among other things, shall absorb the Bureau of Education, because that has to deal with sanitation in schoolhouses and schoolrooms, and another proposition to create a new Bureau of Health under the Bureau of Education. There is no limit as to what you can do when you begin to deal with the subject of education. I question whether the Government is called upon to advise the people as to higher education. We have universities and colleges of the higher class all over the country. One man would not go very far in this department.

Mr. GILLETT. That is very true. I think, however, we ought to very much enlarge the functions of this bureau, and inasmuch as we are doing so much for the material welfare of the people in numerous ways, I believe it would be well for us to do more for their intellectual welfare.

Mr. MANN. It may be that it would be a good thing for the Government to attempt the reconstruction of the people mentally and morally, but we are not undertaking to do it up to this time.

Mr. GILLETT. We are doing it in a small degree in the Bureau of Education.

Mr. MANN. I think the Commissioner of Education does good and effective work, although I think the bureau itself is one of those bureaus that might well be abolished.

Mr. GILLETT. I think there are other bureaus that it would be well to abolish first, if the Government is coming down to the abstract principle that it is not our function to interfere with the health, morals, or education of the people. That is another proposition, but we are doing it all the time in other directions, and I think we might do it in this direction, and I welcome this proposition.

Mr. MANN. I believe the Committee on Education ought to have a chance to work out a scheme on this subject so that we would have legislation and know how far we are going and what we are going to do.

Mr. TAWNEY. I believe there is a bill pending before the Committee on Education for the establishment of a department of education.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and they have had several hearings.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, pending the action of the Committee on Education, as I know it will receive thorough and careful consideration, I make the point of order on line 23, "specialist in higher education, $3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds: Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,000; chief electrical engineer, $2,400; 2 draftsmen, at $1,200 each; clerk, $1,600; stenographer and typewriter, $1,000; foreman, $1,800; compensation to disbursing clerk, $1,000; messenger; person in charge of the heating of the Supreme Court and central portion of the Capitol, $1,000; laborer in charge of water-closets in central portion of the Capitol, $660; 7 laborers for cleaning Rotunda, corridors, Dome, and old library portion of Capitol, at $660 each; 2 laborers in charge of public closets of the House of Representatives and in the terrace, at $720 each; bookkeeper and accountant, $1,800, and one stenographer, at $720, both now authorized and paid from appropriations for House or Senate Office buildings; in all, $28,280.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on lines 20 to 23. Why are these employees taken out of the appropriations where they have been authorized?

Mr. GILLETT. They have been carried on the list of construction accounts, with many others, but I understand that, now the buildings are practically completed, they will not be required there any more; but the superintendent will need these two permanently because having these buildings of course has increased the work of his office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He needs them because of the work of the House and Senate Office buildings?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why should they not be estimated for and provided upon the recommendations of the commissions in charge of the buildings?

Mr. GILLETT. I suppose they probably have the indorsement of that committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have not anything of the kind.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course they go on the regular rolls of the superintendent and their work is not confined to the buildings, and I suppose he requires them because of the increase in his work due to these new buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, and certain increases of the force under him are paid for from appropriations made for the purpose of maintaining these buildings. Why should not those expenditures all be segregated so that it will be possible to tell what the additional cost is because of the maintenance of these buildings?

Mr. GILLETT. They have been carried on that, but I understood that was over—that separate roll.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, well; the gentleman is mistaken. It is not over. We carry in the sundry civil bill the provision for the House Office Building. I do not know about the Senate Building. I do know about the House Office Building. The force for that building is carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. The item in the sundry civil appropriation bill, as I recall it, is for the maintenance of the Office Building. This item is of course for somebody in the main office of the Superintendent of the Capitol, and while a part of the work which these people may do is in connection with the Office Building, it is no more than the rest of the work done by the other officials in the office of the Superintendent of the Capitol. You could not very well differentiate this and provide for it directly under the appropriations for the Office Building. Of course you could provide for that, but this is no longer specially connected with the Office Building.

Mr. GILLETT. Not only with the House Building, but with the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, they deal with the Capitol, too; with everything, the new power plant and everything else. It is just part of the permanent force, an enlargement of which has become necessary because not only of the House Office Building, but of the Senate Office Building and the new power plant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman believe, as a result of his investigation, that the keeping of these employees in one office will tend necessarily to reduce the number eventually?

Mr. GILLETT. I think it would. In consideration of this he had decreased one clerk from $1,200 to $1,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman say that these positions have been paid for out of the construction fund up to this time?

Mr. GILLETT. I think so, ever since the beginning of the buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Department of the Interior: The following sums, which shall be so apportioned as to prevent deficiencies therein, namely: For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary of the Interior and the bureaus, offices, and buildings of the Interior Department, including $6,500 for the Civil Service Commission: For furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, advertising, telegraphing, expressage, wagons and harness, food and shoeing of horses, diagrams, awnings, constructing model and other cases and furniture, and other absolutely necessary expenses, including fuel and lights, typewriting machines and exchange of same, $115,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking some questions about this paragraph, beginning on line 4, on page 131. I notice $115,000 is appropriated in a lump sum for furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, and a number of other items. Is there any estimate setting out in detail the amount that will be expended for each of these items?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; there is a regular book which contains them all.

Mr. SCOTT. Was the appropriation arranged on the strength of the estimates?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. Did the committee recommend the amount asked for in the estimates?

Mr. GILLETT. No; we cut the amount down $10,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Did the committee cut that down after investigation which influenced its judgment as to the amount which would be needed for each particular item?

Mr. GILLETT. No; we did not. If the gentleman had seen the number of items he would not expect us to go through it item by item. We cross-examined and investigated generally, and we thought they could get along with $10,000 less than they asked for.

Mr. SCOTT. Can the gentleman inform the committee how much of this sum will be expended for furniture?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not remember the details now, I will admit.

Mr. SCOTT. The offices of the Civil Service Commission are already furnished, are they not?

Mr. GILLETT. No; they are just moving into new quarters.

Mr. SCOTT. So far as the language is concerned here, all of this sum of $115,000 could be expended for ice, could it not?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly; we do not segregate the items. That is the same form in which it has been from year to year.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that the item of ice might as well be stricken out entirely, because the department is now manufacturing its own ice.

Mr. SCOTT. I cited that only as an illustration. I presume the whole amount could be expended for carpets or telegraphing——

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman will pardon me, I would like to pass on and ask one question about the next paragraph, although we have not reached it. I see it provides for stationery, and I presume under that item are included rubber bands and things of that sort.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. Can the gentleman inform the committee how many rubber bands will be bought, and what they will cost?

Mr. GILLETT. I certainly can not.

Mr. SCOTT. I am sorry the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is not here. He was here when I began propounding these interrogatories. I did not anticipate the gentleman from Massachusetts could answer them; but on the 1st day of February, 1910, the gentleman from New York promised me when this bill came before us that he would be able to answer these questions. And I regret that he is not here at this time——

Mr. GILLETT. What gentleman from New York?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. FITZGERALD. At that time I took occasion to ask the gentleman from New York, who had been made peevish by the inability of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to answer some questions such as I have been propounding to the gentleman from Massachusetts—

Can the gentleman tell us, because he has something to do with the expenses of the Interior Department, how much a gross they pay for rubber bands, and how much a dozen for lead pencils?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I could, and when the item is reached in the House, if the gentleman should ever interrogate me, I should be pleased to tell him.

Mr. SCOTT. I shall certainly take advantage of that offer.

I am sorry the gentleman from New York is absent. I have only asked these questions, realizing as I do how utterly foolish and futile they are, how utterly ridiculous it is to expect any man in charge of a bill to answer them, in order to show that it is possible to ask futile and foolish questions concerning one bill as well as another. Mr. Chairman, I now withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance for assistant superintendents, Division of Registered Mails, when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not exceeding $4, and for other actual and necessary traveling expenses arising in connection with business of the Division of Registered Mails, $7,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, or the gentleman in charge of the bill, to explain why you are allowing $4 per diem to this class of employees and only $3 per diem to the other class of men.

Mr. GILLETT. We are following, Mr. Chairman, the provisions of the appropriation bills, and the reason the difference was made when this was originally adopted was this: The gentleman will see that these assistant superintendents, Division of Registered Mail, travel largely in cities, whereas the others, land agents, would naturally be traveling in the country. Now, I think there is a difference of 33 per cent certainly between the expenses in the city and expenses in the country.

Mr. MANN. More than that.

Mr. GILLETT. Very probably more than that, as the gentleman from Illinois says. It was on that theory that that distinction was made.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is not this true that the assistant superintendents to whom you allow $4 per diem seldom ever leave the cities where they are appointed?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; they are traveling all the time from one post-office to another, and they are generally in the larger cities.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Most all the time.

Mr. GILLETT. If they do not leave the city, they do not get traveling expenses.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What rule is there for allowing this class of men $4 per diem? Is it paid them whether actually traveling or not?

Mr. GILLETT. It says "when actually traveling."

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has your committee heard any evidence as to that?

Mr. GILLETT. We did not go into that this year, but——

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman state if there has been any evidence before the committee on that point?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly; when that provision was first adopted the committee went into that question.

Mr. COX of Indiana. This class of men is certainly pretty well provided for in the way of salaries.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman know how many there are?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Six, that is all; and those six cover the entire United States.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman tell us how much salary they get?

Mr. TAWNEY. Sixteen hundred dollars a year. That is my recollection.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman tell also whether or not they are allowed their per diem straight?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will correct that. I am informed their salary is $2,000 a year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, are these men on the go all the time, and do they draw their $4 per diem straight?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are on the go all the time. They are traveling all the time unless they are called into the central office here for work, as they were two or three years ago. There were three of them, I think, that were brought to Washington in connection with work here in re-forming some of the forms used in post-offices with respect to the registry business. They have also added to the duties of these men by requiring them to look after the money-order service as well as the registry service.

Mr. COX of Indiana. These inspectors, as I understand you—and I think that is correct—visit the money-order post-offices of the United States. Is that correct?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman believe it costs on the average $4 a day for these men to live?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think it does.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can you not get a first-class hotel in the gentleman's district for $3 a day?

Mr. TAWNEY. I presume you could. There are hotels in the State, however, where you could not get accommodations for $3 a day.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Neither these inspectors nor the gentleman nor myself, I doubt very much, would stop at these hotels.

Mr. MANN. I am sure that the gentleman never stopped at a hotel in my district for $4 a day.

Mr. COX of Indiana. We all know where the gentleman lives—in the city of Chicago.

Mr. MANN. These inspectors spend a good deal of their time in large cities.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It is not the salary so much that I am objecting to the amount of money——

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this per diem is not in lieu of subsistence alone, but as I understand it in lieu of all expenditures except railroad pay. Of course they are traveling on an official pass.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I understand that.

Mr. TAWNEY. They have their photographic passes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. They also have their sleeping-car fare paid. They do not pay any of it out of the $4, do they?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; they do. As I understand it they pay all their traveling expenses. They are provided only with transportation in the form of an official pass.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; I want to see if I understand the gentleman——

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, the other expenses incident to their travel are borne by themselves.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; I want to see if I understand the gentleman. Do you say that they pay any part of their sleeping-car fare out of the $4 a day?

Mr. TAWNEY. The general rule with special agents traveling for other departments is that they are not only reimbursed for the amount paid for car fare, but also reimbursed for the amount paid on account of transportation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not care so much about the general rule.

Mr. TAWNEY. I say as to these particular men, their sleeping-car expenses and all traveling expenses, independent of the transportation furnished by the department, are paid out of the $4 a day, as I am informed. I may be mistaken.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And independent of the $4 a day?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is included in the $4 a day, as I understand it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think if the gentleman will investigate that matter he will find himself seriously in error.

Mr. TAWNEY. They would not be so absurd as to require a man to travel at night at his own expense. No one with judgment would do it.

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is only during the last two or three years that any special agent of the Government has been refunded the expense of traveling in a sleeping car.

Mr. MANN. It has been done ever since I have been in Washington.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit me, I will state that in an investigation just held before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior it has been shown that this per diem is paid in addition to the sleeping-car ticket and the traveling expenses.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is true; there is no question.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is true in all the departments, except in the Post-Office Department, where they travel on official transportation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, in response to the gentleman from Minnesota, for I recollect the testimony before the Post-Office Committee, because I went into that to some extent, these assistant superintendents and post-office inspectors have their transportation paid, and paid by the Government, and their sleeping-car fare is all paid by the Government, and this per diem allowance is simply for hotel bills, and they do not pay any part of their travel expense out of the per diem allowance. I think that is correct.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COX of Indiana. If the gentleman wants to interrupt me, or ask a question——

Mr. TAWNEY. The language of the law is, "for per diem allowance for assistant superintendents, Division of Registered Mail, when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General not exceeding $4 a day, and for other actual and necessary traveling expenses arising in connection with the business of the Division of Registered Mail, $7,000." The entire appropriation is available for per diem and actual traveling expenses, excepting their transportation, which is official and is furnished to them. Now, if the Postmaster-General fixes the per diem at $4——

Mr. COX of Indiana. He always does that.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that he always does that.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman any evidence on that matter?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; but the entire expense of the per diem and travel comes out of this $7,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I just want to say a word about that. Is the gentleman able to say that the Postmaster-General ever fixes it at less than that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am not able to answer that.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to a question—the gentleman on that distinguished Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads? Did he make the same inquiry in connection with the item in the bill which just passed the House—

For per diem allowance of the assistant superintendents while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think he did; and if the gentleman will investigate the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he will find that I offered an amendment to reduce it.

Mr. MANN. I ask whether the gentleman made an investigation. I remember the gentleman's discussion of the subject, but could not find that he had any information while speaking about the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the gentleman admitted he argued a moment ago that we should know something about this matter, and the gentleman has just stated that he did not know what the word "investigation" meant.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Well, the gentleman from Illinois was laying so much stress on the word "investigation" that I did not know what he meant by that. That is the reason I responded as I did. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not so much the amount of money involved as the principle. I object to making fish of one and fowl of the other. I do not believe that this class of men traveling in the interest of the Post-Office Department is any better or any worse than the class of men traveling in the interest of some other department; and as the committee in different places in this bill has held the per diem down to $3, I move an amendment by striking out the word "four" and inserting the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment to the page and line which he will indicate.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In line 6 on page 144.

Mr. GILLETT. I trust this amendment will not be adopted. The distinction, as already suggested, was that we gave the land office $3 a day because their service was a less expensive service; but there is the further argument that in the post-office appropriation bill we provided for the other departments of the post-office at the same rate as this. It would certainly be very inconsistent and unfair to have one branch of the service getting $4 and the other getting $3 for practically the same work. The gentleman from Indiana says he introduced his amendment to that effect before. It was voted down then, and I trust the amendment will be defeated now.

Mr. MANN. The item was not only in the post-office bill once, but it was in the post-office bill several times. The first time it appeared in the post-office bill the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] was as silent as the grave.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What does the gentleman mean by the first time?

Mr. MANN. It occurred a number of times in the post-office bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is exactly true, and I made the amendment at the first point in the bill where it appeared. Of course, I did not repeat it any more after that. I recollect distinctly that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] voted against my amendment.

Mr. MANN. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he offered it the second time. It first appears in the post-office bill on the second page of the bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; and there is where "the gentleman from Indiana" offered his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Without ever having investigated the subject in committee, without pretending at the time to have any special knowledge on the subject, and while the gentleman from Indiana and I largely agree on this $4 a day item, still I think we ought to investigate it somewhat and ascertain before we act upon it and see that these men shall not be deprived of their $4 a day allowance, if it costs them that much.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill to say that they have simply put it in because it occurred in former bills.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly that is what they did; whatever they say.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman approve of that practice?

Mr. MANN. That is what the Post-Office Committee did, and if I had been on the Post-Office Committee——

Mr. COX of Indiana. If you will read the hearings before our committee, you will find evidence on that point.

Mr. MANN. If I had been on the Post-Office Committee, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is, I believe I would have known something about the item; and I do not doubt that the gentleman from Indiana will know the next time the post-office bill comes before the House.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think I know something about it now, and if you will turn to the hearings you will find I developed it before the committee.

Mr. MANN. You did not develop it enough to convince the House.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Oh, I know I did not develop the interest of anybody on that side far enough to awaken them to the necessity of lowering salaries.

Mr. MANN. Just a moment. It is hardly fair for the gentleman from Indiana, having failed to convince his committee or the House when his bill was before the House, that he should now endeavor to reduce the amount to $3 a day for other people in the Post-Office Department, simply because the item happens to come in this bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Fair or unfair, the gentleman from Indiana will act consistently along this line.

Mr. MANN. I believe he always does.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the gentleman in fairness ought not to state, as he did, that the committee did not investigate it. I said we did not investigate it this year, because we followed law of the preceding year; but when we first put it in we did investigate it, and I gave the reason why we fixed it differently from the other.

Mr. STAFFORD. The provision under consideration is similar to the provision in the post-office appropriation bill providing for a per diem allowance to the assistant superintendents in the salary and allowance division. No inquiry was made before the Post-Office Committee this year as to the expenses of these officials engaged in work in the field. The inquiry was made as to the per diem allowance of inspectors, and it was the opinion of some that the inspectors used the per diem as a part of their salary. It was also the opinion of many members of the Post-Office Committee that the per diem allowance of the assistant superintendents, which is similar in scope to the one under consideration, is not excessive. Their work does not permit them to return to their homes each night, as in the case of many inspectors, so that they can make any saving from the per diem allowance. Their work compels them to be away from home for long periods of time. These assistant superintendents are men of high character, who are required to stop at reasonably equipped hotels where the expenditure must necessarily be at the rate of three or four dollars a day. If you curtail the expense allowance of these men, you oblige a man to refrain from going out into the field, because the expenses will not be met by a sum of $3 a day. It is for the interest of the service, if they are going to be continued, that they will be at least granted a sum that will meet their ordinary expenses. Now, anyone in this House knows that $4 a day is not an extravagant amount to meet the expenses of these high-grade men when they stop at a fair class of hotels.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask why we should give these men $4 a day when those in the Indian service are only paid $3 a day?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman knew anything at all about the difference in the character of the service, he would not ask the question, because the field agents connected with the Interior service are not obliged to go into the large cities, but go into the sparsely settled districts. These men are obliged to stop at the hotels in the large cities, and there is no comparison between the two at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman's statement is not correct; the inspectors in the Interior Department go all over the country; they go into the East and purchase goods, and they go into the West.

Mr. WANGER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. WANGER. I will suggest that two years ago the First Assistant Postmaster-General testified before the committee that the difference between the inspectors and the assistant superintendents was that the travel of the inspectors is more restricted; that some of them usually get back home every night, while, he says, the other men are lucky if they spend one night a month at home.

Mr. STAFFORD. The information conveyed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania confirms what I said. These men are necessarily obliged to be away most of the time from their homes, where they have little chance to save any part of the per diem allowance. I question seriously whether they will have anything left over at the end of the year from the allowance of $4 a day after meeting their expenses. I think it would be parsimony to cut down the allowance from $4 to $3 a day; and worse than that, it would be destructive of the best interests of the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriations made for the service of the Post-Office Department in conformity with the act of July 2, 1836, shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Post-Office Department at Washington, D. C.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I would like to ask whether that has received the approval of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. GRAFF. This is for the purpose of keeping the postal receipts from being used for the payment of employees in the department.

Mr. MANN. I see the purpose of it; that is apparent on the face of it—that is, that no part of the post-office appropriation can be used for any of the purposes provided for in this bill. I do not know whether the post-office bill undertakes of itself to provide for some of the purposes that may be provided for in this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me a proposition of this sort ought to be submitted to the chairman of the Post-Office Committee. This is not the place to make a limitation on the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that here is what developed——

Mr. MANN. If they have not provided for anything they could not use the money for that purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. They do; and that was developed in the hearings.

Mr. MANN. If they do, the place to put a limitation is on the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Notwithstanding the limitation on that bill, they do it. If the gentleman will pardon me, here is what developed. We found that the appropriation, or the money carried in the post-office appropriation bill that is being expended for the city office here, from the appropriation the Post-Office Department was furnishing the ice for the Post-Office Department. They were also using a number of the employees in the city post-office here for that purpose, and renting certain buildings. A year ago they were paying rent for a building out of a certain appropriation. This practice having come to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, we incorporated this provision in the bill to put a stop to it.

Mr. MANN. Of course no one here will defend the use of the appropriation as indicated by the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. Those are the facts.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not know, I apprehend, how far this thing might reach, nor what the comptroller or the auditor might hold. The gentleman is not very likely familiar enough with the post-office appropriation bill to say whether the post-office appropriation bill and this bill, in a way, overlap in some things.

Mr. TAWNEY. They do not overlap. The one is for the service outside of the District of Columbia, except of course the service here in the city—that is, the post-office service—and the other is limited exclusively to the appropriations for the department. It is the department that administers the law governing the service, and the appropriations made for the purpose of carrying on that service, but here in this case the department expends money appropriated for the postal service for purposes that pertain exclusively to the administrative department of that service and to that extent diverts the service appropriation. This provision is merely to put a stop to that practice. I do not think the Post-Office Committee is concerned in the matter as long as their appropriations are not made for any branch of the departmental service, and the Committee on the Post-Office would not be apprised of the practice that has obtained here in the city in the investigation of the estimates which they make.

It is only the Committee on Appropriations having to do with the administrative department of the postal service that would necessarily ascertain by investigating the estimates whether or not any of the service appropriation was diverted to purposes pertaining exclusively to the departmental service, because the Committee on Appropriations makes the appropriations for the departmental service, and if we run across, as we have in this instance, a service not appropriated for by this committee, then we naturally inquire where they get the money with which to pay for this service, and we are informed that it comes out of the service appropriation bill, which is a diversion of that appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not insist upon the point of order, although I am afraid that I am not doing the proper thing when I do not.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Office of the Attorney-General: Attorney-General, $12,000; Solicitor-General, $10,000; assistant to the Attorney-General, $7,000; 7 Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each; Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, $5,000; Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $5,000; Solicitor for the Department of State, $5,000; 3 attorneys, at $5,000 each (including 1 now employed and paid from appropriation for assistants to the Attorney-General to aid in special cases); 2 attorneys, at $3,500 each; attorney, $3,250; 10 attorneys, at $3,000 each; attorney, $2,500; assistant attorney, $3,500; 2 assistant attorneys, at $3,000 each; 2 assistant attorneys, at $2,750 each; 5 assistant attorneys, at $2,500 each; assistant attorney, $2,400; 2 assistant attorneys, at $2,000 each; attorney in charge of titles, $2,700; assistant examiner of titles, $2,000; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the buildings, $2,500; superintendent of buildings, $500; private secretary and assistant to the Attorney-General, $3,000; clerk to the Attorney-General, $1,600; stenographer to the Solicitor-General, $1,600; 2 law clerks, at $2,000 each; 2 law clerks of class 4; law clerk in office of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $2,000; attorney in charge of pardons, $3,000; superintendent of prisons, $3,000; disbursing clerk, $2,750; appointment clerk, $2,000; chief examiner, $3,000; 3 examiners, at $2,500 each; 4 examiners, at $2,250 each; 2 examiners, at $2,000 each; 3 examiners, at $1,800 each; librarian, $1,600; 7 clerks of class 4; 12 clerks of class 3; 6 clerks of class 2; 14 clerks of class 1 (2 transferred from appropriation "Enforcement of antitrust laws," and 2 transferred from appropriation "Suits for removal of restrictions, etc."); telegraph operator, $1,200; 8 clerks, at $1,000 each; 24 clerks, at $900 each (1 transferred from appropriation "Traveling and miscellaneous expenses, Department of Justice;" 2 transferred from appropriation "Suits for removal of restrictions, etc.;" and 1 transferred from appropriation "Enforcement of antitrust laws"); chief messenger, $1,000; packer, $900; 5 messengers; 13 assistant messengers (including 1 transferred from appropriation for rent and care of buildings); 7 laborers; 6 watchmen (including 1 transferred from appropriation for rent and care of buildings); engineer, $1,200; 2 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 4 firemen; 2 conductors of the elevator, at $720 each; head charwoman, $480; 22 charwomen. Division of Accounts: Chief of Division of Accounts, $2,500; chief bookkeeper and record clerk, $2,000; 3 clerks of class 4; 4 clerks of class 3; 6 clerks of class 2; 5 clerks of class 1; 2 clerks, at $900 each; in all, $393,180.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to reserve a point of order on the paragraph, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question or two. In line 4, page 149, we find the following:

Assistant to the Attorney-General, $7,000.

Then a little farther down we find the following language:

Three attorneys, at $5,000 each (including one now employed and paid from appropriations for assistants to the Attorney-General to aid in special cases).

Where does the Hon. Wade Hampton Ellis get his salary out of this bill?

Mr. MANN. He was assistant to the Attorney-General.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Ellis was appointed assistant to the Attorney-General?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; and resigned yesterday.

Mr. TAWNEY. And he is paid from the appropriations, the current year, $7,000 as assistant to the Attorney-General.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is he now divorced from the public crib?

Mr. MANN. The paper states this morning that a gentleman from Iowa has been appointed assistant to the Attorney-General to succeed Mr. Ellis. When that appointment takes place, I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is very illuminating, so far as it goes, but it was stated in the newspapers at the time that Mr. Ellis was appointed general manager or receiver, whichever it is, for the Republican party out in Ohio [laughter]—I guess receiver is the better word to use——

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the gentleman means undertaker. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, if the gentleman wants to substitute "undertaker," I will accept that.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to do that at all—quite the contrary.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I accept the amendment. It was stated in the newspapers that he was to resign this $7,000 place here, which is named in the bill "assistant to the Attorney-General," but that he was to still stay on the pay roll in some capacity or other, in which position he is to receive an amount equal to or greater than the salary he was then receiving. Now, if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knows anything about that, I would like to have his opinion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri, if the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will pardon me, will recollect that a few years ago an enthusiastic gentleman on the Democratic side of the House offered an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, or the deficiency bill, making an appropriation of $250,000 for the Attorney-General to prosecute violations of the Sherman antitrust law, and so forth. A more enthusiastic gentleman on this side of the House proposed an amendment increasing that to $500,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; "raised" it.

Mr. MANN. And the House in its enthusiasm agreed to the higher amount—would have agreed to a million, I suppose, if some hysterical gentleman had suggested that amount—and that sum was appropriated. That is a special sum for the purpose. Those sums have been carried in some way or other, and I presume that original sum is still outstanding to some extent. And the Attorney-General has the authority to employ special counsel.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And pay as much as he pleases?

Mr. MANN. He fixes the salary out of the sum which has been appropriated for the prosecution of violations of the Sherman antitrust law and prosecutions of the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then Mr. Ellis, I infer from the gentleman's remarks, in addition to being "undertaker" for the Republican party for Ohio, is also drawing this $7,000, or whatever it is, for supposed services to the Government out of the antitrust fund.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether Mr. Ellis is on the pay roll of the Government in any capacity, so far as I am concerned, but I have no doubt if he is retained in the Government in any way he will be compelled to furnish ample services for the money that he receives.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Since when has that rule gone into effect? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. That rule went into effect when Cleveland retired from office and has been in effect ever since, and will be in effect unless the gentleman has his happy wish gratified, and that is that his side of the House may come into power again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was demonstrated in the House last year that if that rule had ever been in effect it had long been forgotten by the Republican officials.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that is correct.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, and to make this statement for his information, the lump sum of $500,000 was appropriated about six years ago—I am not certain as to the date—without any restriction or limitation whatever upon the department charged with the duty of prosecuting the antitrust law in the use of this money for the purposes of meeting the expenses incident thereto.

Under that appropriation the position of assistant to the Attorney-General, recently filled by Mr. Ellis, was created, and the salary was paid from that appropriation. That practice followed until about two or three years ago, when the services became necessary not only in the prosecution of the antitrust law, but in connection with the business of the department generally. Then the Congress provided specifically for the salary, and Mr. Ellis has drawn that salary since his appointment as assistant and up until a few weeks ago, when he has accepted, as I understand, another position, and he has resigned and another gentleman appointed from Iowa will draw that salary at the end of the first month of his service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But I have not got the information I would like to get; and that is, whether Wade H. Ellis is still drawing salary from the Department of Justice.

Mr. TAWNEY. He is not drawing salary from the Department of Justice. The gentleman knows that as well as I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I do not.

Mr. TAWNEY. When you appoint another man to fill a position it necessarily follows that the man who formerly held the position can not draw the salary.

Mr. BURLESON. When the other man qualifies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota has never answered the question that I asked, and that is, Is Wade H. Ellis still on the pay roll of the Department of Justice?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the gentleman from Minnesota has not answered the question because he has not the information. If the gentleman will call up the Attorney-General or the office of the Attorney-General, he can ascertain that fact. I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is your opinion?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no opinion on the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman is in charge of this bill. In lines 7 and 8—of course I wish to preface this with the statement that I tackle a Massachusetts statesman with a great deal of delicacy on a question of grammar—but in lines 7 and 8 is that collocation of words, "solicitor of internal revenue, $5,000," a proper expression to use—"solicitor of internal revenue?"

Mr. GILLETT. That is the title of the office.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Title of what office?

Mr. GILLETT. Title of the office of solicitor of the office of internal revenue.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who conferred that title upon him?

Mr. GILLETT. Congress, some years ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did you bring that bill in?

Mr. GILLETT. I did not.

Mr. TAWNEY. That came from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask your opinion, as a scholar, whether that is a correct kind of a designation for an office?

Mr. GILLETT. Anybody may put a designation on any office——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He does not solicit internal revenue.

Mr. MANN. He does every time he gets a chance.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He is a law officer of the Internal-Revenue Bureau.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course we simply follow the law and not our own ideas of grammar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is a very curious kind of verbiage.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] stated, in reply to a question by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], that he believed that Mr. Wade H. Ellis was no longer an Assistant Attorney-General, because he had recently accepted another position.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that that was not the basis of my belief alone, but also because another man has been appointed to fill his place.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was about to comment on the fact that the gentleman saw no impropriety in Mr. Ellis holding both positions, but recognized his inability to do so when some one had been substituted for him upon the government pay roll. If the gentleman had said that the position of Assistant Attorney-General in charge of prosecutions under the antitrust law was incompatible with the position of the political manager representing the President of the United States in his own State of Ohio, he would have said something that everybody would have recognized as eminently proper.

This is not the first time that a Republican administration has turned to a man who has been in a position where he has obtained in the conduct of his office confidential information which might be of great value in the conduct of a campaign. The man who was at the head of the Department of Commerce and Labor and who had charge of the Bureau of Corporations, which collated information which could not be made public except with the consent of the President of the United States, in a great emergency in the Republican party was placed at the head of the Republican national campaign committee.

And the success of that experiment, I suppose, justifies the belief that perhaps by placing in charge of the campaign in the State in which the result will be important to the fortunes of the Republican party a man who has occupied a position where he has obtained information that will be very valuable in "frying the fat," as the technical Republican expression is—perhaps he may be able to subvert the expression of the popular will and save the face of the President in his own State in the coming campaign.

Mr. Chairman, the country is aroused to the viciousness of this practice of appointing men ostensibly for the purpose of enforcing the law, and, after they have obtained confidential information, putting them at the head of campaign committees, so as to insure the success of the Republican ticket. Perhaps this practice accounts for the fact that, although $750,000 was appropriated five or six years ago for the purpose of enforcing the anti-trust laws, the Department of Justice has been so deliberate in its operations that Congress has been compelled to force this money upon the department year after year in the hope that perhaps, all political exigencies being removed, somebody would wake up to the necessity of performing their public duties and discharge the obligations imposed upon them by law and proceed against these violators of the law.

If there be any other State where the situation is particularly desperate, I suppose some other man with confidential information will be selected for the head of the campaign committee in that State. I have been trying to ascertain just what particular resident of the State of New York, on the pay roll of the National Government, in a position where he has been able to obtain valuable and confidential information, is held up somebody's sleeve, awaiting a favorable opportunity to be brought out as the candidate of this administration for the head of the Republican campaign committee in the State of New York. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it sems to me the gentleman's remarks are not characterized by his accustomed ingenuity. It is too absurd to obtain credence anywhere that the reason for the gentleman being selected for the chairmanship of the Republican committee in Ohio was as suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman take us into his confidence and tell us what the real reason was?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman's characteristics are sufficient to account for his selection—his eminence and his ability. It seems to me it is a particularly unfortunate day for the gentleman to make this charge, when at this hour in the Supreme Court of the United States is being argued the greatest case yet under these many prosecutions which have been carried on by the Attorney-General, prosecutions which under four years of Democratic administration were entirely neglected, although the same laws were in force then as are in force now, and for the gentleman to pretend that now nothing is being done by the Republican administration is mere politics. The present administration and the last administration have been active and energetic along these lines, and the culmination of it is going on to-day before the Supreme Court. I do not believe anybody believes, even on that side of the House, that the selection was made for the reason suggested by the gentleman. I understand and believe that the gentleman is no longer an official of the United States; that he has gone out of office and is now engaged in his private business outside of the United States Government.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. What case has been argued? The gentleman did not state.

Mr. GILLETT. The Standard Oil case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I wish to call his attention to a peculiar oversight——

Mr. GILLETT. I was speaking to your amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Ellis has never been eminent for his peculiar political qualifications. He had some reputation as a lawyer in the State of Ohio. He was the attorney-general of that State. Shortly after, or about the 4th of March last year, it was intimated that he was to be made Attorney-General of the United States, because of his supposedly eminent legal qualifications. I do not know just what peculiar mix-up in Ohio prevented his selection for a Cabinet position. Perhaps it was what might have been considered the impropriety of selecting some other Ohioan for a place in the President's Cabinet when a man who was in President Roosevelt's Cabinet expected, and it is now currently reported had been urged for retention by the present administration by the head of the last administration. Not being able to gratify that ambition and the wish of those who were behind Mr. Ellis, he was put in charge of this work of prosecutions against the trusts. And it might be a commentary upon the situation to call attention to the fact that a few days before this great case against the Standard Oil Company is to be argued Mr. Ellis was eliminated from the public service and from his position as Assistant Attorney-General in charge of these prosecutions generally and placed in charge of the campaign in Ohio, where the Standard Oil Company has not been without its difficulties. Now, I know that the gentleman from Minnesota is going to say——

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me say it, then.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). That this case has been in charge of Mr. Kellogg, from his own State.

Mr. TAWNEY. And Mr. Ellis has never been in charge of it, and, therefore, there is no justification for the conclusion which you have drawn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say he had been in charge.

Mr. TAWNEY. You said he had been engaged, and was eliminated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I said he was eliminated from the department. He occupied the position of the Assistant Attorney-General, which had been created, and was first paid out of the antitrust funds. Afterwards it was made a permanent position and this man was appointed to that place, and his appointment was widely heralded as a move on the part of the administration rigidly to enforce the antitrust laws. They supposed a man from Ohio the one best qualified and equipped for that work. The gentleman can explain it as he pleases. But the country can not forget the fact that in that position he came into possession of information of vast importance and of a highly confidential character, and that he is now sent out to do the political work of the administration in the State of Ohio, which just now very greatly worries the present administration. It will worry them a great deal more next fall, when it is found the State is again in the Democratic column. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I believe a point of order has been reserved against the paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why this increase of salary on page 149?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Solicitor-General?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Also, whether or not that is not a new place created on page 150: "Attorney in charge of pardons, $3,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; that is not a new office.

In regard to the Solicitor-General, I must say that the gentleman and Members of the House will recollect the statement I made upon the floor during the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, when the appropriations for the customs court of appeals and the attorneys and other officers were under consideration. I then stated that we had reduced the salary of the Assistant Attorney-General, in charge of the business before that court, from $10,000 to $8,000; that that was $500 more than the Solicitor-General was receiving, and that it was not a logical relation between the work of the Solicitor-General and that of the Attorney-General, or that of the Assistant Attorney-General in charge of the court of customs appeals.

When the salary of the Attorney-General was fixed at $8,000 the salary of the Solicitor-General was fixed at $7,500. When Congress increased the salary of the Attorney-General to $12,000 it did not increase the salary of the Solicitor-General, and to-day there is that difference of $4,500 between the salary of the Attorney-General and that of the Solicitor-General, whereas the difference prior to the increase was only $500.

The business of the Solicitor-General is to attend to the legal affairs of the Government of the United States in the Supreme Court of the United States. The office of Attorney-General has become primarily an administrative office. He goes into the Supreme Court of the United States at will, of course, but very seldom, except in cases such as that which is being argued there to-day—the Standard Oil case.

The Solicitor-General transacts all of the legal business of the Government that comes before the Supreme Court of the United States, except in rare instances, when the Attorney-General himself appears, and sometimes then the Solicitor-General appears with the Attorney-General. He is brought in contact with the brightest and ablest lawyers in the United States, and the man who fills that position must be qualified; and I am proud to say that, in my judgment, the man who is to-day filling that position is qualified to meet the ablest lawyers this country affords. I do not think there ought to be that gap between the salary of the Attorney-General and that of the man who virtually stands at the head of the legal department, so far as the argument of cases before the Supreme Court is concerned, in view of the services rendered by the Solicitor-General. For that reason we reduced the salary of the Assistant Attorney-General to assist the customs court of appeals from $10,000 to $8,000; and I said at the time that I intended, if the committee would support me, to recommend to the House on this bill the increase of the salary of the Solicitor-General from $7,500 to $10,000 a year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Under the gentleman's statement, the Solicitor-General is really the lawyer of the Attorney-General's office?

Mr. TAWNEY. He is, unquestionably.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I should like to ask whether the salary of the attorney in charge of pardons has not been increased from $2,750 to $3,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. To $3,000, and the increase asked for was $3,500.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why did you increase him?

Mr. TAWNEY. He has charge of all the applications for pardons and clemency made to the Department of Justice. He briefs all the cases, and presents the case in the most concise form for the consideration of the Attorney-General or the President.

Mr. MANN. He practically determines in reference to pardons, and is one of the most efficient men in the service.

Mr. JAMES. Have the applications for pardons increased to such an extent as to necessitate an increase in his salary?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that the applications for pardons increase as the country grows larger.

Mr. TAWNEY. Applications for pardons are increasing in the same ratio that criminals are increasing. I trust the gentleman will appreciate the importance of fixing the salary of the Solicitor-General so that it will bear some reasonable relation to the salary of the Attorney-General, in view of the relation of the work of one to the other, because I regard the office of Solicitor-General, from the standpoint of the legal interests of the Government, of equal importance, under existing practice, with the office of the Attorney-General.

The duties and responsibilities of the office of Attorney-General have increased so enormously that the time of the Attorney-General is, necessarily, occupied almost wholly in the administrative duties of that great office.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in response to what the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said I will withdraw the point of order, but I am rather loath to do so, because I am constitutionally opposed to this everlasting and continued increase in salaries. I do not believe it is right on principle. When a man is elected to an office, he knows what salary he is going to be paid, and then he immediately comes to the conclusion that his salary is not large enough.

Mr. TAWNEY. To whom does the gentleman now refer?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Oh, generally.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Solicitor-General has never requested this increase.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did some one request it for him?

Mr. TAWNEY. I did.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman from Minnesota assume the responsibility?

Mr. TAWNEY. I assume the responsibility absolutely, because I believe not only that the present incumbent, who abandoned a salary of $35,000 to accept this position, and is now performing the duties of that great office, is as competent, if not more so, than any man that ever filled the position before, but also because I know——

Mr. COX of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will make his speech in his own time.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). That any man qualified to fill that position is worth to the Government $10,000 a year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I will accept the gentleman's statement, although it is in direct opposition to many and many a speech that I have heard him make on the floor of this House. For years he has been pleading with the Members of this House for economy, and now he comes before the committee and openly assumes responsibility for this increase of salary. When the gentleman who now serves as Solicitor-General of the United States was appointed, he knew at that time what his salary was.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman uses the phrase "everlasting increase." If the gentleman had sat in the committee——

Mr. COX of Indiana. Probably that will extend to the end of time, and I should not have used an expression as broad as that; but there is not an appropriation bill that comes on the floor of the House which is not covered from lid to lid with increases of salary.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I want to say that if the gentleman had sat on the committee, he would have said "everlasting denial of increases of salary." The increase is rather the exception, and the denial is the rule.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It may be that we do not get anything but the exception, and that the committee is in possession of the general rule. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to state in that connection that in the reduction of the places carried in this bill there are 102, and the decreases in salary are a great many more.

Mr. COX of Indiana. They could have been decreased a great deal more than they are.

Mr. TAWNEY. That may be. It is not always economy to pay low salaries.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Where does the Solicitor-General live?

Mr. TAWNEY. In Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Does that hurt him any? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX of Indiana. No; if he lives in the gentleman's district it probably makes it better.

Mr. MANN. He does not live in my district, but he is one of the ablest lawyers in the United States.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I have no doubt that he is an able lawyer; there are lots of good lawyers in Chicago.

Mr. WEISSE. Mr. Chairman, while this controversy was going on I inquired over the telephone of the Department of Justice in regard to Wade Ellis, and they tell me that he is still on the pay roll and will probably stay there. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I just had the pleasure of listening to the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I do not know from what official he got his information, but I do know that it is absolutely and wholly incorrect.

Mr. WEISSE. Then the officer in the Department of Justice is absolutely and entirely incorrect, for he made the statement over the telephone ten minutes ago.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Who did?

Mr. WEISSE. I do not know, but I can go to the telephone and find out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I wish the gentleman would do so. I am in a position, Mr. Chairman, to state the fact and to relieve all doubts on this question. It is true that Mr. Ellis has been—technically, we will say—in the employment of the Department of Justice until yesterday. He sent in his resignation on the 1st of March, and his successor was only appointed yesterday, during which time it was necessary that some one should be there to sign papers. Mr. Ellis, however, has not drawn a cent of salary since the day his resignation was sent in.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman tell us whether or not Mr. Ellis is employed to prosecute certain cases and in that way is to derive much more than his salary would be?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely not. He has no connection to-day with any governmental department. He had a technical connection with the department up to yesterday, when his resignation was accepted.

Mr. JAMES. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio, Is it true that he has been retained by the Government to assist in the prosecution of certain cases, and that his time in Ohio will be given to the Republican party?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have said that he was not in the employment of the Government in any capacity.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The gentleman being from the State of Ohio, I assume that he is well informed as to what is going on there.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Slightly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman state to this House now that it was not understood at the time that Mr. Ellis was to tender his resignation that he was to be attached to the Department of Justice in the prosecution of trust cases? Will the gentleman deny that to this House?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have no information of the details of the occurrence the gentleman mentions. I simply make the statement that Mr. Ellis is not in the employ of the Department of Justice or in any other government department; that since the day he sent in his resignation he has not drawn a cent of salary, and will not draw any.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Has there been a pay day since so that he could draw his salary?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not know about that. I know that he has not drawn a salary and that he is not going to.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Oh, my colleague is begging the question. I assume that he will not deny that he himself attended some of the political tea parties at the White House which were called for the purpose of giving aid, counsel, and comfort to politicians in an effort to destroy in the President's own State the best administration we have had in fifty years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the first place, I will say to the gentleman that I have never attended a tea party at the White House, and do not approve of them, anyway. [Laughter.] So far as the excellence of the administration in Ohio is concerned, the gentleman is entitled to his opinion and I suppose I may have mine.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Except that I have stated mine and the gentleman, my colleague, lacks the candor and frankness to state his.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, the gentleman will have no hesitation in expressing his opinion at the proper time.

Mr. MANN. One thing is sure; they are very much afraid of Mr. Ellis out in Ohio on the Democratic side, or they would not abuse him so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are afraid of any man who has confidential information which he ought not to use.

Mr. MANN. Afraid of any man who has been in the habit of slaying dragons and trusts and is now prepared to go up against the greatest menace there is to the country—Democratic success. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. He never convicted a trust of anything.

Mr. MANN. He will convict your party in Ohio this time, however.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] a question. It seems now that we have got down to this near solution of the Wade Ellis muddle; that he resigned, and his resignation is supposed to have taken effect yesterday. Of course until he did resign, he could not be appointed to these special places. Has the gentleman any information that there was an arrangement made with him by which if he would resign the office that he held at $7,000 a year and assume the functions of that political office out in Ohio he should be given a sort of roving commission on a better salary than he had to prosecute the trusts?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely not. As I said before, I have no confidential information from Mr. Ellis or anybody else as to what his future movements are to be. I do know, however, that he is not upon the pay roll and he has not been upon the pay roll of the Department of Justice. My information is that he is going to take up the private practice of the law in Ohio, and that is all I know about it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Can the gentleman solve this mystery: Is he the personal representative of President Taft in Republican operations in Ohio?

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman should not inquire into family matters like that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman had better call at the White House if he desires further information upon that subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

For law books for office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $450.

Mr. WEISSE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], I wish to state that the private secretary of the Attorney-General stated to me over the telephone that he is still on the pay roll.

Mr. JAMES. Who is on the pay roll?

Mr. WEISSE. Wade Ellis; and that he is going to stay on for some time, because he is interested in prosecuting three or four special cases. Now, if the gentleman from Ohio will go to the 'phone and get that information, or a letter from the department, he may enlighten himself and also enlighten the House before he questions a statement. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I got exactly the same information from the Department of Justice that the gentleman did; but I also got very much better information later on from one who knows better than anyone else all the facts in the case, and I reiterate that while Mr. Ellis is technically upon the pay roll, he has not drawn any salary from the Department of Justice and is not going to.

Mr. WEISSE. His salary does not become due until the first of next month, and of course nobody knows what he is going to draw, but he is still on the pay roll, and I will venture to say he will draw the salary.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will venture to say that he will not. Now, there is a tremendous assumption of virtue upon the other side, it seems to me, just at this particular moment about people who may have inside information about the Standard Oil or something else. Those gentlemen seem to forget, or seek to make the people forget, that the treasurer of the Democratic party in the last campaign was a gentleman who was assumed to know something about the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. BUTLER. What was his name?

Mr. LONGWORTH. His name, as I remember it, was Haskell, or something very like it. He was a Democratic governor of a Democratic State and an acknowledged expert in Standard Oil affairs.

Mr. MANN. He was temporarily only.

Mr. JAMES. I thought the gentleman from Ohio stated when he was upon his feet just a moment ago that he had no knowledge of any retention by the Government of Mr. Ellis in the matter of prosecuting trust cases. I might have misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have no personal knowledge; no.

Mr. JAMES. Do you have any information from any departmental official?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; I have had no information.

Mr. JAMES. It may be I clearly misunderstood the gentleman. We on this side understood you to say you did not believe that Mr. Ellis was going to be retained in the prosecution of any of these trust cases. Now it appears from the Attorney-General's Office that he is retained, and that is the very question I put to the gentleman from Ohio a moment ago, if it was not true that he was to be retained to prosecute those cases, and, while he had ostensibly given up a place which only paid $7,000 a year to go down to Ohio and try to lead the Republican party to victory, that he in reality was going to receive more money out of the Federal Treasury than before.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely not; I made no such statement.

Mr. JAMES. That is my understanding, and it seems to be verified by the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WEISSE].

Mr. LONGWORTH. On the contrary, I made no such statement.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman from Wisconsin said he had information from the department that it is true Mr. Ellis is upon the pay roll of the Government.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I stated myself he was technically upon the pay roll.

Mr. JAMES. Is he technically enough upon the pay roll to get his hands into the Federal Treasury? That is what I want to know.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Absolutely not.

Mr. JAMES. Yes; but the gentleman from Wisconsin, who has just talked to the Department of Justice, says the officials of that department say he is.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The fact is, I presume, Mr. Ellis has had experience in the trial of these beef-trust cases and he for some time will give the benefit of his information to his successor, possibly, and I say my only statement is that he is not and will not be paid out of the funds of the department or any other department——

Mr. JAMES. We want to know if he is going to be paid out of the Treasury, and if by some sort of a hocus-pocus proposition he is resigning one office, but is, in reality, getting his arms further into the Public Treasury while he is serving the Republican Party in Ohio as chairman?

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any provision in this bill for Haskell? I would like to know. What is this discussion all about?

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman need not try to hide behind the Haskell ghost of 1908. This question under consideration now here is whether a federal official is to be allowed to take money out of the Public Treasury——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JAMES. I move to strike out the last two words. There is a vast difference between the case of Haskell in the 1908 campaign and of a federal official who is transferred into a new field to lead the Republican party in a political campaign. The question stands upon its own merit; it stands upon the question of whether you can take an American federal office-holder where he is drawing salary from the Government—the money of all the people, taxes gathered from all, both Democrats and Republicans alike—and make him the chairman of a political campaign of either party, I care not whether the Democratic party or the Republican party is to be served.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the gentleman is right, but the gentleman from Ohio has assured us that Mr. Ellis will not draw any salary from the United States Government.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman from Ohio did not assure us of that. The gentleman from Ohio told us he had no information, that he had no personal knowledge; but we have personal knowledge and we have official knowledge coming from the gentleman from Wisconsin, which he gets from the Attorney-General's office.

Mr. COX of Ohio. If the gentleman will permit, is it not true that after Mr. Ellis's appointment there was considerable criticism in the Ohio papers with reference to this dual connection, and that immediately thereafter, in order to put down this criticism, the official reports went out of Washington that Mr. Ellis was then engaged in the prosecution of antitrust cases and he was helping then in the preparation of the beef-trust cases and had held two conferences in Washington?

I ask my distinguished colleague from Ohio to deny the accuracy of those statements.

Mr. JAMES. I do not anticipate that he can. I am sure he will not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is very easy to criticise Mr. Ellis——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] started it the other day.

Mr. MANN. I have done so myself where I thought he was subject to criticism, and I would not hesitate to do so if I would think him subject to criticism, but I do not shed crocodile tears or put up any pretension of being holier than somebody else.

If any gentleman in the government employ anywhere possesses information which is of value to the Government in the prosecution of suits which the Government is carrying on, the Government ought to retain that man in the service either generally or specially, until that information is made use of, and if the Republicans of Ohio have selected, as they have, Mr. Ellis for their campaign manager, and he possesses special knowledge in reference to cases which the Government is prosecuting, there is no morality, there is no business sense, there is no idea of hypocrisy or otherwise, which ought to prevent his being retained specially by the Government for the prosecution of those cases.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Illinois see no impropriety in placing at the head of a campaign committee in a State like Ohio a man who has been in his official capacity in a position where he has obtained information that would be of value in a prosecution of offenders against the law, and which information might be held as a club over those from whom contributions would be desired?

Mr. MANN. That is another proposition, and an entirely different one. The proposition here is not whether he should use information which he possesses, as a club, but whether the Government shall permit him to go into court and use the information he possesses against the offenders. If he were out of the government service he might use the information, if he has it, as a club, but in the government service he is required to go into court and prosecute the offenders with the information which he has. And that is what troubles the gentlemen. On their side of the House, they never have attempted to prosecute any great offender in the country and they are jealous of the power and the hold that the President is obtaining upon the people because the people are learning that the President means business in prosecuting these great offenders against our laws. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Is it not true that the gentleman in Ohio, Governor Harmon, whom they are seeking to defeat, was the first Attorney-General in the history of this Republic who successfully prosecuted trust cases?

Mr. MANN. Well, it is true that I never heard of any of his prosecutions. I will be glad to have the information. It is news to me.

Mr. COX of Ohio. It is further true, and I believe the gentleman knows it——

Mr. MANN. He was Attorney-General under President Cleveland, and if anybody can find a case under the Sherman antitrust law, or any other similar law, which he brought and prosecuted, for heaven's sake produce it. We have been seeking for it for years, and this gentleman now has the information. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will you pretend to deny to this House that after Grover Cleveland's administration had ceased to exist Mr. Harmon was continued as special counsel, and that when his inquiry led up to the doorstep of the railroad official who subsequently served in the Republican Cabinet he was called off from his work? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I neither deny nor attempt to do so. I say this, that if he ever did any work of any kind that was of any value to the country in this respect, it would be under a Republican administration, where he was compelled to proceed, and not while he was a Democratic Attorney-General. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has the same misconception of the propriety of this proceeding as all the other members of his party have. The situation here is very clear, and there can be no doubt in the mind of any honest man as to the impropriety of the present situation.

Mr. Ellis, who had been attorney-general of the State of Ohio, was selected for a special position in the Department of Justice, to carry on the prosecutions under the antitrust laws. After he has served one year, and presumably has acquired some information which might be of value in the prosecution of trusts, he is selected to conduct a political campaign in the State where he formerly was attorney-general.

The gentleman from Illinois says that if this man has special information, he should be retained in the service of the Government; so does everybody else; but he should not at the same time engage in an active political campaign. Ohio is not very far from the State where the cry originated that voters should be purchased "in blocks of five," where the common practice of the gentleman's party has been to "fry the fat" out of corporations; and no man is better equipped to do this particular work than a man who as a government official has been successful in obtaining information that can be used to coerce improper contributions to political campaign funds.

Now, let me recall to the gentleman from Illinois something that Governor Harmon did. He was selected, with Mr. Judson, to examine into the case against the officials of the Santa Fe Railroad. He reported to the Attorney-General that the facts ascertained indicated that Mr. Paul Morton and certain other gentlemen, officials of the Santa Fe road, had been guilty of violating an injunction which had been issued by a federal court against that road and its officials. They recommended that an application be made to the federal court requiring Mr. Paul Morton to show cause why a rule should not be issued requiring him to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt. Mr. Moody, who was then Attorney-General, referred the matter to the President of the United States. Mr. Morton at that time was a member of the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What office did he hold?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He was Secretary of the Navy. The President of the United States declined to permit an application to be made to the court to ascertain whether these men were guilty of contempt in violating the injunction, because, as he put it, he did not intend any man should be prosecuted simply because he was a friend of his. He interposed the protection of his great office to prevent a member of his Cabinet even appearing to show to the court whether under all the circumstances he had violated an injunction issued in an attempt to enforce the laws against illegal rebates.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will get through with his criticism of President Roosevelt now while he is away, because it will not be a safe business when he returns.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That does not have any fear for me. I did not wait until he went away before criticising him, which so many on that side did. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Most of my criticism was made when he was in the White House, unlike many men on that side of the House, who, the day he left the shores of New York on his trip, immediately rose upon their dignity and asserted that he had been guilty of all kinds of improper things while in the White House.

Mr. MANN. He is always able to take care of himself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am simply reciting the facts of history, so that the gentleman from Illinois will know what Mr. Harmon did, and what a Republican President did, when his attention was directed to a violation of the antitrust law; and I have no doubt, under similar circumstances, other Republican Presidents will interpose to protect other Republicans violating these antitrust laws. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I did not have the pleasure of hearing the beginning of this discussion. I was amazed, however, to hear one of those upon that side of the House assert that Governor Harmon did anything to enforce the antitrust act.

I wish to put into the RECORD as a part of my remarks what he himself said as to why he did not enforce the Sherman antitrust act.

Now, I scarcely know what this criticism of my friend Mr. Ellis is. I know he is an honest man; I know that he would not take from the Government a salary he is not entitled to. He has a perfect right to be retained as special counsel to try special cases and conduct a campaign as chairman of the Ohio Republican party at the same time.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Of course my colleague is familiar with the history of Wade Ellis's entry into politics? If he is not, I will enlighten him by saying that it is well known that in 1896——

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. I yielded for a question, not a speech.

Mr. ANSBERRY. You refuse, then, in your time to hear the history of Wade Ellis's political career?

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Does the gentleman wish to ask a question?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I desire to ask you if you are familiar with the political record of Wade Ellis?

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. I think I am.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Do you know that in 1896, until the finish of that campaign, he was a Democrat?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; and that is the only thing that can be said against him.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Do you know when he changed his politics? Do you know that immediately after he changed——

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. The political career of Wade Ellis is not in issue.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. It is very much to his credit that he has seen the error of his ways and become a Republican. That of itself vindicates his judgment.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Do you think it is to his credit that he changed his political coat upon receipt of the office of assistant corporation counsel of the city of Cincinnati?

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. There are abundant reasons why he should get out of that aggregation of the weak-minded and come to a party that conducts its legislation sanely. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I shall apologize for no man for leaving the Democratic party and coming into ours. He could have no better excuse for his actions than the history of the party.

I am sorry I do not understand what this discussion is about [laughter], but I could not refrain from rising in my place to combat the assumption that was made here that the administrations of Grover Cleveland or Governor Harmon were friends of the antitrust law.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will my colleague permit another question?

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. If it is pertinent.

Mr. ANSBERRY. It is pertinent to Wade Ellis. You know, of course, that he was attorney-general of the State of Ohio.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. ANSBERRY. You have heard of Mark Slater, have you not, the public printer who stole $40,000?

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. I am not very familiar with his stealings; no.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I will ask you if you are not familiar with the fact that the evidence on which he has since been indicted was presented to Wade Ellis when he was attorney-general, and that he refused to proceed under that evidence?

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. I know of no such thing. I do not doubt that rumors of that kind have been circulated in Ohio, but I do not believe them. That would have to be shown to me very conclusively and positively. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] That is campaign buncombe.

Governor Harmon belongs to that school of thought which has consistently opposed and discouraged all efforts to enforce the Sherman antitrust law. After a few unsuccessful efforts to enforce the law, in his annual report of 1895, speaking of this law, he gave it as his opinion:

> * * * Combinations and monopolies therefore, although they may unlawfully control production and prices of articles in general use, can not be reached under this law merely because they are combinations and monopolies, nor because they may engage in interstate commerce as one of the incidents of their business.

His comments upon the law are exceedingly brief and one scarcely knows what was intended to be conveyed by this language; but the report of the following year, 1896, is to the point and definite. It gives exact information as to the status of the Department of Justice under his control.

He serves upon the public notice of what may be expected from him and the Department of Justice in the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law in these words:

> The restricted scope of the provisions of this law, as they have been construed by the courts, especially in the case of the United States v. E. C. Knight Company (156 U. S., 1), makes amendment necessary if any effective action is expected from this department.

Could anything be more direct and positive than this declaration of the Attorney-General of the United States, that he would make no further effort to enforce this law? Did the Attorney-General mean that he would purposely make unsuccessful efforts to enforce this law? No. This language is open to but one construction.

It was a declaration positive in its intendment, that he would do nothing more to enforce this law. While Judge Harmon is a delightful personal companion and an estimable gentleman, his training has been such that he is unalterably opposed to the great distinctive principles which are now the cardinal doctrines of our party. I allude to the Roosevelt policies—the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust act and a thoroughgoing, scientific regulation of great corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

His environment and early training has prejudiced him against all this. As a corporation lawyer and railroad receiver, he has been splendidly trained and fitted to be the leader of that party which would consistently oppose this great national movement. Gentlemen on the floor of this House, when they put him in nomination for President, gleefully declaring that he has a prospect of winning, are reacting again the same old farce comedy which they always produce two or three years before the election on the floor of this House. Harmon, as a candidate for President, could only stand as the representative of whatever organized force can be mustered to oppose the movement already begun.

To oppose a movement which the American people have determined to go through with in a thoroughgoing way, you may call it what you will, it must go on. The forces behind it are as persistent in their forceful operation as the law of gravitation. Its ultimate purpose and object is just a "square deal." Harmon for President would be as overwhelmingly defeated as was Horace Greeley.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. My colleague from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY] occasioned some merriment in the House by his refusal to give direct answers to the questions I propounded to him a few moments ago relative to the political record of Mr. Wade H. Ellis, the ex-attorney-general of the State of Ohio. I presume that he was unable to give a satisfactory explanation of the conduct of Mr. Ellis, politically speaking, since the time not so very long ago, in 1896, when Mr. Ellis was making free-silver speeches in Hamilton County in support of Colonel Bryan's first candidacy for the Presidency, and immediately thereafter he went over to the Republican party without showing or giving any reason for his actions to his colleagues or to the public as to why he had changed his mind. This would have attracted but little attention if he had not thereafter been taken care of by being the recipient of a very lucrative office, the gift of one George B. Cox, known to some of my colleagues from Ohio. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Later on this same Mr. Ellis was made the candidate of his party, and was successful in being elected attorney-general of the State of Ohio, and it is said—and if any gentleman here knows to the contrary let him stand up and defend Mr. Ellis by denying it—that the testimony on which Mark Slater, the public printer of the State of Ohio, was indicted for stealing $40,000, was presented to Mr. Wade Ellis when he was attorney-general, and he was asked to proceed on it, and he waived it aside and said there was not sufficient evidence on which to proceed against Mr. Slater.

Since Governor Harmon has been the executive of our great State there has been considerable activity in probing the different departments of the State, and as a result of this activity it was discovered that the public printer's office was reeking with graft during the administration of the unfortunate Mr. Slater, and the evidence rejected by the then attorney-general was acted upon, with the result that a confederate of the public printer turned state's evidence, and within a short time it will be determined whether or not Mr. Ellis had a correct view of the evidence presented to him. Of course, I do not make the claim that there was any connection between Mr. Ellis's change of base politically and his failure to vigorously prosecute his colleague, Mr. Slater, but I do maintain that a man owes it to his neighbors and to the public to explain the why and wherefore of a right-about-face politically, particularly when this change is coincident with political favors granted by his old political opponents. Lincoln's story might be applicable here.

If I recall correctly, a member of Lincoln's party, I think he was then a Whig, shifted his party coat, became a Democrat, and was rewarded, or perhaps it was a mere coincidence, he was appointed register of deeds, and shortly thereafter he showed evidences of opulence, for that day, by erecting the first lightning rods ever seen in that community over his palatial home. This officeholder was defending the position of his party at a public gathering and he knew that young Lincoln was to reply to him; he saw fit to ridicule the youth and inexperience of his opponent, and when Lincoln came to answer, he said that he would have to plead guilty to both youth and inexperience, but that he hoped he would never change his politics for an office, and then, goaded by a bad conscience, erect lightning rods over his home to protect himself from the wrath of God.

I regret to say that at the harmony meeting recently held at Dayton, Ohio, to ratify the Washington selection of Chairman Ellis, at which my colleague [Mr. LONGWORTH] took a leading and active part, Mr. Harding, a prominent candidate for governor on the Republican ticket, was present and facetiously remarked, while discussing the public plundering of the treasury of the State of Ohio, that he had only received $5,000 of that $16,000, the $5,000 being the amount of his salary as lieutenant-governor, and that the balance could be accounted for only on the ground that Mark Slater must have taken it. A rather grim joke, for the next day public announcement was made that Mark Slater was a fugitive from justice, charged with stealing $40,000 from the public treasury.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman is alluding to a speech that Mr. Harding made when he said that graft did not exclusively belong to the Democratic party.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Now, that the gentleman has explained Mr. Harding's speech, will he kindly explain why Attorney-General Ellis did not proceed on the evidence that was presented to him?

My colleague [Mr. KENNEDY] says that he never heard of any activity on the part of Judson Harmon while he was Attorney-General of the United States, or at any other time, in the enforcement of the antitrust law. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the case of United States v. The Trans-Missouri Freight Association, reported in volume 166, United States Reports, pages 290 to 374, and he will find that under the guidance of Attorney-General Harmon this case was presented on appeal and on December 9, 1896, was argued, and thereafter the Supreme Court of the United States first announced the doctrine that railroads came under the antitrust law. Of course, it will not be denied that no such a condition existed at that time as prevails now. Many trusts, of course, existed, but now and for the past six or eight years they have had the country by the throat. The antitrust law was being tested in the courts, for the purpose of determining its applicability, and this recorded opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case I have referred to is a sufficient denial of my colleague's statement. And then again, I desire to call my colleague's attention to the fact that the circuit court of appeals had decided this case adversely to the Government a year before.

Attorney-General Harmon, as such, began the famous Addyston pipe suit, which Judge William H. Taft decided in favor of the Government. This is the leading case as to the application of the antitrust law to combinations other than railroads. Attention has been called on the floor to-day to the fact that it was Judson Harmon and his associate, Frederick N. Judson, a St. Louis lawyer, in investigating the Santa Fe rebate cases, reported to President Roosevelt that guilt was always personal and that the way to stop rebating was through the criminal prosecution of the men who controlled the corporations who had violated the law. It is a matter of common knowledge that President Roosevelt refused to accept this advice, and the New York World well said, in commenting on this refusal, that had the President followed instead of rejecting this counsel, and vigorously and consistently acted on this report, he would have much less to explain, defend, and apologize for than he has to-day. There would be more "malefactors of great wealth" in the penitentiary and fewer at large to "conspire" against his administration. For the further information of my colleague [Mr. KENNEDY], I submit for his perusal Senate Document No. 140. So it can be justly claimed that Judson Harmon, as Attorney-General of the United States and when acting as special counsel for the Government with Mr. Judson, did his full duty and "hewed to the line," and let the chips fall where they would.

Fortunately, since that time the good people of the State of Ohio called him to the high office of chief executive, and his administration of that great office is of such a character that the panic-stricken machine which misdirects the Republican party in our great State is running hither and thither, seeking a Moses to protect them from the wrath of the offended rank and file of their party. In answer to their Macedonian cry, which has been heard even in the Nation's capital, the doughty trust buster of the administration was reluctantly drafted into service, and the newspapers informed us that, while the President of the United States appreciated his worth as a trust buster, still, in view of the fact that he was wanted in Ohio for political purposes, he would release him, and March 1 was the day set for the parting of the ways, the day upon which Mr.

Ellis was to divorce himself from his $7,000 salary. And now we are informed that March 1 was the date of resignation, and still Mr. Ellis is on the federal pay roll. The explanation was offered upon the floor of this House that because of the information, valuable to the Government, which Mr. Ellis accumulated during the time he has been on the federal pay roll justified his retention and salary. It would seem that the views expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in this House about a month ago, that it was nothing less than scandalous to have Mr. Ellis occupying the dual rôle of inquisitor of offending trusts and manager in chief of the Republican party in the State of Ohio, is the view that the newspapers of the country and unprejudiced men of every party have taken of this strange transaction.

It is true that the President of the United States, at whose door responsibility for this selection was first laid, has repudiated it, and now it seems that Mr. Ellis, torn with conflicting emotions, hesitates between the impending fate of a political orphan and martyr and the goodly berth from which publicity may soon divorce him. If Mr. Ellis was the valuable and efficient pursuer of trusts that we are told he was, does it not seem passing strange that the administration would so lightly dispense with his services? Or is the solidarity and success of the Republican machine in Ohio more desirable than the punishment of the wicked trusts? This is the question agitating the minds of the voters of Ohio. Apparently, the successful administration of Governor Harmon, proof of which is in the very air of Ohio, is seriously affecting the political future of many sojourners in the Nation's capital, and they fain would distract attention of the people of Ohio from his great record by lining up the Republican host, and by a call to arms in which the wary voter can easily detect false notes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this debate is not in order, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right; the gentleman will regret it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to say to the chairman of the committee that this discussion has been running along in a promiscuous way, and I would like to have him give the leader of the minority five minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have got the floor without the courtesy of anybody. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, having started this controversy by asking a very innocent question about Wade H. Ellis, I want to get it back to the substance of the matter. My contention is that a man ought not to hold a high governmental office and at the same time be charged with political duties outside of that office.

Mr. TAWNEY. I agree to that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When Mr. Cortelyou resigned the position of Secretary of Commerce and Labor to accept the chairmanship of the Republican national committee that was criticised, and justly so; but when he came back into the Cabinet immediately after election, as Postmaster-General, that was still more severely criticised, and justly criticised.

Now, if it is true that the Hon. Frank H. Hitchcock is still discharging the office of chairman of the Republican national committee and also that of Postmaster-General, I say that he ought to give up one or the other. I do not care a straw which one it is. I do not object to his being Postmaster-General. I do not object to his being chairman of the Republican national committee, but I do object to the gentleman using his office of Postmaster-General in aiding the Republican party in his capacity as chairman of the national committee.

I have nothing against Wade H. Ellis.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Hitchcock gave it up a long time ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then who is chairman, if he is not? That is one of the mysteries surrounding the political situation. As I say, I have nothing against Wade H. Ellis. He is a good lawyer, and, as far as I know, he may be a fine man. A newspaper reporter gave it out that the Republican party in Ohio is in such a thoroughly demoralized condition that President Taft undertook to discover a Moses to lead them out of the wilderness, and that he selected Wade H. Ellis; and they further charged that they forced the chairman of the Republican state committee to resign his place and let Ellis have it.

In the same connection, it is given out that while Ellis gave up the Assistant Attorney-Generalship at a salary of $7,000 a year, he was to have an appointment or employment which carried with it more pay than that of Attorney-General, and which would still give him time to attend to the political business of the President in the State of Ohio.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And they are undertaking to do the same thing for New York.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] says they are undertaking to do the same thing for the State of New York. The great Republican party that swept this country by a million and a quarter votes in 1908 has fallen to such low estate in the President's own State of Ohio that they are hunting around, going over the private and political record of every Republican in the State, to see if they can dig up one who has a ghost of a show of being elected governor of the State of Ohio.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania can not deflect this discussion by asking about Governor Haskell. In reply, I say, What about DU PONT, who was driven out of the national Republican committee at the same time?

Mr. COX of Indiana. And what about Foraker?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. We stand for the position that when a man accepts a governmental office he shall release his other offices. The Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President the other day reported back to the House a bill that we have been trying to get reported here for five years, which provides that the treasurers of the national committees shall publish an account of the collections and disbursements before the election instead of after election. If we get that up on calendar Wednesday, there will be gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who will take to cover as sure as you are living. That is the proposition we stand for. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against any further debate on this paragraph that is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to state that under the uniform practice of the House, five-minute debate is continued indefinitely by informal amendments. If the Chair should undertake to interrupt it by putting the question upon the informal amendments, it would simply amount to a vote, first, on the motion to strike out the last word, then on the motion to strike out the last two words, and so on indefinitely. It is not within the power of the Chair under the practice of the House to stop a debate of this character. It is within the power of the gentlemen in charge of the bill, if they have behind them the majority of the committee, and it is also within the power of gentlemen on the floor, and not within the power of the Chair, to enforce the rule that in the five-minute debate the debate shall be confined to the subject of the paragraph.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I oppose the last amendment, and I want to be heard just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I shall not occupy five minutes, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Illinois, my friend, Mr. MANN, challenged this side of the House to give a case where the Democratic party or the Attorney-General——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I gave notice that this debate must proceed in order, and I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will confine himself to the subject-matter of the paragraph.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I was simply replying to the subject-matter that has been discussed here.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that is what we have been wasting an hour and a half on.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I ask to be permitted to proceed, Mr. Chairman, and I shall not occupy five minutes. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed not in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Of course the gentleman would object to hearing the truth, as he always does.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses of commercial agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $40,000; and the results of such investigations shall be reported to Congress: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to permit officers and employees of the several bureaus and divisions of the Department of Commerce and Labor to assign their salaries while absent from Washington, D. C., and employed in the field.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Comparing the present bill with the last bill I see the words "commercial agents" are inserted instead of "special agents." Why that change?

Mr. GILLETT. Because we were told by the department that the words "special agents" gave them abroad a reputation of being something in the nature of detectives, and that the words "commercial agents" would give them a better status abroad and they could better conduct their investigations. It is a matter of little importance.

Mr. COX of Indiana. So far as this country is concerned the two expressions are identical.

Mr. GILLETT. Commercial agent is, of course, more accurate, because they are commercial agents.

Mr. COX of Indiana. So far as the service has been performed heretofore by these special agents, the same service will now be performed by the commercial agents.

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly. There is no change of purpose at all. It is simply a change of verbiage.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How many of these special agents are there?

Mr. GILLETT. Six, I think.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Are they at work all the time?

Mr. GILLETT. All the time.

Mr. COX of Indiana. On a per diem basis?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "Congress," in line 18, page 154, the following: "Including prices at which American-made goods are sold abroad."

Mr. GILLETT. On that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because it seems to me important to settle in some official way the question whether American manufacturers protected by the tariff are selling their goods in foreign markets at prices lower than they sell them to their American customers in the home market. Mr. Chairman, this is a question which has been frequently discussed and the facts to some extent admitted, but it has never been definitely or officially settled whether the American manufacturers are or are not selling their goods to the people of Europe and to the people in other foreign lands at prices lower than they sell them to Americans. It seems to me that if we are to employ these commercial agents, as provided for in this section, in other countries for the purpose of expanding our trade in the interests of the manufacturers, we should at least direct those agents, in making up their reports to Congress, to lay before the American people for comparison with American prices the statistics showing the prices at which these goods are sold abroad.

Personally, I have no doubt in the world that a large number of American manufacturers are constantly engaged at the present time, and have been for a good many years, in selling the identical products in foreign lands at prices considerably below the prices which they demand of their American consumers. And, Mr. Chairman, if this fact can be established; if it can be shown that our manufacturers in iron, steel, woolen, and other lines of manufacture are constantly engaged in selling their manufactured products in other lands at prices lower than they sell them here, that information will at least be valuable to Congress when it comes to make up a new tariff bill. We know how those same manufacturers have come before our Committee on Ways and Means and declared that they are not able to sell their goods in America in open competition with the manufactured goods of Europe. We know how they have asked this Congress to impose the present tariff, which has enabled them to materially raise the prices in this country and which has greatly increased the cost of living in America. Now, if Congress can secure from these commercial agents of the Government in other countries reliable information that they do sell in competition abroad, it will be a conclusive answer to those gentlemen whenever they knock at the doors of Congress and protest against lowering the tariff for the relief of the American consumer.

For certainly, Mr. Chairman, if the manufacturers of the United States, given a monopoly of the market in America at high prices, are able to cross the water, pay the ocean freight, and sell their goods in competition with the old country on their own ground, they can certainly sell those goods in the American market in competition with these same European manufacturers, and ought to be compelled to do so. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, at this time, when this whole country is agitated with the question of the greatly increased cost of living, due in a large part to the increased rates under the recently adopted tariff act, it seems to me it would be eminently proper for Congress to do its part toward ascertaining officially and reliably whether the charge is true that these same manufacturers are selling their goods in foreign lands at lower prices than they are selling them in America. Certainly there can be no reason why Congress should not require these foreign agents, who receive $10 a day for their work, to furnish this information so easily obtainable.

Mr. WEISSE. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is it not a fact that a manufacturer in this country can sell cheaper abroad than he can at home by the rebate system and get the difference out of the United States Treasury?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I suppose in those cases in which he gets a rebate on certain raw materials which are imported and used in manufacture that is true, but I know, as a matter of fact, that goods made in the usual way without any rebates are shipped out of this country and sold in foreign lands at prices considerably below the rates which are charged to the American consumer. Even some Americans have been able to take advantage of this practice. I know of a merchant in Omaha, Mr. Chairman, who has succeeded in buying goods for export and who has taken them by water down the coast and brought them into the country at a Texas port at prices lower than he can ordinarily buy in the American market, and I believe that this is not an isolated case. I believe there are a number of such cases.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. There are the watch cases.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do you mean a merchant of Omaha buys goods manufactured in this country and in the first instance exported abroad and reimported into this country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean to say he buys them of a purchaser in New York who is ostensibly buying for the European market. These goods are shipped on a boat down to a Texas port and from there brought into Nebraska from that Texas port.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I should have no objection at all to the information that the gentleman suggests being brought out—I think it would stop a great deal of oratory which is wasted on this subject—but for the fact that the other branch of the Government which has recently been given the authority to investigate this subject will bring it out, and the only objection I have to this amendment is that I fear that if it is put in here it will interfere with the work of these special agents along the line for which they were specially created. If they have got to spend their time in simply getting the prices of goods, I fear they can not give us the facts which they are now collecting along the line of cotton-seed oil and textile fabrics and the leather goods to which they are now devoting their attention——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is the gentleman willing to accept my amendment, then?

Mr. GILLETT. As I understand the way the gentleman's amendment reads, it would practically take all their time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, no. That would be only incidental to the other work.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman will put it in such a way, I will——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that that is not the proper place in which to put it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It says:

The results of such investigation shall be reported to Congress, including the prices at which American-made goods are sold abroad.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean these American commissioners who are engaged in spreading the American trade shall in their annual reports to Congress tell us the prices at which American goods are sold abroad.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman mean that they shall investigate the prices abroad and report to Congress?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are necessarily in touch with that subject.

Mr. MANN. Here is a provision to investigate trade conditions abroad. If the gentleman wants to put that in, that is the place in which to put it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The purpose stated is promoting the foreign commerce of the United States. That means increasing the sale of American-made manufactures, and then they shall annually report to Congress about this foreign commerce of the United States, and including the price at which the American goods are sold abroad.

Mr. MANN. These agents do not report to Congress. They report to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and he transmits his report to Congress; and if the gentleman's amendment prevails, it would provide that the result of such investigations would be reported to Congress by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who shall also report to Congress a lot of other things with which these agents have nothing to do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand their instructions come from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and if he is asked to make the report to Congress, he will direct them to make their reports to him.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not catch the point. It is our opinion that under the gentleman's amendment it would not be the duty of these agents to report the prices abroad, but it is the duty of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to report the prices abroad. If the gentleman wants these agents to obtain information, the proper place to put it in would be where it provides for the investigation of trade conditions abroad.

Mr. GILLETT. That is what I suggested to the gentleman. That is not the work they are selected for.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What are they selected for?

Mr. GILLETT. There is one on cotton-seed oil, one on cotton fabrics, one on leather goods, and one, I think, generally, and they are trying to spread American trade on these specific goods abroad. The gentleman is trying by his amendment—not perhaps intentionally—to divert these men from the functions which they are created to perform. But the work which the tariff commission has to do, and probably will do, will prevent these men doing what they have been specially created for doing by Congress. And if the gentleman should put in the amendment in the way the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests, then he is commanding them to spend their time in doing things different from what they are doing now. That is my objection to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is only indicating one of the many duties which they shall perform.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman can put it in some such way as that——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the gentleman is willing to take his chances on the amendment, I am willing to take it.

Mr. GILLETT. As the gentleman has it now, it compels them to do something very foreign to what they are created for.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the paragraph with the amendment as changed according to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation, at not more than $10 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses, of commercial agents to investigate trade conditions abroad, including the price at which American-made goods are sold abroad, with the object of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States, $40,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve the point of order on the amendment as now offered. I want to say this in opposition to the proposition: When the Tariff Commission was authorized, under the act approved last August, it was understood that that commission, together with the experts employed in the State Department, under the $100,000 appropriation then made, would virtually absorb this particular bureau of the Department of Commerce and Labor. At that time, in order to avoid duplication of service, the transfer of these men to the Department of State was proposed. As a matter of fact, two of them were transferred to the Department of State.

Mr. COX of Indiana. When was that?

Mr. TAWNEY. Last August, after the passage of the tariff act. Now, this is a proposition to enlarge the duties of these men. Let me say here that when these two men were transferred to the State Department their places were not filled until the beginning of this year.

The attention of the State Department and the Department of Commerce and Labor was brought to the fact that the services of these two men were overlapping and necessarily duplicating the services of men in the State Department, and that the work of one bureau ought to be transferred to the other. It was taken up subsequently by the heads of those two departments, and the work was so adjusted as not to conflict, leaving these men to be employed exclusively upon the matter of extending our trade, or the trade in American products in foreign countries, and leaving the subject of prices and the tariff of foreign countries to the Tariff Commission and the State Department. These six men could not cover the whole field, and they are, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has said, appointed with special reference to their fitness and their experience in the particular lines of our trade they are to investigate, encourage, and increase, if possible, in foreign markets. We have one on machine tools; we have one on the sale of cotton-seed oil and oil products; we have one on textile fabrics; we have one on flour, or the export of American flour.

Now, if these men are to be required, in addition to that, to investigate the question of prices they will necessarily have their functions increased and will be overlapping the work of other bureaus, or the representatives of other bureaus, who are now charged with the duty and responsibility of collecting such information. If the Chair holds the amendment is in order, I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Maybe I am unable to understand the phraseology, but to me it is rather vague. What is meant by the phrase "investigate trade conditions?" What do they do when investigating trade conditions?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Indiana knows what that language means.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Ordinarily I do, but when applied to a case like this I do not know that I do.

Mr. TAWNEY. It means in this bill what it ordinarily means; that these men, who are familiar with the cotton-seed oil industry of the United States, with the various industries and the business here, go abroad and investigate foreign trade conditions.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do they try to find a foreign market for cotton-seed oil?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the main object of their employment.

Mr. COX of Indiana. By interviewing the merchants?

Mr. TAWNEY. They interview the merchants and make inquiry into the trade conditions there with a view to introducing cotton-seed oil or its products, thereby increasing our exports.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I believe this provision of the appropriation bill was first inserted on account of a suggestion which I made growing out of what little service I rendered in connection with the creation of the Department of Commerce and Labor. Originally, I think, there were five of these gentlemen, and afterwards it was increased to six, after making one special for cotton and cotton goods.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that all but one was special. The service has been specialized by providing specialties for all except one.

Mr. MANN. They have always been more or less specialists. One, the first gentleman appointed under this provision, was Mr. Pepper, who has been transferred to the Department of State in connection with the tariff investigation. But, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this investigation is to employ the men to study conditions abroad in particular lines, such as cotton, boots and shoes, agricultural machinery, and so forth, so that we may find where there is a market for our goods, and help to create a market. Now, necessarily, one of the first things that such an agent must learn is the prices at which American products of that class are or can be sold in the market in which he investigates. How it could be contended otherwise I can not understand.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What connection or relation, if any, is there between these agents and our foreign consular agents?

Mr. MANN. There is no official relationship.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I recollect that a couple of years ago every mail brought some reports about our trade relations abroad. I do not receive them any more.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation is short and they are not publishing the consular reports daily, but I believe will begin again soon. That is the reason the gentleman is not receiving them.

There is no official relationship between these commercial agents of the Department of Commerce and Labor and the consular agents, but, of course, they make use of every source of information. They investigate trade conditions. I do not see how there can be any objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska requiring these agents, investigating, say, cotton goods abroad, to investigate the prices at which those cotton goods are sold abroad.

Mr. GILLETT. They doubtless do now.

Mr. MANN. That is the very purpose for which they go abroad.

Mr. GILLETT. They doubtless do now. If they do not, they certainly do not understand their duties, and I think they are all bright men. How far that matter is reported to Congress I do not know. I read their reports as they are published with great interest, though not with great care; but certainly it is not intended by the amendment to have the cotton-goods men stop their work and investigate prices of all classes of articles throughout the world, but to investigate prices of goods concerning which they are the special agents.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 50, noes 54.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Tellers!

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. GILLETT and Mr. HITCHCOCK.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 62.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Census Office: For salaries and necessary expenses for preparing for, taking, compiling, and publishing the Thirteenth Census of the United States, rent of office quarters, for carrying on during the decennial census period all other census work authorized and directed by law, including construction and repair of card-punching, card-sorting, and card-tabulating machinery, and technical and mechanical services in connection therewith, purchase, rental, construction, repair, and exchange of mechanical appliances, to continue available until June 30, 1912, $2,000,000.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, line 21, after the word "salaries," insert a comma and the following: "including the chief clerk, at $3,000 per annum."

Mr. COX of Indiana. I reserve a point of order on that, in order to allow the gentleman to explain the necessity for it.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, prior to the passage of the last census act the salary of the chief clerk of the Bureau of the Census was $3,000 per annum. In passing the last act the House unanimously voted that the salary of the chief clerk should be $3,000. The bill went over to the Senate and it was reduced to $2,500, and agreed to in conference at that figure.

The Census Committee has had pending before it a bill fixing the salary of the chief clerk of the Bureau of the Census at $3,000 per annum, and this morning unanimously agreed to report it favorably and restore the salary to $3,000.

In addition to the work that is now being carried on and heretofore done by the former chief clerk, he is the purchasing agent for the bureau. All letters in relation to census matters pass through his hands. All requisitions for supplies from the various divisions in the bureau must be approved by him as the purchasing agent, and the Committee on the Census thought that salary ought to be what is was formerly, and having these additional duties devolving upon him that the salary should be $3,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I will withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We should like to know where that amendment comes in.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What do you want to do that for?

Mr. MURPHY. This amendment that I offer is to restore the salary to what it was prior to the approval of the last census act and at the sum which the House of Representatives, when it passed the census law, unanimously said it ought to be. The additional duties placed upon him while the census is being taken are such that he ought to have the same salary that the other chief clerks in the bureaus now receive, $3,000, with the exception of one.

Mr. MANN. This only applies to the next fiscal year; it does not permanently increase his salary.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The salary of the chief clerk during the last decennial census was $3,000. The salary of the chief clerk of the permanent office is $2,500. It is the intention of the Committee on Census to fix the salary of the chief clerk at $3,000 during the decennial census period because of the extra responsibility and work that is placed upon him. This amendment will cover, as the gentleman said, only the next fiscal year, and will probably be taken care of later on for the next year.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not want any deception here; this will be for two years. It is to continue available until June, 1912.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, it ought to be as long as that.

Mr. KEIFER. What does the chief clerk draw now?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Two thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. KEIFER. Was it not $3,000?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was $3,000 during the last decennial census.

Mr. KEIFER. When was it cut down?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. By the census act which was passed last summer. The House put it at $3,000 and the Senate cut all of the salaries down, and this was placed at $2,500.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection to it. If we put the amendment in, it would not take effect until the 1st of July.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know whether it will take effect now or not.

Mr. KEIFER. Ought it not to take effect before we take the census, while he is doing the biggest part of the work?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 159, insert at the end of line 6 the following:

"Provided, That no part of this money shall be paid to any census enumerator who is discharging any political function or duties while engaged in the work of enumerator."

Mr. GILLETT. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the point of order?

Mr. GILLETT. That it is new legislation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This is a restriction on the use of this money.

Mr. KEIFER. It does not prevent its being expended, and therefore it is not a restriction of the use. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that there is no occasion for such an amendment, as the order of the President to the Census Director and superintendents all over the country is to prevent anything of the kind happening.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, has the point of order been made?

Mr. GILLETT. I made the point of order that it is not a limitation, although in the form of a limitation. It is really legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it is a limitation. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of limiting the work of the census enumerators. I do not know that the order alluded to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] will be carried out. I know what has been said and what has been done during the taking of this census. This amendment can do no harm. It simply prohibits the census enumerator from doing any political work while taking the census. It can do no harm, and it may do some good.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If the amendment be agreed to, how will it be enforced? What process will be used to enforce it?

Mr. BOOHER. I presume if the amendment was adopted, the census enumerators would obey the law.

Mr. MANN. This is not directed to the census enumerators; it is a limitation which the auditor and comptroller takes notice of.

Mr. BOOHER. The amendment applies to the census enumerators.

Mr. MANN. A limitation of this kind is addressed to the comptroller and auditor of the Government. How will they know that the census enumerators out in the different States have not done such and such a thing?

Mr. BOOHER. We presume if this amendment is attached to the law that the census enumerators will obey the law, and that they will not have to be reported.

Mr. MANN. Would that let the auditor out in reference to that matter? Here is a limitation which the auditor must pass upon. How is he to know these facts?

Mr. BOOHER. If the auditor has no information that they have disobeyed the law, then of course he will know that they have obeyed the law. He will presume that they will obey the law to start with, and if he has no information that they have not disobeyed it, he will conclude that they have obeyed it, and pay them for their work.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that if a limitation comes into the bill addressed to the auditor the auditor is to do nothing about it? Is it not the duty of the auditor to ascertain positively whether this provision is obeyed, and will not the result of this limitation be that the auditor is required to investigate in reference to every census enumerator in the United States, as to whether he has spoken about politics to somebody?

Mr. BOOHER. I do not think that will be the result at all. I do not think that will follow at all.

Mr. MANN. It will be the result if this is obeyed.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. What harm will the amendment do?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me answer that question. Suppose we have Democratic enumerators. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Oh, I am just supposing a case. They are all in the hands of a Republican administration, and if the administration wants to get rid of the Democrats all it has to do is to make the charge that they have talked politics to somebody.

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, they have got rid of them already in my country. We have not got any, and that has been done without the amendment or anything else. They just simply did it. Now, I want this amendment for the purpose of preventing anything but the taking of the census. I do not believe the auditor would have any trouble in paying off the men who do their duty under the law.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. You will have to go before a justice court or some other authority and establish that they have violated the law, and that record will have to be sent up here to Washington.

Mr. BOOHER. All Democratic enumerators will obey the law, as the gentleman will find, if they have any in his country.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not know. They will be very strongly tempted to do some work.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, there has been some criticism respecting the attitude of the census enumerators toward the politics of the country. I want to say that there has never been a census in the history of this country that has been so absolutely safeguarded against all possible political activity as the present one. There is no politics in the taking of this census.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In a moment. I think I can appeal with entire confidence to men who have any recollection of previous censuses and they will agree with me that the manner of appointment of special agents and enumerators, in justification of the statement I have made, is being made absolutely free from politics. I now yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the gentleman undertake to make the statement that none of these supervisors devote their time to politics?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not while they are engaged in their office. I do not know what they may do outside.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to make this statement——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What I have undertaken to say is this: This amendment is directed to the enumerators. The enumerators are appointed in pursuance of competitive examinations. The special agents are appointed under competitive examinations. The law does not require it. If the Census Office had any desire or inclination to prostitute that bureau to political ends, why would the Director of the Census voluntarily, without direction of law, require all the men who are to make the investigations to be appointed after a competitive examination? It is done for the purpose of securing the best ability that is possible in those small posts and to absolutely divorce the taking of the census from party politics.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman has announced that there is no politics in this. I am glad to hear him make the announcement. If there be no politics in the taking of the census, how does the gentleman account for the fact that there is not a Democratic supervisor of the census north of Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That does not signify that there is politics in the census, but I think I can prove by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that there is one enumerator, who has charge of the second largest city in the United States, who is not on the Republican poll book in the great city of Chicago. I have in my pocket now a telegram——

Mr. MANN. I have not recommended an enumerator in my district, and do not intend to do so, because the recommendation will be thrown in the wastebasket.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And it would be in mine. I have a telegram, Mr. Chairman, that I will read in relation to the appointment of a special agent in the city of Laporte. It reads as follows:

> How did Harry Roloff happen to be appointed special census agent for manufactures in Laporte and St. Joseph counties? Is it competitive under civil service? Roloff is editor of Democratic paper here. Please wire reply our expense.
> LAPORTE HERALD.

The Laporte Herald is a Republican paper in that town. The editor of a Democratic paper in that town secured that important position. Laporte County contains perhaps as important manufactures as any county in the State of Indiana.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is he enumerator or supervisor?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He is special agent for the investigation of manufactures.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Who is going to do this examining?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The examinations are being conducted by civil-service agents in the various districts. The gentleman doubtless knows that the Civil Service Commission are selecting, not for this purpose, but years back, these examiners from chief clerks in post-offices, men who are well qualified for that service in every instance, and questions are sent down to the civil-service examiners throughout various parts of the country conducting these examinations, and they send their reports either to the supervisor of the census or to the appointing officer in the city of Washington, who makes the grades.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is not this true, also, that the supervisor of the census in that instance determines who shall or who shall not take these examinations?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no; every man who makes application and every woman who makes an application has a right to take the examination, and the appointments are made according to the rating of the application, without regard to race, color, religion, or politics. That is the way it is done up in our country.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And in ours, too.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And I think everywhere in this country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you know who makes the examination of the rural carriers?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; but of course they are not engaged in census work.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that, but I will tell you the manner in which it is done. You can take a graduate of Harvard or Princeton, and if he is a Democrat, let him apply for one of these rural routes, and some Republican who can not sign his name without lolling his tongue out will be graded ahead of your Harvard or Princeton graduate, and that is the way they do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is news to me; I never heard of it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This amendment, as I understand, applies to enumerators. Now, the enumerators commence work on the 15th of April, and they finish on the 1st of May. This law takes effect on the 30th day of June, so before the law can be published the work will be finished. Now, what is the sense of the amendment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think the amendment was offered not with the faith that it will become part of the law, but I thought it would be proper for me to submit an observation or two in defense of these continued insinuations and innuendoes in relation to the unfairness of the administration of the Census Office.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the gentleman from Indiana will say this is a Republican census and that it is to be taken as one politically, I will vote against this amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have too much regard for the truth to make that statement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How does it happen that there is not a single Democratic supervisor appointed in a doubtful or close State like Missouri?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I do not know how that comes, but that does not signify the census is to be political or partisan or that politics is to enter in any manner in the taking of the census or in its compilation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for just one more question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. The speech I wanted to make has been principally made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. This amendment, if adopted, would be a mere abstraction. It would not apply to an enumerator at all, for they will have performed their functions—using a word in the proposed amendment. They will have finished their work and before this appropriation will take effect. So this is a mere matter of fancy, even if we were to amend it. But there is no necessity whatever for the amendment, for the Executive has taken charge of this matter and will see to it, as far as possible, that there is no politics mixed up with the taking of the census.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman from Ohio answer one question? Now, in all candor, will the gentleman please explain, so that the people will understand it, why no Republican is appointed supervisor in Mississippi and no Democrat in Tennessee?

Mr. KEIFER. I can not tell why that happened down in Mississippi, for I am not able to tell whether they have any politics down there at all or not.

Mr. SIMS. What about Tennessee? We have politics there all the time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I was amazed by the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] just now that there was no politics in these appointments. I want to advise him that in my State the supervisors were divided between the two parties, but the statement was very frankly made that in any district in which it was conceived in the minds of the Republican administration that they had a remote fighting chance, they would not appoint a Democratic supervisor. Why? Because they felt it was a political advantage to have it that way. They were frank in that. I do not blame them. If I was President, there would not be a Republican appointed anywhere in the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I undertook to say, and I thought I did, that there was no politics in the census; that there was no politics in the appointment of the men who took the census—the special agents or the enumerators——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the gentleman believe there is no politics from Durand down?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It may be that politics have entered to some extent in the selection of the supervisors, and let me submit this observation now: Because there may be a Democratic supervisor in one district, does it mean that there is to be a Democratic census? And if there is a Republican supervisor in another, does it mean that there is to be a Republican census? I made the assertion that there was no politics in the census.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to answer his question? He stated that there were no politics in the appointments.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I had reference to enumerators and special agents.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman a question in return. How many Democrats have been appointed supervisors or enumerators in the Northern States?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Enumerators?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Supervisors.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In relation to the Northern States, I do not know of any outside of the State of Indiana, and I think every supervisor in Indiana is a Republican.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How many in Ohio?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 72.

Mr. BOOHER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization: Commissioner-General of Immigration, $5,000; Assistant Commissioner-General, who shall also act as chief clerk and actuary, $3,500; private secretary, $1,800; chief statistician, $2,000; 3 clerks of class 4; 4 clerks of class 3; 6 clerks of class 2; 6 clerks of class 1; 8 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 clerks, at $900 each; 2 messengers; assistant messenger; in all, $55,500.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 19, page 160, the word "four," where it last occurs, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 160, line 19, strike out "four" where it occurs the second time and insert "five" in lieu thereof.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, that would make an increase of one clerk of that class; and if the amendment carries, I propose to follow it up by an amendment increasing the clerks of class 2 from 6 to 7 and the clerks of class 1 from 6 to 8, so as to make the authorization what is requested by the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization. Frankly, I do not think that the Committee on Appropriations is very much to blame, on the statements the bureau made, for not giving them all the clerks that they require. A statement of the real need for clerks has not been made, so far as I have been able to read the hearings. We have been putting a great deal of work on these clerks in that bureau in the last three or four years.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York—excuse me, the "governor of New York"—yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The "gentleman from New York" will yield. In 1906 we passed the naturalization law, and by that act we put on the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization the extra work of taking statistics to be used later in relation to naturalization as to every alien that comes into the United States, tremendously increasing the clerical work of that bureau. Then, in 1907, when we revised——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. We also increased their clerical force to the extent of $37,000, as I now recall, when the Division of Naturalization was added to the bureau.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is another force in the Division of Naturalization.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is another force, but the gentleman was using the fact in speaking of having placed on the bureau this additional service. I want it understood at the same time that we increased the appropriation for that service $37,000.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman is in error in relation to that, because the very next item in this bill shows a provision in relation to the Division of Naturalization.

Mr. TAWNEY. Thirty-six thousand nine hundred dollars is the amount.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I do not dispute that. But it has nothing whatever to do with the work placed upon the bureau. By the first section of the public act 338 of 1906, under that act we compel the bureau to take statistics as to the name, age, occupation of the person described, the place of birth, last residence, intended place of residence in the United States, the date of arrival in port, the name of the vessel, vastly extending the amount of clerical work. Then, in 1907, we provided stricter regulations as to immigrants. We extended from one to three years the time in which deportations can take place. The result was that the deportations through that law increased from 900 to 2,000 in the next fiscal year. That is done from this office. Every deportation is made upon a warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Now, the House at this session has passed in two forms an act in relation to the white-slave traffic, which will impose more burdens upon the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization. There have been transferred to that bureau nine clerks, I think it was, from other departments, who are now being called for, and they are being sent to their departments. They needed this entire ten. I do not think their need was adequately presented, as appears from the committee hearings. I feel the committee ought to give this bureau the number of clerks that it asked for. As we have been imposing labor on them, and labor of a useful kind, then we ought to give them the clerks to do the work. We have in the last two Congresses and in this Congress increased their clerical work tremendously. Therefore, I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment which I propose will prevail.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, the committee recognize what the gentleman has stated, that this bureau has had its work very much increased; and we accordingly gave what we thought was a very liberal allowance in the way of clerk hire. They had 34 clerks, which we increased to 40. They asked for 10, and we gave them 6, which is certainly a very much larger proportion of increase than we are accustomed to give.

It is altogether the largest proportional increase contained in the whole bill for any department, and it is an increase of 20 per cent. We thought that under that they certainly could get on pretty comfortably, and we felt that it was not necessary to give them the full 10 clerks. And while we may be mistaken and the gentleman may be right, still we exercised our judgment, and I still am of the opinion that with this enlargement of 20 per cent they will be able to do the work that has been imposed upon them, and I hope the gentleman's amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman were the specific additions that have been made to their work in the last three Congresses brought to the attention of his committee? They do not appear in the printed hearings.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think they were as fully as the gentleman has, but we were told and we knew that their work had been very much increased, and it was for that purpose that we so largely increased their force.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Last year they had to draw nine clerks from other departments in order to keep abreast with their work.

Mr. GILLETT. Not for the whole year, but temporarily.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I understand that, but they are now so far behind that we in the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization find it difficult to get answers to our communications in time to legislate effectively.

Mr. GILLETT. We were told that they were only three months behind in part of their work, and in part of it not at all behind; that the force was sufficient. We may be mistaken and the gentleman may be right, but I still have confidence that we are giving them enough increase.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I think the committee are clearly mistaken. In view of the admitted fact that the full facts were not presented to the committee, is not the gentleman of the opinion that since they had to have nine clerks assigned them last year, they ought to have this increase?

Mr. GILLETT. They did not have nine clerks all the year, but only temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Standards: Director, $5,000; chief physicist, $4,800; chief chemist, $4,800; associate chemist, $2,500; associate chemist, $2,200; 2 physicists, at $3,600 each; associate physicist, $2,700; 2 associate physicists, at $2,500 each; 2 associate physicists, at $2,200 each; 4 associate physicists, at $2,000 each; 6 assistant physicists, at $1,800 each; 10 assistant physicists, at $1,600 each; assistant chemist, $1,800; 3 assistant chemists, at $1,600 each; 2 assistant chemists, at $1,400 each; 12 assistant physicists, at $1,400 each; 13 laboratory assistants, at $1,200 each; 10 laboratory assistants, at $1,000 each; 9 laboratory assistants, at $900 each; 3 laboratory helpers, at $720 each; 6 aids, at $720 each; 3 aids, at $600 each; 3 laboratory apprentices, at $540 each; 4 laboratory apprentices, at $480 each; storekeeper, $1,000; librarian, $1,400; secretary, $2,200; clerk of class 4; clerk of class 3; clerk of class 2; 2 clerks of class 1; three clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 clerks, at $900 each; 2 clerks, at $720 each; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys, at $360 each; elevator boy, $360; chief mechanician, $1,800; mechanician, $1,500; mechanician, $1,400; 2 mechanicians, at $1,200 each; 2 mechanicians, at $1,000 each; mechanician, $900; 3 watchmen; skilled woodworker, $1,000; skilled woodworker, $840; 3 skilled laborers, at $720 each; draftsman, $1,200; packer and shipper, $840; messenger; engineer, $1,800; 2 assistant engineers, at $1,200 each; assistant engineer, $1,000; assistant engineer, $900; 3 firemen; glass blower, $1,200; electrician, $1,200; electrician, $900; 4 laborers; 2 janitors, at $660 each; janitor, $600; 2 female laborers, at $360 each; in all, $201,440.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of getting some information with reference to this item, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. When the Bureau of Standards was established, as I remember it, it was on a very moderate scale, with a comparatively insignificant sum appropriated, but with very large promises as to what the returns were to be. Now, I see that the appropriations run over $200,000, with another appropriation already made in another bill. I should like to know if there is any prospect of the Government ever receiving any income from that bureau, and what has been done already in the way of providing an income at all commensurate with the glowing promises originally made.

Mr. GILLETT. There is some income coming in. I can not tell the gentleman how much; but for the tests which they make for persons other than the Government they charge a fee, which is intended to cover the expense of the experiment. I am sorry I can not give the gentleman the figures.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman believe that the Bureau of Standards is doing the Government a sufficiently valuable service to compensate it for the large and increasing annual outlay?

Mr. GILLETT. I most emphatically do, Mr. Chairman, and I will state that while in this bill it looks as if there was a large increase, the gentleman must appreciate that a new building was just completed last year, which will very much enlarge the capacity of the bureau, but will also involve an additional expense. When that is operating, I believe the power of the bureau for usefulness, both to the Government and to the outside public, will be very much increased. I think it is one of the wisest and best expenditures on which the Government has entered.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I hope the gentleman is entirely right. I confess that I do not know enough about the Bureau of Standards to say, but I remember distinctly, for I was here when it started, that they made some extravagant promises as to the insignificant cost of it, and as to the large returns that the Government would receive. Now, my information is that the returns are not coming in in anything like the quantity that was promised at the time that the bureau was established. It is one of those mysterious bureaus of the Government that the average Member of Congress has neither the ability to understand nor the time to investigate, and I confess that my position with reference to it is rather more one of suspicion than knowledge. I doubt whether it is worth as much as it costs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask my friend from Texas to examine a few of the publications from the Bureau of Standards which I have taken the trouble to bring down from my committee room to the floor of the House. I may say to him that the Bureau of Standards, in my judgment, is just as important to the construction work of the country and to a certain extent to the manufacturing work as is the Bureau of Plant Industry to the agricultural work of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the House, but for the purpose of inserting a little memorandum as to what the Bureau of Standards does I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What I say is not in a spirit of criticism, but I want to get some information. I really wanted to know whether the people were getting anything like value received for the investment.

Mr. MANN. I think it is the best work being done under the Government to-day except perhaps that of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WEISSE. It is better than that, for it is more correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the matter referred to by Mr. MANN:

WHAT THE BUREAU OF STANDARDS IS DOING.

1. Endeavoring to maintain the very best standards possible in weight, length, capacity, heat, light, electricity, and magnetism, compares these standards with those used by the public, devises methods of measuring when necessary, makes possible and encourages correct measurements in scientific work, the industries, and in the ordinary measurements of everyday trade.

2. Determination of standard values of data used in engineering, manufacturing, and scientific work such as specific gravities, electrical properties of materials, heat conductivities, melting points, steam tables, and many other constants where it is as necessary to have correct and uniform values as in the case of measurements.

3. Determining the specific properties of materials, principally materials of construction, with a view to improving the conditions under which they are purchased and used; that is to say, the properties upon which the quality of such material depend; and devising suitable tests for these properties, in order that they may be correctly specified in contracts and tested to see that they conform to specifications.

4. Testing is done for every department and practically all bureaus to ascertain whether supplies purchased conform to specifications. Bureaus are assisted in the preparation of specifications. This particular branch of testing is confined almost wholly to the government service, and the demand for it on the part of other bureaus is far greater than the Bureau of Standards can meet. The work referred to in this paragraph would alone warrant the maintenance of the Bureau of Standards.

The Clerk read as follows:

Supreme Court: Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, $13,000; 8 associate justices, at $12,500 each; marshal, $5,000; 9 stenographic clerks, 1 for the Chief Justice and 1 for each associate justice, at not exceeding $1,600 each; in all, $132,400.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. I want to ask the gentleman if this is not an increase of salary?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state that this increase of salary for the marshal was granted by the committee upon the urgent request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who had carefully investigated and found that the salary paid the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States is very much below the salary paid to the district marshal.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How long has he served at a salary of $3,500 a year?

Mr. TAWNEY. Ever since the control of the Senate passed from the Democratic party to the Republican party. He was formerly the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States, and that has been perhaps longer than the gentleman from Indiana wishes it was, but, nevertheless, it has been so long that I have forgotten.

Mr. COX of Indiana. So long that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." Well, he has served so long that I think he can serve a little while longer, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. COX of Indiana. That it is an increase of salary from $3,500 to $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will offer an amendment to put it back at $3,500.

Mr. MANN. Make it $4,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I will accept that.

Mr. GILLETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will modify my amendment and make it $4,000.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

District court, Territory of Hawaii: Two judges, at $6,000 each; clerk, $3,000; reporter, $1,200; $16,200.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I want to ask the gentleman in control of the bill if there is not an increase of salary in that?

Mr. GILLETT. No; the new law was passed last year which changed the salaries, and this accords with the new law.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is that the same law that increased the salary of the judges in the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. GILLETT. The same.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And there is no increase of salary?

Mr. GILLETT. No increase.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Retired judges: To pay the salaries of the United States judges retired under section 714 of the Revised Statutes, so much as may be necessary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What does this paragraph mean?

Mr. GILLETT. This is for the judges who resigned and are retired under the law. It gives them a pension or retired pay.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the committee know how much it is?

Mr. GILLETT. It is liable to vary in any year. Last year it was $114,519.45. Of course if a judge dies he goes off the list. It is a variable quantity.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How many are there retired now?

Mr. GILLETT. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Claims: Chief justice, $6,500; 4 judges, at $6,000 each; chief clerk, $3,500; assistant clerk, $2,500; bailiff, $1,500; clerk, $1,600; 2 clerks, at $1,400 each; stenographer, $1,200; 3 clerks, at $1,200 each; chief messenger, $1,000; 3 firemen; 3 watchmen; elevator conductor, $720; laborer; 2 charwomen; in all, $55,820.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 169, line 7, after the word "dollars," insert the words "two assistant messengers."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, those were omitted by the printer. It is a clerical mistake and is the same appropriation given them always.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That hereafter all supplies of fuel, ice, stationery, and other miscellaneous supplies for the executive departments and other government establishments in Washington, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the article, shall be advertised and contracted for by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, instead of by the several departments and establishments, upon such days as he may designate. There shall be a general supply committee in lieu of the board provided for in section 3709 of the Revised Statutes as amended, composed of officers, one from each such department and other government establishment in Washington, designated by the head thereof, the duties of which committee shall be to make, under the direction of the said Secretary, an annual schedule of required miscellaneous supplies, to standardize such supplies, eliminating all unnecessary grades and varieties, and to aid said Secretary in soliciting bids based upon formulas and specifications drawn up by such experts in the service of the Government as the committee may see fit to call upon, who shall render whatever assistance they may require. The committee shall aid said Secretary in securing the proper fulfillment of the contracts for such supplies, for which purpose the said Secretary shall prescribe, and all departments comply with, rules providing for such examination and tests of the articles received as may be necessary for such purpose; in making additions to the said schedule; in opening and considering the bids, and shall perform such other similar duties as he may assign to them: Provided, That the articles intended to be purchased in this manner are those in common use by or suitable to the ordinary needs of two or more such departments or establishments; but the said Secretary shall have discretion to amend the annual common supply schedule from time to time as to any articles that, in his judgment, can as well be thus purchased. In all cases only one bond for the proper performance of each contract shall be required, notwithstanding that supplies for more than one department or government establishment are included in such contract. Every purchase or drawing of such supplies from the contractor shall be immediately reported to said committee. No disbursing officer shall be a member of such committee. No department or establishment shall purchase or draw supplies from the common schedule through more than one office or bureau, except in case of detached bureaus or offices having field or outlying service, which may purchase directly from the contractor with the permission of the head of their department or establishment: And provided further, That telephone service, electric light, and power service purchased or contracted for from companies or individuals shall be so obtained by him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that he makes the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] that this is identically the provision which the House has three times agreed to unanimously.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that I think this is a proper matter for my Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, and we propose to take the matter up. I shall make the point of order, I will say to the gentleman, though he may explain the matter.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will study this provision, he will see that it does not relate to the Department of Commerce and Labor alone. Under existing law each department must contract for its miscellaneous supplies independent of contracts made by and for other departments.

Now, the House has three times passed this provision, but because it was new legislation on an appropriation bill and being related in some way, as it is supposed at the other end of the Capitol, to what is known as the "Keep commission," the House conferees have never been able to induce the Senate conferees to agree to it.

On the 13th of May last the President appointed the committee this provision authorizes. That is a general purchasing committee. That committee has standardized the miscellaneous supplies of the various departments of the Government, and as a result of that standardization and the work of the committee in the first six months of its existence there was a net saving in the purchase of miscellaneous supplies of $188,015. The difficulty now is that the system of contracting for these supplies is a system governed by law. The effect of this will be to authorize the Department of Commerce and Labor to contract the miscellaneous supplies for all the departments instead of one department, or each department contracting separately. In that way we will do away with the purchasing agents in all of the several departments.

Prior to the appointment of this committee there were no two departments paying the same price for identically the same miscellaneous supplies. When the committee had hearings on this matter some years ago it appeared that the difference in the style, price, and character of lead pencils, for example, in one department aggregated something like 300 different styles of pencils, and it took three different sheets of paper to describe the specifications in regard to lead pencils for one department alone. The only object of this is to continue the committee that has been created by order of the President, which the President was authorized to create, because he selected merely the representatives from the different departments to constitute this committee and perform the work of standardization of miscellaneous supplies, but he could not authorize one department to enter into yearly contracts for all the departments, because each department is required by law to contract as the needs of the service in the department may require. I trust that there will be no point of order made.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I think this is a good provision, but it has no business on an appropriation bill. Our committee will bring in legislation to this effect.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, we have no desire to encroach upon the province of the gentleman's committee, but there is opposition to this in the other branch, and there has been three different times. Now, a bill which is reported from the gentleman's committee and which goes through the House will be simply pigeonholed over there, whereas if you get it on an appropriation bill, they can not, at least, pigeonhole it, and we will have a chance to get it into conference and we may win out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me say to the gentleman from Vermont that his committee has not jurisdiction on this subject. His committee has jurisdiction over the expenditures in the Department of Commerce, but this is not for expenditures in the Department of Commerce alone, on account of miscellaneous supplies, but for all departments.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I know.

Mr. TAWNEY. If it is not agreeable to the gentleman he can strike out the Department of Commerce and authorize the Treasury Department to make the contract.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That provision is highly agreeable to me, except it should come in as a piece of independent legislation.

Mr. TAWNEY. This legislation has already passed the House three times by unanimous consent——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. But why should the distinguished gentleman break the rules of the House?

Mr. TAWNEY. Simply because we discovered these abuses. We discovered that different bureaus in the same department were paying different prices for identically the same thing, and that difference amounted to as much as 50 and 75 cents.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly; that is all true.

Mr. TAWNEY. And unless the Committee on Appropriations had initiated this, it would never have been pointed out to the Executive in the first place.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It seems to me this should go through the proper committee.

Mr. MANN. Under what provision would the gentleman's committee have jurisdiction of this subject anyhow?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I am not certain it would have jurisdiction, but I was under the impression it would have.

Mr. MANN. I have read very carefully Rule XLII.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. But my point is—I only threw that in incidentally—that there seems to me there is some committee that has jurisdiction over that matter. We all understand perfectly well the attitude of the gentleman from Minnesota if another committee encroaches upon the prerogatives of his committee in any way——

Mr. TAWNEY. I trust the gentleman from Vermont will not insist after this House has three times by unanimous consent passed this provision.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman from Illinois reserved the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I will be very frank with the gentleman. I did not recall the matter when it was first read, and I thought we had better have an explanation. I now recall we have discussed this several times before, and I have no doubt if this amendment is made in the form of an enactment it will be of great benefit to the Government. When this was first read without an explanation I did not know it was the same provision that we had agreed to once before. I expect we will never get it enacted into law except upon an appropriation bill, and I am not at all sure we will get it enacted into law if we put it on an appropriation bill; but so far as I am concerned, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I shall yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 22643, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, and upon that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I rise to move to recommit the bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] rise?

Mr. CULLOP. I move to recommit the bill, with instructions. I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill. I am opposed to it, and I move the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to ascertain. Neither of the three gentlemen, rising at substantially the same time, are on the Committee on Appropriations. Neither one, so far as the Chair can determine, has any prior title to recognition, and therefore the Chair under that condition will recognize the gentleman on the majority side.

Mr. JAMES. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] first addressed the Chair, and, on all fair procedure, is first entitled to recognition.

The SPEAKER. They all rose substantially at the same time. The first gentleman to speak was the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. JAMES. Of course, I do not want to dispute the Speaker's word, but I think the Speaker is mistaken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Ought any motion to recommit with instructions take precedence over the other, taking it for granted they all rose simultaneously? Now, the reason for that seems to me to be this——

The SPEAKER. There can be but one motion to recommit, and the motion to recommit with instructions is, in fact, substantially the same as the motion to recommit. A motion to recommit is amendable with instructions, provided the motion for the previous question is defeated. They are, in fact, therefore the same motions. And the Chair may state further that the practice of the House has been, so far as the Chair recollects, on motions to recommit, prior to the adoption of the late rule upon that subject, to recognize a friend of the bill. The interjection of the motion to refer after the previous question is ordered is an anomalous proceeding, and in order only because of a special provision of the rules. The object of this provision was, as the Chair has always understood, that the motion should be made by one friendly to the bill, for the purpose of giving one more chance to perfect it, as perchance there might be some error that the House desired to correct. But since the adoption of the late rule upon this subject, the Chair is compelled, provided some one arises and moves to recommit the bill, to submit the question: "Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?" And if so, the Chair, following the kindred practice of the House, would have recognized some one on the Committee on Appropriations who was opposed to the bill. But no one arising, the Chair is at liberty to recognize any gentleman that arises to make the motion. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], who first addressed the Chair, states that he is opposed to the bill, and therefore the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] rise?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I desire respectfully to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. It is a question of recognition, and the gentleman is quite aware that upon a question of recognition an appeal from the Chair has never, at least for a generation, been entertained. Now, the gentlemen can arrive at the object they desire to reach, if it is the sense of the majority, by voting down the motion for the previous question. An opportunity will then be given to amend the motion to recommit with instructions, and it is quite within the power of the majority to work its will.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman has demanded the previous question.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not make the motion for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. While the gentleman's motion to recommit is preferential, it does not carry with it the right to control the floor so as to cut off other gentlemen. For instance, if the gentleman in charge of the bill desires to offer an amendment, he has the floor; but surely, as to whether the House shall order the previous question——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman in charge of the bill has not desired debate; and if he desired to debate, he could not, because the previous question has been moved and ordered on the bill and is now moved upon the motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the Chair to what the practice has been, as indicated by the Speaker himself when a motion was made to recommit the tariff bill with instructions. The Speaker indicated and held the gentleman from Missouri was entitled to make that motion, because it was a preferential motion and, as senior member of the Ways and Means Committee on the minority side, he was the one who was entitled, in preference to anybody else opposed to the bill, and the gentleman in charge of the bill still had the right on that to demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not agree with the gentleman as to that case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The case cited is identical.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that that case has arisen; therefore it is not necessary for the Chair to rule upon that point. The precedent the gentleman from New York cites is not on all fours with this case.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yeas and nays!

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 97, nays 110, answered "present" 19, not voting 162, as follows:

From and including to-day until March 25, inclusive:
Mr. BARCHFELD with Mr. SHERLEY.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TENER] has voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not vote.

Mr. BYRNS. I desire to withdraw my vote in the negative, and to vote "present."

Mr. CALDER. I desire to know if the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONRY] is recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. CALDER. I desire to withdraw my vote, and vote "present."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I desire to know if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has voted?

The SPEAKER. He voted "present."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Not knowing how he had voted, I also voted "present."

Mr. JAMES. I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not vote.

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with him, and I desire to withdraw my vote in the negative and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I desire to offer a substitute motion——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman when a superior motion is not pending. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, is it not possible to ginger the reading clerk a little bit and make him move along a little faster?

The SPEAKER. That is—a parliamentary inquiry. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 110, answered "present" 15, not voting 163, as follows:

YEAS—100.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CARY with Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina.
Mr. DOUGLAS with Mr. RANDELL.
Mr. MCCALL with Mr. CLAYTON.
Mr. OLCOTT with Mr. TALBOTT.
Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT with Mr. HAMMOND.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio with Mr. SLAYDEN.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion to recommit, with the following instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding "with instruction to report forthwith as follows: By striking out all of line for automobiles for Vice-President and Speaker, and insert that the amount, as specified on page 13, lines 6, 7, and 8, be reduced from $50,000 to $35,000.

"The amount specified on page 29, lines 1 to 5, inclusive, be reduced to $50,000; that the item on page 72, lines 16 to 20, amend by reducing the amount from $100,000 to $75,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the amendment reported again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported, because it is difficult to ascertain its scope. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, lines 6, 7, and 8, be amended so as to read:

"For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor and expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobiles for the Vice-President, $35,000."

On page 29, lines 1 to 5, inclusive, be amended so as to read:

"For miscellaneous items and expense of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, and for expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobiles for the Speaker, $50,000."

On page 72, lines 16 to 20 be amended so as to read:

"For expenses of collecting the corporation tax authorized by the act approved August 5, 1909, to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, $75,000."

Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. CULLOP rose.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is entitled to recognition next.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, did I surrender the floor when I offered this amendment?

The SPEAKER. There is no debate, as the previous question is operating.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The previous question was defeated, was it not?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I thought I had the floor and the right to make any additional motion. I want to demand the previous question on my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, on second thought, would recognize the gentleman for such motion as he desires to make before he recognizes anybody else.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the previous question upon his amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I had been recognized.

The SPEAKER. Well, after all is said and done, the gentleman from Illinois should not suffer because of the Chair's oversight. The previous question originally ordered upon the bill to final passage cuts off debate; but now the previous question was voted down upon the motion to recommit, which throws the motion open to amendment. The gentleman from Illinois, having the prior right to recognition and being the leading opponent to the motion for the previous question, is recognized and is entitled to make any parliamentary motion that seems to him proper.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I demand the previous question on my amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to order the previous question on his amendment.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the amendment containing the instructions to the motion to recommit.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I thought my motion was an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The SPEAKER. It is; but the amendment which contains the instructions must be agreed to by the House. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois containing the instructions.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion to recommit with the instructions——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk in reporting the effect of the amendment, it seems to me, did not report exactly what the amendment would accomplish.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that it was reported just as it reads.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Clerk did not, if I may be permitted to say so. The Clerk reported that certain paragraphs were stricken out, which included a number of items.

The SPEAKER. It is a question of fact. The Clerk, without objection, will again report the effect of the amendment, if that is what the gentleman desires.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, amend lines 6, 7, and 8 so as to read:
"For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, and for expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobiles for the Vice-President, $35,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I submit that that is not the effect of the instructions. The instructions are to strike out all allowance for automobiles for the Vice-President.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no; they were not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the instructions.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I suggest that the first part of the amendment strikes out all allowance for automobiles for the Vice-President and the Speaker.

Mr. TAWNEY. That would be the effect of the amendment by reducing the amount $15,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it would not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding "with instructions to report forthwith, amending as follows: By striking out all allowance for automobiles for the Vice-President and the Speaker, and that the amount as specified on page 15, lines 6, 7, and 8, be reduced from $50,000 to $35,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit that not only reduces the amount, but it strikes out the language permitting the expenditure for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The instructions, as the Chair understands them, on page 13 would strike out the words "and for expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobiles for the Vice-President," and would strike out "$50,000" and insert "$35,000."

The Clerk read as follows:

So as to read:
"For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $35,000."
Page 29, lines 2 to 5, inclusive:
"Be reduced to $50,000."

The SPEAKER. The first part of the prior amendment strikes out on page 29 these words:

And for expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobiles for the Speaker.

And reduces the $75,000 to $50,000.

The Clerk will read the paragraph as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, $50,000.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of collecting corporation tax authorized by the act approved August 5, 1909, to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, $75,000.

The SPEAKER. The amendments are perfectly clear. Now, the question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 113, nays 94, answered "present" 16, not voting 164, as follows:

So the motion to recommit with instructions was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. PAGE.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York with Mr. GOULDEN.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. WOOD of New Jersey with Mr. GODWIN.

Mr. KNAPP with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. HAYES of California with Mr. GILLESPIE.

Mr. SLEMP with Mr. JONES.

Mr. MCKINNEY with Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, as instructed by the House, I report the bill back with the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, lines 6, 7, and 8, strike out the words:

"And for expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobile for the Vice-President;" and change "fifty" to "thirty-five," so as to read:

"For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $35,000."

On page 29, strike out in lines 3, 4, and 5, the words:

"And for expense of driving, maintenance, and care of automobile for the Speaker;" and change "seventy-five" to "fifty," so as to read:

"For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, $50,000."

On page 72, lines 16 to 20, change the amount from $100,000 to $75,000, so that the paragraph will read:

"For expenses of collecting the corporation tax authorized by the act approved August 5, 1909: 'To provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' $75,000."

Mr. GILLETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the previous question adopted still apply to the bill as reported?

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, it does. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Are these amendments divisible?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I demand a separate vote on the last amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a separate vote on the last amendment. Is a separate vote demanded on either of the other amendments?

A separate vote was not demanded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the first two amendments.

The question was taken, and the first two amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the third amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, lines 16 to 20, change the amount from $100,000 to $75,000, so that the paragraph will read:

"For expenses of collecting the corporation tax authorized by the act approved August 5, 1909: 'To provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' $75,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

FUR SEALS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 430), which was read, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By the terms of section 1963, United States Revised Statutes, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is directed at the expiration of the lease which gives the North American Commercial Company the right to engage in taking fur seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George to enter into a new lease covering the same purpose for a period of twenty years. The present lease will expire on the 30th of April, 1910, and it is important to determine whether or not changed conditions call for a modification of the policy which has so far been followed.

The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor unite in recommending a radical change of this policy. It appears that the seal herds on the islands named have been reduced to such an extent that their early extinction must be looked for unless measures for their preservation be adopted. A herd numbering 375,000 twelve years ago is now reduced to 134,000, and it is estimated that the breeding seals have been reduced in the same period of time from 130,000 to 56,000. The rapid depletion of these herds is undoubtedly to be ascribed to the practice of pelagic sealing which prevails in spite of the constant and earnest efforts on the part of this Government to have it discontinued.

The policy which the United States has adopted with respect to the killing of seals on the islands is not believed to have had a substantial effect upon the reduction of the herd. But the discontinuance of this policy is recommended in order that the United States may be free to deal with the general question in its negotiations with foreign countries. To that end it is recommended that the leasing system be abandoned for the present, and that the Government take over entire control of the islands, including the inhabitants and the seal herds. The objection which has heretofore been made to this policy, upon the ground that the Government would engage in private business, has been deprived of practical force. The herds have been reduced to such an extent that the question of profit has become a mere incident, and the controlling question has become one of conservation.

It is recommended, therefore, that the provision for a renewal of the lease be repealed, and that instead a law be enacted to authorize the Department of Commerce and Labor to take charge of the islands, with authority to protect the inhabitants substantially as has been done in the past, and to control the seal herds as far as present conditions admit of, pending negotiations with foreign countries looking to the discontinuance of pelagic sealing. If this result can be obtained, as is confidently believed, there is every prospect that the seal herds will not only be preserved, but will increase so as to make them a source of permanent income.

A draft of a bill covering this matter has been prepared by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and upon request will be submitted to the appropriate committees.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 15, 1910.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18902. An act to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act relative to recognizances, stipulations, bonds, and undertakings, and to allow certain corporations to be accepted as surety thereon;" and

H. R. 21221. An act to authorize the city of St. Joseph, Mich., to construct a bridge across Morrison Channel of the St. Joseph River, Michigan.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3889. An act to amend an act to incorporate the Masonic Temple Association of the District of Columbia;

S. 863. An act for the relief of John M. Miller; and

S. 864. An act for the relief of John Oates.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 7093. An act amendatory of the act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses—to the Committee on the Census.

S. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution providing for a special election in the Territory of Hawaii—to the Committee on the Territories.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 18006. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of expenditure for repair of the public building at Bangor, Me. (H. Doc. No. 780)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Mingo Creek, South Carolina (H. Doc. No. 782)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for immigrant station, Galveston, Tex. (H. Doc. No. 781)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chairman of the House portion of the Joint Committee for Revision and Codification of the Laws of the United States, transmitting the report of the Joint Committee on the Judiciary—to the Committee on Revision of the Laws and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. OLMSTED, from the Committee on Insular Affairs, to which was referred the House bills 19718 and 22554, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 23000) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, accompanied by a report (No. 750), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the House bills 33, 3048, 3644, 16038, and 17537, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 23012) providing for the raising of the United States battle ship Maine, in Habana Harbor, and to provide for the interment of the bodies therein, accompanied by a report (No. 754), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. J. Res. 83) authorizing the use of a United States army transport for certain purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 756), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORGAN of Missouri, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3501) providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the confederate cemetery at Springfield, Mo., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 761), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10280) to authorize the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to receive twelve 3.2-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining equipment from the State of Massachusetts, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 762), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1866) providing that the State of Wyoming be permitted to relinquish to the United States certain lands heretofore selected and to select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 764), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10584) authorizing States and Territories to select lands in lieu of lands included within forest reserves, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 765), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 164) construing section 6 of the act of May 29, 1908, entitled "An act authorizing a resurvey of certain townships in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 766), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CRANE. I present a petition signed by sundry citizens of the United States, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures, and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, together with the signatures, as follows:

MARCH, 1910.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, citizens of the United States, believing in the principles upon which our Government was founded, and satisfied that the experience of the country during the last ten years has fully justified our faith, hereby respectfully and earnestly urge:

First. That Congress shall declare in unequivocal terms the purpose of the United States to grant their independence to the Philippine Islands.

Second. That in order to secure the Filipino people in the enjoyment of their independence the Government shall endeavor by treaty with other nations to procure the neutralization of the Philippine Islands and to insure for them such a position as under like treaties is now enjoyed by Switzerland, Norway, and other small countries.

Third. That Congress shall make no change in the law which will enable foreign capitalists to exploit the islands for their own pecuniary benefit, or will establish there the trusts from whose oppressive control the people of the United States are struggling to free themselves at home.

Fourth. That measures shall be adopted at once which will enable the Filipino people to develop their country for themselves and with their own capital, and which will reduce the crushing burden of taxation to which they are now subjected by the expenses of the insular administration.

We urge these things because we believe that they are right, and that the substitution of arbitrary power for government by the people under our flag indicates a steadily increasing tendency away from free government, which should be resisted and stopped. It is clear that the people of this country know little of the facts, care little what is done in our dependency, and are tired of their colonial adventure. While these conditions exist the interests of the dependency must suffer, and no one can doubt that these conditions are likely to be permanent. We feel that every American citizen who is opposed to the policy of colonialism should make his opposition known, and should insist on learning all the facts, believing that were these known the policy would be abandoned.

With race problems, labor problems, taxation problems at home, let us not remain supine while we are being committed to the creation of like problems in distant colonies, problems which will remain to be a constant source of trouble and expense until the country does what we urge it to do now; that is, leave every people free to govern themselves.

There are no truer words than Lincoln's:

"Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not themselves, and under a just God will not long retain it."

He also presented a memorial of the Trades and Labor Council of Lansing, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the rate of postage on second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of Detroit Agency, Lake Seamen's Union; of Bay City Agency, Lake Seamen's Union; and of Port Huron Agency, Lake Seamen's Union, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports, and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in the ports of the United States, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Grand Rapids, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing sufficient postal compensation to secure adequate mail facilities to the ports of South America, South Africa, Australasia, the Philippine Islands, and the Levant, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the Tuscola County Association of Farmers' Clubs, of sundry citizens of Leelanaw County, of Local Grange, No. 56, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ypsilanti, and of Gilead Grange, No. 400, Patrons of Husbandry, of Bronson, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of Arctic Lodge, No. 100, La Société des Artisans Canadiens Français, of Arctic, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the admission of publications of fraternal societies to the mails as second-class matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. NELSON. I present resolutions adopted by the Minnesota Cooperative Dairies Association (Incorporated), relative to the tax on oleomargarine. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the President, the Senate, and the House of Representatives of the United States:

Your petitioner, the Minnesota Cooperative Dairies Association (Incorporated), respectfully represents to the President of the United States, the Senate, and the House of Representatives that it is organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of Minnesota for the purpose of improving the conditions of the Minnesota creameries and the dairy interests in general and the marketing in a wholesale way on the cooperative plan the products of the creameries connected with it; that there are over 240 creameries so identified with it, representing to exceed 15,000 dairymen and farmers and an invested capital in creameries alone of approximately $1,000,000; and

Whereas the present law enacted by Congress May 9, 1902, and commonly known as the "Grout law" is in danger of being repealed by the Sixty-first Congress, and in lieu thereof bill H. R. 13842, known as the Burleson bill, or the bill S. 5428, known as the Simmons bill, substituted therefor; and

Whereas we believe the Grout law to be a just law, and enacted for the sole purpose of protecting the dairy interests and consuming public from the fraudulent selling of oleomargarine, and not to prohibit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine when sold as such product; and

Whereas we believe that the only practical way to prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine is to preserve the color distinction, as is now done by the present law; and

Whereas it is further claimed that the said law is a discrimination against the cattle-raising and cotton-growing interests of the United States, in that it is a prohibitory tax on those manufacturing oleomargarine, and incidentally raises the price of the "poor man's" butter; and

Whereas the claims of discrimination are clearly disproven by the fact that in January, 1910, in the Chicago district, there was manufactured 10,189,249 pounds of oleomargarine—which is estimated to be about two-thirds of the output of the United States—of which only 230,089 pounds were colored and paid the 10-cent tax, or approximately 2¼ per cent; and these figures would indicate that 97¾ per cent of all the oleomargarine manufactured during the above-mentioned period paid only the nominal tax of one-fourth of a cent per pound; and

Whereas the color distinction, as defined by the present law in imposing a greater tax on oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter made from milk the product of cows over that sold in its natural color works no hardship on the manufacturers or consumers of oleomargarine: Now therefore be it

Resolved, by the Minnesota Cooperative Dairies Association (Incorporated), in annual meeting assembled in the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, on this 23d day of February, 1910, That we protest against the enactment into law of the Burleson bill (H. R. 13842), or the Simmons bill (S. 5428); and be it further

Resolved, That we urge upon Congress, now assembled, to defeat the passage of the Burleson bill (H. R. 13842) and the Simmons bill (S. 5428) for the reasons set forth in this preamble, and that we urge upon the Minnesota Senators and Representatives to use all honorable means to prevent the passage of said bills.

Whereas there has been introduced in Congress S. 5842, known as the Penrose bill, the object of which is to correct certain defects in the Grout law, which defects apparently prevent the enforcement of the law by the United States revenue officers; and

Whereas we believe the Penrose bill (S. 5842) is a just measure and is in no way intended to prevent the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, when done without the intention of fraud, and makes the law more comprehensive: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That we indorse the Penrose bill (S. 5842) as an amendment to the Grout law, and petition Congress to enact the bill S. 5842 as an amendment to the Grout law; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this association is instructed to transmit a copy of this preamble and these resolutions to the President of the United States and to each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this association requests one each of our Senators and Representatives to introduce this memorial in each branch of our National Congress and ask unanimous consent to have the same printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The above resolutions, as duly adopted at the said annual meeting, were introduced by the committee on resolutions, composed of C. B. Goodale, as chairman, H. V. Poor, and J. F. Lamp.

MINNESOTA COOPERATIVE DAIRIES ASSOCIATION (INCORPORATED),
By JOHN R. MORLEY, President.
[SEAL.] By CHARLES A. MORSE, Secretary.

I hereby certify that the above is a true copy of resolutions adopted at the third annual meeting of the stockholders of the Minnesota Cooperative Dairies Association (Incorporated), of Minnesota, held at the Old Capitol building, in the city of St. Paul, Minn., on February 23, 1910, and of the whole of said resolutions, and that such resolutions stand unrevoked at this date.

[SEAL.] CHARLES A. MORSE, Secretary.

ST. PAUL, MINN., February 23, 1910.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6888) to incorporate the Rockefeller Foundation, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 405) thereon.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 6895) for the relief of Charles O. Hanna; and
A bill (S. 6894) for the relief of George Thompson.

RELIEF OF HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. 10321) for the relief of homestead settlers under the acts of February 20, 1904;

June 5 and 28, 1906; and March 2, 1907, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 406) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. GAMBLE. The first two sections were read yesterday.

Mr. KEAN. Let it all be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I think the Senator from South Dakota ought to give some reason for the passage of the bill and explain why extension is to be made.

Mr. GAMBLE. This bill came up for consideration yesterday, and on the objection of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] it went over and was recommitted.

The first section of the bill is now included in the Indian appropriation bill, and I intend at the proper time to move to strike out the first section, as it is already provided for. This is a House bill, and it has been fully considered by the House and passed.

Mr. KEAN. But what I asked the Senator for was the reason for the proposed extension of time.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will give the reason.

Mr. KEAN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. GAMBLE. The second section provides for an extension of one year of the time in which the second payment upon the lands of Tripp County that were opened to settlement one year since. The winter has been an unusual and a most severe one. When the settlers went upon the land a year ago the coming April they paid one-fifth of the appraised value of the lands, but on account of the severe winter, the great cost of living, the expense of fuel, and the high expense of all things, it will be practically impossible for the settlers to make their second payment on the 1st day of April.

The bill simply provides for an extension for one year, and the settlers will pay 5 per cent interest upon the deferred payment. It simply postpones the time.

Mr. KEAN. Then, I understand it is an extension on account of the inclemency of the weather.

Mr. GAMBLE. The matter is fully shown in the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 20, after the word "has," to insert the word "not," so as to make the additional proviso read:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall extend the time of payments in any case where it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the law in regard to residence and improvement, as provided by the homestead law, has not been fully performed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add, after line 20, page 3, a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 4 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect," approved May 29, 1908, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That the price of said lands shall be paid in accordance with the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the following terms: One-fifth of the purchase price to be paid at the time of entry, and the balance in five equal installments, the first within two years and the remainder annually in three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from and after the date of entry. In case any entryman fails to make the annual payments, or any of them, when due, all rights in and to the land covered by his entry shall cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled, and the lands shall be reoffered for sale and entry under the provisions of the homestead law at the appraised price thereof: And provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed herein, receiving credit for payments previously made. In addition to the price to be paid for the land the entryman shall pay the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law, where the price of land is $1.25 per acre, and when the entryman shall have complied with all the requirements and terms of the homestead laws as to settlement and residence and shall have made all the required payments aforesaid he shall be entitled to a patent for the lands entered: And provided further, That all lands remaining undisposed of at the expiration of four years from the opening of said lands to entry may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be reappraised in the manner provided for in this act: And it is further provided, That any lands remaining unsold after said lands have been open to entry for seven years may be sold to the highest bidder for cash without regard to the prescribed price thereof fixed under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. That is entirely agreeable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 1 of the bill appearing on page 1. .

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. I suggest that the other sections be renumbered to correspond.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary is instructed to renumber the sections of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of homestead settlers under the acts of February 20, 1904; June 5 and 28, 1906; March 2, 1907; and May 29, 1908."

Mr. GAMBLE. I suggest that on account of the first section being stricken out the title be further amended by striking out the words "February 20, 1904."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the title will be amended as indicated. The Chair hears no objection.

FOLDING SPEECHES AND PAMPHLETS.

Mr. HALE. I report from the Committee on Appropriations a bill making an appropriation for folding speeches and pamphlets for the Senate, and I ask for its passage.

The bill (S. 7187) making an appropriation for folding speeches and pamphlets for the Senate was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, for the Senate of the United States, for the fiscal year 1910.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M. BLANKENSHIP.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5873) for the relief of John M. Blankenship, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 404) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 4, after the words "to appoint," to strike out the words "the said," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint John M. Blankenship an ensign in the United States Navy on the retired list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee report to strike out the preamble. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

STATUE OF JOHN C. CALHOUN.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 25), submitted by Mr. SMITH of California, on the 15th instant, reported it favorably, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Senate concurrent resolution 25.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall, upon the acceptance of the statue of John C. Calhoun, presented by the State of South Carolina, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of South Carolina.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable copper-process plates, to be bound with these proceedings.

A bill (S. 7227) granting a pension to John Edward Mullen (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 7228) granting an increase of pension to George Erwin (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES. I present a joint request of the governors of Oregon and Washington, asking for the passage of a joint resolution giving the consent of Congress to the States of Oregon and Washington to establish an exact boundary line between those States, and I introduce with it a joint resolution. I ask that the request be read.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

PORTLAND, OREG., March 9, 1910.

To the Congress of the United States,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, F. W. Benson, governor of the State of Oregon, and M. E. Hay, governor of the State of Washington, do most respectfully request that your honorable body pass the consent that the State of Washington and the State of Oregon be permitted to agree upon the exact boundary line between said States where the said Columbia River now forms said boundary, said consent to be substantially as set forth in the copy of consent hereto attached.

F. W. BENSON,
Governor of the State of Oregon.
M. E. HAY,
Governor of the State of Washington.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) to enable the States of Oregon and Washington to agree upon a boundary line between said States where the Columbia River forms said boundary, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment providing that all rural letter carriers in the service of the Post-Office Department be paid cash, as compensation, $90 per month for standard 24-mile routes, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for improving Snake River, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, up to Pittsburg Landing, Oreg., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $115,000 for improving Weymouth Fore River, Massachusetts, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15816) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

BENJ. F. HOWELL,
WILLIAM S. BENNET,
JOHN L. BURNETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on March 15, 1910, approved and signed the following joint resolution and act:

S. J. Res. 63. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the confederate veterans' reunion, to be held at Mobile, Ala., in April, 1910; and

S. 5125. An act authorizing the creation of an additional land district in the State of Oregon, to be known as the "Vale land district."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 22643. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WASHINGTON GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. BROWN. I call up Senate resolution 172, coming over from yesterday.

Mr. GALLINGER. The resolution is on the calendar of the Senate, but I have no objection to unanimous consent being given to proceed to its consideration, if the Senator will ask for that. It has gone to the calendar under the rules of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire is correct.

Mr. KEAN. Is there not a motion to refer pending?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the resolution.

The SECRETARY. Order of business 392, Senate resolution 172, a resolution requesting the Attorney-General to inform the Senate what legal authority exists for the present capitalization of the Washington Gas-Light Company and what legal authority exists for an increase in its present capitalization.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The resolution is before the Senate, and the pending motion is that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will call the attention of the Chair to the fact that I had entered a motion to commit the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending motion.

Mr. BROWN. I called it up for the purpose of having that motion disposed of. I think the point of order is good against the motion. I do not desire to make the point of order at this time if there is any reason why the motion should prevail. I thought that perhaps, on reflection, the Senator from New Hampshire would withdraw the motion to refer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it would be interesting to me, and I am sure it would be exceedingly interesting to the Senate, if the Senator from Nebraska would state his point of order.

Mr. BROWN. The point of order is that the rule disposes of these motions when entered against resolutions in the parliamentary situation in which this one is. This resolution was introduced more than a month ago and referred to a committee. Without objection, it was referred to the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia. The Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, was here when that reference was made, and entered no objection. That gave the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia jurisdiction of the resolution.

The resolution was amended by the committee after consideration and reported back to the Senate, carrying with it a possible charge against the contingent fund of the Senate. Because of the fact that the resolution carried that charge against the Senate fund, it makes it necessary, as I understand the rule, to send it to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. This is the rule—it is the fifth paragraph of Rule XXV:

> A Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of five Senators, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.

This is that sort of a resolution, providing for an investigation and providing for its payment out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

But, Mr. President, I would be glad to waive, so far as I am concerned, the point of order if the Senator from New Hampshire can state any reason why this resolution should take some new course and be sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to deny himself any privilege that he has under the rules. If he wishes to make the point of order, I should be glad to have him make it, because it is absolutely not a tenable point of order. In my own time and in my own way I will state the reason, and it will be in a very few words, why the resolution ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator would state his reasons now, we could save some time about the disposition of the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I prefer that the Senator should proceed in his own way. He has the floor, and doubtless he is prepared to enlighten the Senate on a very important subject. I do not wish to interrupt him in the least.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is very kind. I insist on the point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the resolution was reported back from the Committee on the Organization of Corporations in the District of Columbia, and a motion was entered at that time for its reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. That is the record.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion, of course, is not amendable, except to add instructions. A motion to refer to a particular committee is not an amendable motion. It seems to the Chair, therefore, that the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska is the motion which is now in order, rather than that which was afterwards entered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is the situation. A very simple resolution was presented by the Senator from Nebraska. I would have been quite willing to have had it passed without objection. The Senator asked that it should go to a minority committee. I did not object to that. It has been reported back in an entirely different form, and in a form that to my mind the Committee on the District of Columbia has absolute jurisdiction over.

It was not necessary that the Senator should make a motion to refer it to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. But he did.

Mr. GALLINGER. But it was not necessary as the law requires that, and under the custom of the Senate a motion to refer to some other committee is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. But when the Senator makes the motion, then it changes the status, whether it was necessary or not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Even then, this is not a completed matter. This is a matter that another committee can take jurisdiction over, if the Senate so orders.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not see that the fact that the Senator made a motion to send the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which committee it would have gone after it had become a completed matter, excludes any Senator from moving to refer to another committee the entire subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under Rule XXVI, there is a provision that a motion simply to refer shall not be open to amendment except to add instructions; that is, we must first dispose of the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate before a motion to refer to any other committee can be entertained.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to lay the motion to refer to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion is in order. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to lay the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to refer upon the table.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BROWN. I do not rise to debate it; but is it in order until we dispose of the other motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The other motion is not in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled that the other motion was not in order.

Mr. BROWN. My point of order was sustained against the original motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is correct. The question now is on the motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire to lay on the table the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for a roll call on the proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] to refer the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is detained by illness. I do not know how he would vote, and so I will withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLINT. I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BRIGGS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FLINT. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. BRIGGS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Aldrich	du Pont	Lodge	Scott
Brandegee	Elkins	Martin	Smith, Md.
Briggs	Flint	Nixon	Sutherland
Bulkeley	Gallinger	Oliver	Warner
Burrows	Gamble	Page	Warren
Carter	Guggenheim	Penrose	Wetmore
Crane	Hale	Perkins
Cullom	Johnston	Richardson
Dick	Kean	Root

NAYS—30.

Borah	Clarke, Ark.	Hughes	Purcell
Bourne	Clay	Jones	Shively
Bristow	Crawford	La Follette	Smith, S. C.
Brown	Cummins	Money	Stephenson
Burkett	Dixon	Nelson	Taliaferro
Burton	Fletcher	Overman	Taylor
Chamberlain	Frazier	Paynter
Clapp	Gore	Percy

NOT VOTING—29.

Bacon	Curtis	Heyburn	Simmons
Bailey	Daniel	Lorimer	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Davis	McCumber	Smoot
Beveridge	Depew	McEnery	Stone
Bradley	Dillingham	Newlands	Tillman
Burnham	Dolliver	Owen
Clark, Wyo.	Foster	Piles
Culberson	Frye	Rayner

So the motion to lay the motion to refer on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to refer the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I desire to discuss the resolution a moment before the vote on that motion is taken. Am I in order, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska is in order.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this is an unusual proceeding. This resolution was considered, as shown by the record of the Senate, by one of its standing committees, and was reported to the Senate with no division on the part of the committee. It is a resolution providing for an investigation simply of facts relating to one of the corporations which Congress created which does business in this District. The resolution, under the rule which I have read, naturally would go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, because it carries a charge against the contingent fund. My motion to refer to that committee, provided by the rules to consider the subject, has been laid upon the table, and the motion is now made that the resolution shall go to another committee. Why? There can not be found a precedent in this Senate, I will venture to say, having given the subject some search myself, where a resolution providing for an investigation has ever been routed the way this one has been.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the resolution which went to the committee did not provide for an investigation. The Senator from Nebraska ought to be accurate.

Mr. BROWN. The resolution which went to the committee provided for an inquiry into the subject of this corporation and its capitalization. The Senator from New Hampshire suggested that the committee that considered it did not have a right to amend that resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. BROWN. Then, the same resolution coming back here amended——

Mr. GALLINGER. A very different one.

Mr. BROWN. It is different, but it treats of the same subject-matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. BROWN. The same question is to be investigated. There is nothing new brought in except the method of procedure; that is all.

Now, then, as I suggested when interrupted, such resolutions as this have traveled the route in this body, but never before has it been undertaken to sidetrack them to some other committee.

I do not care, Mr. President, to reflect on any committee; it is not necessary; but the committee reflects on itself when it stands in the way of this procedure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nebraska will be as diligent in looking up precedents as he seems to have been in certain other directions, he will find that no such subject-matter ever went to any other committee in this Senate in all its history, except to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. This subject-matter went to this committee by the consent of the chairman of the District Committee. He sat here when the resolution was referred, and without objection allowed that committee to take jurisdiction; but when the committee reports and makes a finding the report does not suit the Senator from New Hampshire. That is the trouble with it.

Now, there is just one of two reasons why this resolution should be taken away from the committee which has reported it and given to another committee: Either the committee that has jurisdiction now, for some reason or other, is not fit to take charge further of the subject, or else the subject-matter should not be investigated by Congress. For which reason is it, I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that he opposes the jurisdiction of this committee being retained—which of the two reasons? I do not think he will complain that there is something wrong with the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia. He might do so, but I apprehend that objection will not be raised. Therefore, the only objection to this resolution must be that there should be no inquiry.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska asks me a question, and I will answer it by telling him that I take no such position as that. The Committee on the District of Columbia has made several inquiries in reference to this particular corporation and other corporations in the District of Columbia; and whenever there is adequate reason for another inquiry that committee will make it, if the subject-matter is submitted to the committee. So far as the committee—this so-called Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia—is concerned, it is well known that it is a minority committee; that it was created to give a minority Member a chairmanship, and with no intention on the part of the Senate that that committee should take jurisdiction of a matter which belongs to one of the larger committees of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. If that be true, Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire should have objected to a reference of this resolution originally to that committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN. It was the intention of the Senate at the time when the resolution was referred to give this committee jurisdiction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why, Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BROWN. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia did not object to the reference of the resolution because it was simply a resolution of inquiry asking the Attorney-General to send certain facts to the Senate. I was not opposed to that. I did not care where the resolution went. I was quite willing that the Attorney-General should tell all he knew to the Senate; but the Senator—there was not method in his madness, but there was method in his shrewdness—when he got the resolution before his committee, or to the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia——

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not understand the force of the point the Senator from New Hampshire undertakes to make when he suggests that this so-called committee—that is the term he used, this so-called committee—has not jurisdiction of this matter. The subject-matter is the same in the original resolution. He has admitted here that the committee had a right to amend it. If it had the right to amend it, that gave the committee jurisdiction of the subject. Having that jurisdiction, some reason must be shown why it should be taken away. There is only one reason that can be urged; there is only one excuse that can be given for a vote in favor of taking this resolution from one committee and giving it to another, and that is opposition to the passage of the resolution.

There is nothing in this resolution that ought to alarm my friend or anybody else. It provides for an inquiry into the affairs of a corporation for which we and nobody else are responsible. The annual report which Congress has compelled this corporation to make to Congress, if there was nothing else to move us, ought to move us to make this investigation. Here is a report addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, dated January 31, 1910. This resolution shows that a corporation organized and doing business in this District under an act of Congress has a capital stock of $2,600,000. It shows that the company declared last year two dividends on that capitalization, one of 10 per cent and another of 10 per cent, making dividends of 20 per cent on the capital stock of $2,600,000.

Mr. President, that is not all. The company declared that dividend after they had paid 6 per cent interest on certificates of indebtedness aggregating $2,600,000, the same amount as the capital stock. Not only have they paid that interest and those dividends, but they expended $203,000 in betterments and improvements. Not only that, but they had almost $200,000 left as a surplus after these expenditures.

Now, I undertake to say that it is the duty of Congress, in the light of the fact that it is responsible for the corporation and what it does, to inquire into its capitalization and to inquire into its legality. The act that chartered this corporation prohibited it practically from running in debt. It discouraged that; and yet, in the face of that statute, there are existing certificates of indebtedness equal to the total capitalization. Congress can not sit idly by with these facts appearing on the record and decline to make an inquiry.

Mr. President, I ask that the natural, the orderly, and the usual procedure be allowed for this resolution that has attached to all other resolutions of this kind. I ask that it be referred to the committee which has made the report, and on the proposition to refer it to the Committee on the District of Columbia I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words before the vote is taken on this proposition. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] says he wants the usual, orderly, and customary course pursued in reference to this resolution. The usual, orderly, and customary course pursued in matters of this sort is for the Committee on the District of Columbia to have jurisdiction of matters which concern the people of this District. The questions in relation to the gas supply——

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MARTIN. I do.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will cite me to a single precedent where a resolution was reported by a committee providing for an investigation and it was referred to another committee than to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I will surrender my contention. The Senate never has done it. There can not be a precedent of that kind found.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] will permit me, I will say there are various precedents where matters have been presented here, and before going to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have been referred to other standing committees of this body. The RECORD is full of precedents of that kind.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, there is no question about precedents, and there is no question about the fact that this very subject of the gas company in Washington has time and again been before the Senate and has always been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, where it properly belongs.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MARTIN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. If it were a question as to which committee the subject should go, that question was adjudicated and settled when the reference of the original measure was made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. BROWN. The Senate itself conferred jurisdiction upon the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia. That jurisdiction can not be disputed now. My friend from New Hampshire is mistaken when he undertakes to show there is a precedent for a resolution favoring an investigation reported by one committee being referred to some other committee for consideration, except to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not mistaken at all on that point. Frequently resolutions of this kind have, under the rule, been ordered by the Chair to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but upon motion they have been sent for consideration and examination to another standing committee. Of course, if the second committee reported it back, then it would go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, there can be no doubt whatever about the proper jurisdiction of this matter, and the Senator from Nebraska is very much mistaken if he thinks he is the only man who can investigate this subject. It can be investigated——

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MARTIN. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. If there is objection to my making the investigation, I would be glad to get off the committee. That is not it. Mr. President, if the Senator makes the objection and asks this reference because the committee of which I happen to be a member is objectionable, I will not contend against it. I want that objection made, though. I do not want it put on any other ground than that the committee that reported this resolution is not the committee to make the investigation.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, there is no personal objection to the Senator from Nebraska, but I want to say to the Senate that I do not believe he is the only man to conduct this investigation. I believe that the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has proper jurisdiction over this matter, will give any question referred to it thorough and proper investigation.

The subject-matter involved now before the Senate does not belong to the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia. There is no question about the organization of this corporation. It was chartered by Congress, and its organization is perfected. There is nothing to investigate but the conduct of business as carried on by this corporation.

It is a public utility in this District; and if it is not conducted properly, if anything is wrong in the conduct of its business, it should be investigated by the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has always had jurisdiction of that and like matters, and I protest against having the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia invaded in this way.

I hardly think the chairman of the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia would himself get up here and say that he thinks this investigation comes properly before the committee of which he is chairman rather than before the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has always had jurisdiction of matters of this kind.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MARTIN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I happen to be chairman of the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia. I was not present in the Senate when the original resolution was referred to the committee. I was present, however, at a meeting of the committee when the resolution was considered. The question of jurisdiction had not been raised at all. I favored reporting back favorably the original resolution in the form that it was sent to the committee. That resolution did provide for an inquiry into the legality of this corporation. The report of the committee was agreed upon in my necessary absence from Washington and was made after my return. It was held up out of deference to my wishes until I got back.

For my part, I never favored coming into the Senate and seeking authority as a committee to make any character of investigation in the District of Columbia or elsewhere. I have been ready at all times, as a member of that committee, to investigate as faithfully and as fairly and as efficiently as I could any matter that the Senate sent to the committee; and if the Senate sees fit to send this resolution, which the committee has reported, back to the committee for the investigation which it provides for, I shall be very happy indeed to do my part in conducting the investigation. I shall take no part, however, in now seeking to locate jurisdiction either in one or the other of these committees. I only say that, as chairman of the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia, I shall do my best with any matter that is referred to it. If the Senate sees fit to refer this investigation or the subject-matter of this investigation to the Committee on the District of Columbia, it will not be unsatisfactory to me.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia has said just what I would have expected the chairman of any committee to say. He does not stand here seeking to invade the jurisdiction and province of another committee. Of course, if the Senate sees fit to invade the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia and to refer to his committee something that belongs to the Committee on the District of Columbia, he will conduct the investigation. If the Senate wants to inquire into the legality of the organization of this gas company, it is well enough to let the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia make that investigation. Everybody knows that that is not the purpose here. The subject-matter involved is not the validity of the organization of this company, but it is the conduct of the business of this company. The Committee on the District of Columbia has never failed to make a thorough, exhaustive, and conscientious examination into any matter that has been referred to it.

I simply desire to protest against this important matter, involving the welfare and the interest of the city of Washington and the District of Columbia, being taken from the committee which has jurisdiction of it and being referred to the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate many minutes. There is a great deal that might be said on this question in answer to the observations of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN], but the motion before the Senate is simply a motion as to the jurisdiction of the committees of this body.

When I first came to this body, nineteen years ago, I made a request that I should not be placed on two committees of the Senate—one was the Committee on Claims and the other was the Committee on the District of Columbia—but in the wisdom of the Committee on Committees I was made a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I accepted the assignment, and have remained a member of that committee for nineteen years. During that time many questions relating to the public utility corporations in the District have come before the committee, which have been examined with care, inquired into conscientiously, and I think there is no ground of complaint as to the manner in which that committee has performed its duty.

The history of gas in this city is the history of gas everywhere else. Originally the citizens of this District paid $8 a thousand for gas, and the company that was then organized, with $50,000 capital, failed and lost all their money. The matter has gone along from time to time, and the price of gas has been reduced; in fact, I think it is the only commodity that can be named that has been constantly reduced in the United States. There may be instances where the price of gas has been increased, but I do not remember them, and certainly that is not true in the District of Columbia.

In 1896, Mr. President, when the late lamented Senator from Michigan, Mr. McMillan, was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and I was an humble member of it, we took up the subject of the price of gas in the District of Columbia. Upon my motion an amendment was agreed to reducing the price. Gas was then selling at $1.50 in Georgetown and $1.25 in Washington; the reduction was made at the rate of 5 cents a thousand feet per year until it reached $1, and in Washington that point was reached in 1901. Since then the company has voluntarily reduced the price to 90 cents; and yet, while the citizens of Washington are not complaining—not one single complaint, so far as I know, has come to any member of the Committee on the District of Columbia—certain Senators who have heretofore not dealt with matters of that kind think it is their duty to take this matter up and have a dragnet investigation in reference to matters connected with this company.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Then, the Senator wants the resolution referred to his committee because he thinks the investigation unnecessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not want it referred to his committee for any such purpose. The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia stated a little while ago, and I will repeat it—and I hope the Senator from Nebraska, who is a very intelligent man, will allow it to creep into his gray matter—the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia said that, if any adequate complaint was made to that committee, an investigation would be made. I repeat that statement; and that is all I have to say on that point.

Mr. BROWN. I understood the Senator, if he will pardon me, to say that none had been made, and therefore the logic of his statement was that no investigation should be made.

Mr. GALLINGER. The logic of my statement is not that. The logic of the statement I made is that what has not been done may be done, and it may be done to-morrow, and perhaps the Senator from Nebraska, and certain men with whom he is cooperating, can stir up interest enough in the District to get somebody to complain.

Mr. President, I am not going to enter into any disagreeable controversy over this matter. I have no disposition to do that; but I want to say that the affairs of the public-utility corporations in this District have been very carefully looked into by the Committee on the District of Columbia and by Congress. I remember the time when we rode from the Capitol on a bobtail car to the foot of the hill, each man his own conductor, and a boy came down on a dilapidated old horse or mule and helped pull the next car up. I well remember that; and yet to-day we have the best underground electric railroad system in all the world, with the cheapest fare, with one exception, that can be found in the United States.

We have not been negligent in these things; and, in reference to this gas company, we have insisted that it should do the right thing for the people of the District. What have we insisted upon? They are charging 90 cents a thousand feet at the present time, and we are requiring them to maintain a candlepower of 22, and during the last year that candlepower has actually been 23⅔. Last year we required the company to keep its books according to a form prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which they are doing. What are the facts about other companies in this country? I addressed a letter to the mayors of 17 cities about the size of Washington—some of them a little larger—asking them as to the price of gas and its candlepower. I have letters from 15 of those cities. Milwaukee and San Francisco did not respond. The facts given in these letters show that the average price of gas in those 15 cities was a little over $1, while in Washington we are getting gas for 90 cents. The average candlepower in those cities was 17, as against 22 in the city of Washington, and the difference between 22 and 17 candlepower is a difference in cost of at least 5 cents on a thousand feet of gas. I will not weary the Senate by reading these letters, but any Senator can see them who is interested in the subject.

Mr. President, I have been interested in watching the zeal and earnestness and patriotism which the Senator from Nebraska displays in reference to this subject of gas in the District of Columbia. I have wondered how it was in Nebraska. I was home two or three months ago, and the people in the city of Concord, N. H., were having a jubilee over the fact that gas had been reduced from $1.45 to $1.35 a thousand feet; and it just occurred to me that possibly the same condition existed in Nebraska. So, the other day I addressed a letter to the city clerk of Kearney, Nebr., where I believe the Senator lives, and he replied:

The following is answer to communication: Price, $1.75 per thousand feet, with a discount of 10 per cent if paid on or before the 8th of the month following service.
The average flame of each lamp to be equal to that of 16 standard sperm candlepower.

So that the people in the city of Kearney, Nebr., are paying, after they get a discount—if they get it, and a great many of them do not get it—$1.57½ a thousand feet of 16 candlepower, and yet the Senator's soul is harrowed over the fact that the people of Washington are getting gas at 90 cents a thousand feet with 22 candlepower.

Then I extended my inquiries to the city of Lincoln, in Nebraska, and I find that gas is sold there at $1.20 a thousand cubic feet, with a penalty of 5 per cent added. They do not reduce the price there; they add to it. The candlepower in that city is 18, which is a difference of at least 5 cents a thousand feet between the candlepower of gas in that city and the candlepower of gas in the city of Washington.

Then I inquired as to the city of Omaha, and I found there that the people are paying $1.25, with a discount of 10 per cent if paid on or before the 10th day of each month. That means, if they get their discount, they are paying $1.12½ for gas in the city of Omaha, as against 90 cents in the city of Washington.

The city of Milwaukee did not reply to my inquiry, which I made a little while ago, and I had a little curiosity to know how things were in Milwaukee, so I looked into that matter. I find there are two companies there. The Milwaukee Coke and Gas Company has a capital of $1,500,000. It has an output of 3,000,000 cubic feet. Their output is one five-hundred-and-fifty-fifths of that of the Washington company, while their capital stock is over one-fourth as much. Some people are complaining about the capital stock of the Washington Gas-Light Company, but it will be seen that it is infinitesimal as compared with that of the Milwaukee Coke and Gas Company.

Then I took the Milwaukee Gas-Light Company, which has an output of a little over 2,000,000,000, an amount almost identical with that of the Washington Gas-Light Company. That company has a capital stock of $5,500,000, bonds of $8,111,000, or a total capitalization of $13,611,000, or over two and a quarter times the capital stock and bonds of the Washington Gas-Light Company.

Then take the City of Superior, in Wisconsin. The capital is $1,000,000, the bonds $1,800,000; total, $2,800,000; output, 47,000,000 cubic feet. The output of the Washington company is 42 times that of Superior, and the capital stock is only twice as much.

Now, Mr. President, it is well enough for us to keep in mind some of these facts and not allow ourselves to be swept off our feet by charges that the people of Washington are being so greatly oppressed because of the neglect of the Committee on the District of Columbia to keep these corporations, which are chartered by Congress, within their proper limits.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. It appears that the Senator himself has made quite an investigation of this subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have. I made it two years ago—some of it.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to inquire what dividends these corporations from which he has gotten his information have been paying on their capitalization?

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not make inquiry about that, but if it is a Nebraska corporation it is paying all it can under existing conditions, no doubt.

Mr. BROWN. The reflections on Nebraska corporations may amuse the Senator from New Hampshire. We have corporations out there, but they obey the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. And they do not violate their charters, as this company has done. That is the difference.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a matter which has been inquired into over and over and over again. People are constantly talking about the Spooner investigation. That investigation was made a good many years ago by Senator Spooner. It was a very exhaustive investigation. I have the report in my hand. When Senator Spooner got through he recommended that an investigation, in place of being made by a committee of Congress—and he had spent months upon it—should be made by a board to be appointed by the Secretary of War. With all his ingenuity and his genius, he said it was a question in his mind whether Congress could specifically determine these questions in regard to the price of gas, the cost of gas, and all the elements entering into its production and its distribution.

Senator Spooner at that time made a suggestion. He said he was not sure, but he thought possibly this company ought to furnish gas at $1 a thousand. It furnishes it now at 90 cents, and I have no doubt that many of the men who are in this body now will be here when a still further reduction is made, because it is the purpose of the Committee on the District of Columbia, over and over again expressed, to see that public-utility corporations in the District of Columbia shall deal fairly with their patrons; that they shall furnish whatever they are supplying to the public at a reasonable cost. There never has been any disposition on the part of the committee, as a whole or any member of it, to do otherwise than to deal fairly between the corporations and the people of this capital city of the Nation, and that I shall continue to do, no matter what criticisms may be made as to my conduct.

Mr. President, there is very much more that might be said. Questions have been raised that can easily be answered; but, as I said before, this question, after all, is one of jurisdiction, and I am content to have the motion put to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I know nothing of the merits of the question involved in the subject-matter of this resolution, but there is also a question involved in this resolution which affects the method of procedure of the Senate, and which I think deserves the attention of all Members of the Senate. This resolution as originally introduced was simply to the effect "that the Attorney-General of the United States be requested to inform the Senate what legal authority, if any, exists for the present capitalization of the Washington Gas-Light Company, a corporation existing and doing business in the District of Columbia, and what legal authority, if any, exists for an increase of the present capitalization of said corporation." That was merely a resolution of inquiry, of which we have two or three almost every morning. It required on its face no reference to a committee at all. It was simply a request for information from the head of a department, and nothing else. It goes to a committee, as some of those resolutions sometimes do. It comes out of that committee with the original resolution effaced and a new resolution substituted. It is a complete substitution, in the nature of an amendment.

The new resolution is a totally different resolution. It provides for an investigation by Congress of a corporation in the District of Columbia. That may be needed or may not be needed. I know nothing of the facts in regard to it. But the new resolution involves a matter which is distinctly within the province of another committee. On that there can be no question.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator explain what province the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia has, if any?

Mr. LODGE. Its theoretical province is the organization of corporations. Its actual province is none.

Mr. BAILEY. It is to furnish a chairmanship.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; to furnish a chairmanship, and that is all it has ever been.

Mr. GALLINGER. To furnish a chairmanship to a minority Member.

Mr. BROWN. It is one of the standing committees of the Senate, is it not?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. BROWN. And a subject-matter referred to that committee by the Senate would give the committee jurisdiction of that subject-matter, would it not?

Mr. LODGE. Not necessarily, if the Senate chooses to reverse it.

Mr. BROWN. It would not?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One moment, Mr. President. I believe I have the floor. My point is not the point the Senator from Nebraska is discussing. My point is that here is a resolution which calls for information from a department; it goes to a committee and comes out transmuted into a resolution for a sweeping investigation of a corporation in the District. Now, that investigation may or may not be necessary; I do not pretend to say; but if it is necessary, it certainly belongs to the committee which ever since I have been in the Senate has had that matter in charge. To take this away from the District of Columbia Committee—a new subject, which was not in the resolution in the least as the Senate referred it to the Committee on the Organization of Corporations in the District of Columbia—would be a reflection on that committee which I have never seen placed by the Senate on any committee of this body.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. The reflection would be on the committee that now has jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least.

Mr. BROWN. It has been given jurisdiction. The proposition is to take it away from the committee. The reflection is on that committee, and not on any other committee.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate never gave the Committee on the Organization of Corporations in the District of Columbia jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this resolution as amended. It never in the world gave it. The Senate gave them jurisdiction over a request for information from the Attorney-General of the United States, and now comes in a totally different resolution, in the nature of an amendment, of which the Senate never gave the committee jurisdiction at any time. We are not taking from that committee any jurisdiction we have conferred. If the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire prevails, we are declining to give them jurisdiction over subject-matter which was never referred to that committee. Now I will listen to the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. I direct the Senator's attention to this fact: The original resolution was, as he states, an inquiry for the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States on the legality of the capitalization of the company.

Mr. LODGE. And that was all.

Mr. BROWN. It further inquired what legal authority, if any, existed for certain certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. LODGE. It did not ask his opinion. It asked for information.

Mr. BROWN. What legal authority, if any, there was for its existence?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. What is the difference between that resolution and this one? That resolution sought the judgment of the Attorney-General to find out certain facts. The resolution substituted sends out a committee of Congress to investigate and find out for itself the facts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I yielded for a question.

Mr. BROWN. The subject-matter is the same. Only the method of getting the information is different.

Mr. LODGE. On the Senator's own statement it is obvious that they are two entirely different propositions. One is a resolution asking information from the Attorney-General. The other is a resolution for an inquiry by a committee of this body. If the resolution had been introduced into the Senate in the form in which it stands in the amendment, it would never have been allowed by the Senator from New Hampshire, or by the Senate, to go to any other committee than the Committee on the District of Columbia—never for a moment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to enter a protest against the new doctrine which the Senator from Nebraska seems to want to establish, that the informal reference to a committee gives it permanent jurisdiction over a subject to which it otherwise would not be entitled, and that the Senate is therefore precluded from sending a matter to the committee which is entitled to jurisdiction over it. Bills and resolutions are offered here every day, and it is very easy for a Senator who prepares a resolution and presents it to ask that it be referred to a particular committee of which he is a member—that has been done many times in the history of the Senate—which committee clearly is not entitled to jurisdiction; and the Senate afterwards, in numberless cases, has exercised the right which was within its power, for I assume a majority of the Senate has the right to control its business, to send it to the proper committee. The mere fact that there was introduced and informally, without discussion, referred to a committee—whether the Senator offering it is a member of that committee is of no consequence—a resolution on a subject which was clearly within the jurisdiction of another committee, as this was, is not conclusive on the Senate. The Senate has repeatedly taken bills away from one committee and properly referred them to another.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. BROWN, Mr. SHIVELY, and others addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield? There are several Senators desiring to interrupt him.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to enter the fact that I have not yielded the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Rhode Island says it has frequently happened that bills referred to one committee are afterwards brought back and given to another committee. That is true; but always with the consent of both committees.

Mr. LODGE, Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. GALLINGER, and others. Oh, no.

Mr. BROWN. Will you find me a precedent where the committee that brought in the resolution——

Mr. GALLINGER. The woods are full of them.

Mr. BROWN. Or that reported the bill lost jurisdiction when it protested against losing it?

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LODGE. To the Senator from Indiana, certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts present a precedent where, after a resolution has been reported to the Senate, the reference has been changed?

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will give me time to look at the RECORD I can find plenty, I think, at this session. It is the commonest possible practice. I have been here a number of years, and I never before heard it questioned.

Mr. BROWN. But over the objection of the reporting committee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I have seen the reference changed here just as I have seen it done in the House.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator may be right, but it ought to be very easy to produce those precedents if they exist.

Mr. LODGE. At this session I have had changed the reference of a bill which I thought belonged to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise only to state that the debate seems to be proceeding upon a misapprehension.

Mr. LODGE. I think not.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is assumed that the committee to which this resolution was originally referred was not the proper committee to consider the subject embraced in the resolution reported by it; and that impression has been given by reciting erroneously the title of the committee. It has been named several times as the Committee on the Organization of Corporations in the District of Columbia. The committee is not so named. The committee is called the "Committee on Corporations in the District of Columbia."

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. So it would seem to have jurisdiction with respect to any matter pertaining to a corporation organized in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE. I was quite aware of the phraseology of the title of the committee. It does not in the least alter my proposition. I am under no misapprehension whatever. My proposition is that to send a resolution of one character to any committee—I do not care how it is named—and to bring out one of a totally different character on a subject which by universal practice has always been within the jurisdiction of another committee, if persisted in will throw into confusion the entire system of doing business in the Senate. We should have an endless contest over jurisdiction in the Senate all the time and every day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I wish simply to call attention to one fact, which is of some consequence, and that is that the Committee on the District of Columbia is divided into subcommittees, and one of those subcommittees is the subcommittee on public utilities, of which the honored Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] is chairman. Having always supposed that we had jurisdiction over these matters, a subcommittee was appointed to consider them.

I will say while I am on my feet, if the Senator will permit me, that had this resolution, in the form it has come to the Senate from the committee, been presented to this body, it would not have gone to that committee without a contest. I should certainly have resisted it to the end. But as it was a mere matter of inquiry of the Attorney-General, I did not care where it went.

Mr. SHIVELY. It is still merely a matter of inquiry.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, not quite.

Mr. BROWN. It will not be if it is referred to that committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. The chairman of the committee resents any such insinuation.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Then I have it not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. You have it not.

Mr. LODGE. You have it not.

Mr. President, this is a precise example of the evil that I saw in this system of doing business—to introduce a little resolution asking the head of a department for information, which goes without objection to a committee, and to have it come out a totally different resolution. It never would have had that reference if it had been introduced originally in the form in which it is reported. It seems to me that is not the proper way to transact the business of the Senate. If the resolution had originally been introduced in the form it is to-day, we could have debated the question to what committee it belonged. But the fact that a committee has jurisdiction of one resolution does not give it jurisdiction of another resolution totally different from it.

What I am contending for is the proper method of procedure in the Senate, and it seems to me we want to observe the proper lines of jurisdiction and to take this entirely new subject, which was not in the original resolution, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, which had no opportunity to say a word about it when the original resolution was introduced, as I said a moment ago, is a direct reflection on that committee, one of the hardest worked and most faithful committees of this body.

The Senator from New Hampshire has been on that committee, as he says, for nineteen years; he has been for many years its chairman, and the Senate knows how laborious that position has been and how faithfully and how conscientiously he has filled that high position and what work he has done for the city of Washington, and, I think, Mr. President, it is most unfortunate that this situation has arisen. I hope the Senate will adhere to its practice of recognizing carefully the lines which mark the jurisdiction of committees and which give to certain large standing committees of the Senate certain subjects for their consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to refer the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLINT (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GUGGENHEIM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], who is necessarily absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have voted in the affirmative. In pursuance of the announcement made earlier in the day, I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER]. I will let the announcement stand for the remainder of the day.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], who is not present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—37.

So the motion to refer was agreed to.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, while the jurisdiction of committees has been under debate, I want to ask for the reference of the President's message of yesterday regarding the fur-seal question to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources. That committee during the past month has had that question under consideration, has held one extensive hearing, and has had communications with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and, I think, has gone into the matter quite fully. I believe that through an inadvertence of the Chair the message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations instead of the Committee on Conservation of National Resources. I should like to ask unanimous consent for a rereference of the message.

Mr. KEAN. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is not at this moment here, but I will say to the Senator from Montana that the Committee on Foreign Relations has had that subject before it many times, and I should object at the present time to unanimous consent. If the Senator chooses, he can enter a motion to discharge the Committee on Foreign Relations from the consideration of the message, with a view to its reference to his committee, and we can dispose of it to-morrow.

Mr. DIXON. Then, Mr. President, I now move that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of the President's message received yesterday and that the message be referred to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources.

Mr. KEAN. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Montana is mistaken in the idea——

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the matter go over. The motion can not be made at this time except by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the consideration of the motion at this time. The motion is entered.

Mr. DIXON. Then I will ask that the Senate take it up to-morrow.

COURT OF COMMERCE, ETC.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6737) to create a court of commerce and to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken, with interruptions, for three hours and ten minutes,

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what his pleasure is, and whether he desires to go on further to-day. He has occupied the floor for a considerable time. Would he prefer to continue to-morrow?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am deeply chagrined in discovering that I am not able to finish my consideration of this bill to-day. I apologize, but accompany my apology with the suggestion that I have occupied a minor part of the time in which I have been technically given the floor. Therefore, if it is the pleasure of the Senate, I would be glad to be relieved at this time, to resume to-morrow whenever the bill is taken up.

[For Mr. CUMMINS's entire speech see Senate proceedings of March 18.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 17, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 16, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following credentials.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA:

This is to certify that at a meeting of the board of state canvassers, held at the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth the 15th day of March, 1910, on an examination of the official abstract of votes on file in that office, it was ascertained and determined that at the special election, held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in March, 1910, for Member of Congress, R. TURNBULL was duly elected a Member of the House of Representatives for the Fourth Congressional District of Virginia for the unexpired term prescribed by law.

Given under my hand and seal of office at Richmond this 15th day of March, 1910.

[SEAL.] B. O. JAMES,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The SPEAKER. If the Member-elect is present, he will present himself before the bar of the House and take the oath of office.

Mr. R. TURNBULL, Representative-elect from the Fourth Congressional District of Virginia, presented himself before the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 19959. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 20480. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 20490. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Vice-President had appointed Mr. PERCY a member of the Joint Immigration Commission on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," in place of Mr. McLaurin, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15816) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1056. An act for the relief of Benjamin Hyde;

S. 1751. An act to amend an act entitled "An act creating the Mesa Verde National Park," approved June 29, 1906;

S. 2984. An act to grant certain lands to the town of La Junta, Colo.;

S. 3792. An act for the relief of the Saginaw, Swan Creek, and Black River band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Michigan;

S. 3793. An act for the relief of the Miami Indians;

S. 5314. An act to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma;

S. 5432. An act to authorize the city of Seattle, Wash., to purchase certain lands for the protection of the source of its water supply;

S. 5629. An act to set apart certain lands in the State of Oregon as a public park, to be known as the Saddle Mountain National Park;

S. 5783. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to vacate certain lands in Oklahoma reserved for a town site, and for other purposes;

S. 6152. An act providing for the allotment of land to the Apache and other Indians under the charge of the War Department, Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., and for other purposes;

S. 6793. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River in the counties of Okanogan and Douglas, Wash.;

S. 6794. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Okanogan River in the county of Okanogan, Wash.;

S. 6965. An act for the relief of Samuel W. Campbell;

S. 7058. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 7090. An act fixing the expense allowance for travel and attendance of United States district judges when necessarily absent from their place of residence on official duty in any other place in their districts;

S. 7096. An act granting permission to certain officers of the United States to accept gifts from the governments of foreign states, and authorizing the Department of State to deliver said gifts;

S. 1021. An act to appoint James B. Ferguson a first lieutenant in the Medical Corps of the Army and place him on the retired list; and

S. J. Res. 24. Joint resolution empowering the Court of Claims to ascertain the amount of the "civilization fund" paid by the Osages and applied to the benefit of other Indians, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 8 OF THE CENSUS ACT.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration House joint resolution 172, a resolution of constitutional privilege.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten gentlemen are present; not a quorum.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The "ayes" have it; the Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Alexander, N. Y.	Elvins	Korbly	Randell, Tex.

Douglas	Jamieson	Patterson
Driscoll, M. E.	Knapp	Pou

The SPEAKER. The call of the roll shows present 282 Members; a quorum.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is not this calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. This is calendar Wednesday; but the Chair desires to hear what the gentleman from Indiana, who addressed the Chair, has to say. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration House joint resolution 172, a resolution of constitutional privilege, which resolution I believe to be in order to-day under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 172, enlarging the scope of inquiry of the schedules relating to population for the Thirteenth Decennial Census.

Resolved, etc., That the schedules relating to population for the Thirteenth Decennial Census, in addition to the inquiries required by the act entitled "An act to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved July 2, 1909," approved February 25, 1910, shall provide inquiries respecting the nationality or mother tongue of all persons born in foreign countries.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the period at the end of line 10 and insert "and of the nationality or mother tongue of parents of foreign birth of persons enumerated."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not in order——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this being calendar Wednesday, no other business is in order unless calendar Wednesday be dispensed with by a two-thirds vote of the House. I make this point of order not for the purpose of opposing the resolution, but to obtain a decision on this point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that this joint resolution is not in order to-day, this being calendar Wednesday. What point of order does the gentleman from New York make?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that nothing is in order under the rule to-day except the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. Practically the same point of order. The Chair will hear either gentleman on the point of order, or both.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am willing to rest the case on the previous decisions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule, if no gentleman desires to be heard. The Chair reads from the Constitution:

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.

Another clause of the Constitution:

The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States and within every subsequent term of ten years in such manner as they shall by law direct.

That is all that is necessary to read touching the constitutional provisions.

Now, the rule of the House relating to calendar Wednesday is, in substance, that no business shall be in order except the call of committees, unless by a two-thirds vote calendar Wednesday is dispensed with. Now, under the rule of the House it is perfectly clear that a question which is merely made privileged by the rules of the House would not be in order to-day; but this is a higher question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg to call the Chair's attention to another provision of the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will yield presently to any suggestion that the gentleman desires to make.

This joint resolution is called up by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], and upon its face it provides an amendment to the law for taking the census, and especially for the enumeration of the inhabitants of the United States, and that in the opinion of the Chair is a question of privilege that arises under the Constitution. The fixed law of the land—the Constitution—of course overrides any rule that the House might make for its procedure, although it is true that the Constitution empowers the House to make rules for the conduct of its business. The Chair, however, finds that questions similar to this have frequently been brought to the attention of the House, when business has arisen where the rules of the House touching the order of business conflict with the demands of the Constitution, and the Chair will have the Clerk read from a decision made by Mr. Speaker Henderson, as quoted in the Parliamentary Precedents.

The Clerk read as follows:

306. A bill relating to the taking of the census was held to be privileged because of the constitutional requirement. On January 16, 1900, Mr. Albert J. Hopkins, of Illinois, from the Select Committee on the Twelfth Census, reported as privileged the bill (S. 2179) relating to the twelfth and subsequent censuses and giving to the director thereof additional power and authority in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. Charles A. Russell, of Connecticut, made the point of order that the report was not privileged.

After debate the Speaker held—

The question arises by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins], chairman of the Special Committee on the Twelfth Census, bringing in his report.

Were this an original question that had not been passed upon, the Chair might rule differently than he feels constrained to rule at this time.

The Constitution of the United States makes it mandatory upon Congress to take a census of the people every ten years. It also requires the Congress to make an apportionment of the Members of Congress for each State. The Constitution also authorizes the Congress to adopt rules for its procedure.

If this was an original question, the Chair would be inclined to hold that if the House adopts rules of procedure and leaves out any committee from the list of committees whose reports are privileged that that committee would be remitted to those rules of procedure adopted by the House for its guidance. But the Chair finds that a question which the Chair thinks is identical in every particular was ruled upon in the Fifty-first Congress. I quote:

"A bill making an apportionment of Representatives presents a privileged question. On December 16, 1890, Mr. Mark H. Dunnell, of Minnesota, as a privileged question, moved that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill of the House (H. R. 8500) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Eleventh Census. The bill having been read at length, Mr. James H. Blount, of Georgia, made the point of order that under the rule the Committee on the Eleventh Census was not included among those having the right to report at any time such business as would properly come before said committee, and that, therefore, the consideration of the bill at this time was not a privileged question."

The House will see that it could not be more fairly and squarely stated than Mr. Blount stated it.

"The Speaker, Mr. Reed, being in the chair, overruled the point of order, on the ground that a bill making an apportionment is a privileged question, and, it being a constitutional duty imposed on Congress, the consideration of the bill was clearly a privileged question."

At that time the Fifty-first Congress had its Committee on Rules, and probably there never was one more active than the Committee on Rules of that Congress. It was equipped with all the rules of procedure, and yet the Committee on the Eleventh Census was not clothed with the power to report at any time. Now, the Chair is unable to see any distinction in principle between an apportionment bill and a bill for taking the Twelfth Census. The Chair has examined this bill. It is amendatory of the act which we passed in the last Congress for taking the Twelfth Census. It is supplemental to that act. It contains simply provisions for taking the Twelfth Census, all in the same line, and all required by the Constitution.

If the decision made in regard to the consideration of the apportionment bill was sound law, it seems to the Chair clear that it ought to be a sound ruling that this is privileged. The Chair thinks gentlemen of the House will all agree that when decisions are made it is well, unless they are clearly in abuse of the rules of the House, that these precedents should be followed. It is a guide to all Members and will aid them in their work.

Now, when the bill for the Twelfth Census was first brought up the gentleman in charge of the bill, the same gentleman as now presents this, offered it as a privileged report. The Speaker did not rule upon it. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] reserved all rights against the bill, saying that he was not clear that it was a privileged bill at all, and with that reservation the bill was considered as introduced in the House, to be printed for the information of the House, and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, gave notice that he would call it up the following Monday.

That being suspension day, it was passed under suspension of the rules, and the suggested questions of the week before, or some days before, were not passed on. But the Chair is clearly of the opinion that the decision made in the Fifty-first Congress is sufficient warrant for holding this to be a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that there are still other authorities analogous to this precedent, namely, decisions by Speaker Reed and by Speaker KEIFER, and the Chair has just caused to be read the ruling made by Speaker Henderson. The examination of the precedents shows that a certain class of business, like election cases, like matters arising in impeachment, and like legislation relating to apportionment or the taking of the census as to the population, have invariably been admitted as involving constitutional privilege, presenting a privilege higher than any rule of the House would give. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in order that the proceedings may be in order, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair and ask to be heard.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the Chair to suspend decision for a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can be heard on the appeal.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Unless it is moved to lay the appeal on the table, and then I could not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, but the gentleman from New York is one of the gentlemen who made the point of order. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not do that at present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if I had been recognized before the Speaker made his ruling, I should have called his attention to this fact: In all those rulings which accord privilege to bills presented as the result of a constitutional mandate, the basis on which they were given privilege has invariably been this, that if they were held to be unprivileged it might be impossible at the end of a session, for instance, for the House to perform its constitutional duty, owing to the fact that other bills had the right of way. In short, there might be no opportunity for the House to consider a bill which was presented in response to the constitutional mandate. Such rulings are predicated on the existence of a very different situation. The denial of privilege to bills of this class merely on calendar Wednesday would result in no situation such that the House would be prohibited from performing its constitutional duty, unless, perchance, we were to adjourn sine die to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair interrupt the gentleman from Massachusetts for a question? The gentleman said if this was the last day of the session, or the next to the last day of the session, it would be in order. Why? Because of the direction of the Constitution. Then, if it is in order then, why not in order at any time; and how does the Chair know but that the House and the Senate may adjourn without day during the present legislative day?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Why, Mr. Speaker, that case is almost as conceivable as to suppose that it would take two years for the House to organize, and yet no one would suppose that it was in order to proceed with this measure before the House was organized. I am putting the case as a practical question. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that under the present rule the situation is entirely different from what has existed heretofore. The gentleman from Indiana reported his bill on yesterday as a matter of privilege. He was entitled then to call it up; it was in the possession of the House. He did not exercise his right to call the bill up, but permitted it to go over until to-day. The House is given power under the Constitution to make its own rules. It has not made a rule which says that this bill can not be considered on Wednesday, but it has provided means by which the bill can be taken up, should the House desire to consider it.

If the ruling of the Speaker is logical that this bill is in order, will the next ruling be that the question of consideration can not be raised against the bill because the House is charged with the constitutional duty of enacting this legislation and must consider it, whether it will or not?

The SPEAKER. If the Chair may suggest, in reply to the gentleman, it is always in the power of the House to consider whatever matter it may choose to consider, even in impeachment cases or election cases, or cases like this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is also true that the House could provide, on questions of consideration being raised, a bill should not be considered unless two-thirds of the House voted to consider the bill, and not a majority, as now required under the rule. If that be conceded, then this rule which provides for calendar Wednesday makes no other provision except that a motion to proceed to some other business, different from the business provided for on calendar Wednesday, can only be proceeded with in the event that two-thirds of the House vote to consider it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman contend that no business can be presented to the House on calendar Wednesday except the call of the calendars without dispensing with that call by a two-thirds vote?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my contention; yes.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman came into the Hall of the House this morning, the gentleman being slightly delayed by good reasons, we had already transacted other business, being the swearing in of a new Member from Virginia. Would the gentleman contend that under the calendar Wednesday rule the swearing in of a new Member was out of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not consider that that is business in the sense in which the rule operates.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly; it is business; decidedly business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the question of consideration could not have been raised against a Member to take his oath as a Member of this House.

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. It is a matter of high privilege.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has a right to take his oath when he pleases or demands the right.

Mr. MANN. He may take his oath to-morrow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but he took it to-day.

Mr. MANN. And he has the right to take his oath to-day, notwithstanding any rule of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not at all on all fours with this question.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York permit a suggestion from the Chair right at that point? In the Roberts case, the gentleman will recollect, hours and days were consumed touching the question of administering the oath to the man who had the certificate, and some such question is possible to arise in every case, or it is possible for some other question to arise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I recollect the Roberts case. A Member of this House, on his responsibility as a Member of the House, asserted that Mr. Roberts did not possess the qualifications required in order to entitle him to be sworn as a Member of the House, and the Chair directed that he step aside until that question be determined. That is because the House has the constitutional right to determine the qualifications of its Members. This is not at all a similar case. Here is a bill upon the calendar of the House. It is not a question as to whether the House shall consider it, but a question as to how the House shall proceed to consider it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York will allow me to interrupt, I would suggest to him that the rule provides that by a two-thirds vote calendar Wednesday can be set aside, and therefore, of course, it can be set aside by unanimous consent, as it was when the gentleman from Virginia was sworn in a moment ago. The fact that it can be set aside by a two-thirds vote necessarily carries with it the right to dispense with it by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York will again indulge the Chair, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TURNBULL] did not take the oath by unanimous consent. The oath could be administered even in the absence of a quorum, because, perchance, the presence of the Member might make a quorum, and probably the taking of the oath could interrupt a roll call; and yet any question touching the eligibility of a Member might arise which would consume all of calendar Wednesday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Speaker will allow me to make this suggestion, the question was not raised when the gentleman from Virginia took his oath. Although unanimous consent was not asked, the oath was administered to him by unanimous consent, because no one objected.

Mr. MANN. Suppose somebody had objected, would it make any difference?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not disposed to go into that proposition now. I simply say there was no precedent established here when the gentleman from Virginia took the oath, because no one objected.

Mr. MANN. There was no precedent established, of course—that is, that is binding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The question of a Member taking his oath of office is not at all analogous to the present situation. Here is a bill upon the calendar——

Mr. MANN. Supposing it were an election case and we were considering the right of a Member to a seat on the floor of the House. Suppose it were an election case and two-thirds of the House determined that it would not consider the election case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, but two-thirds would not be called upon to determine that.

Mr. MANN. Suppose it were an election case involving the right of a Member to a seat in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, under the rule the question of consideration need not be put unless demanded. The House could provide by rule that no bill could be considered in the House unless two-thirds of the Members of the House, upon the question of consideration being raised, should vote to consider the bill. No Member can have his right to a seat tested in the House if a majority of the House refused so to vote, although it is his constitutional right to sit here, if he be properly elected.

Mr. MANN. He has the right to present his matter to the House and have a vote either upon the question of consideration or upon the question of admission as a Member.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And so has the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] the right to bring this bill up under the rule, to move to dispense with the proceedings under the rule for the establishment of calendar Wednesday, and he would have had five minutes within which to state to the House the object of his motion. Unless he can obtain the vote provided by the rule, he is not entitled to have his bill considered.

Here is the beginning of the movement to break down calendar Wednesday. Here is the entering wedge to be followed up by some other constitutional claim, I suppose an election case, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand, the Constitution imposes upon Congress the duty of making appropriations to defray the expenses of the Government. Would not an appropriation bill be given precedence over calendar Wednesday?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the duty of Congress to provide the means for the Government to exist. I submit it is as high and as important a duty as is the duty to provide for an enumeration. If no enumeration were taken, the Government would not cease; Members would still be elected under the existing law; but if no money were appropriated to carry on the Government, I know of no constitutional means by which money could be obtained except by a vote of the Congress.

This is an ingenious suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana—that he with this particular bill can come in and break down this rule. There is no rule, Mr. Speaker, which prevents the gentleman presenting his bill to the House in order, and there is nothing in the Constitution to prohibit the House from requiring not only a two-thirds but a three-fourths vote to consider certain matters. I submit that if this day is to be maintained as it should be for the benefit of the House that the rule should be enforced rigidly and kept as the Speaker has been keeping it, declining even to permit, as he did not long since, the gentleman from Missouri to inquire whether a bill was properly upon one calendar instead of another. Mr. Speaker, simply desiring that this calendar Wednesday be maintained for the benefit of the House, so that Members may have this opportunity once a week, with the exception of the last two weeks of the session, to consider the bills upon the calendar, and hoping to keep the rule in that form, I shall vote to reverse the ruling of the Speaker. Now I wish to yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. How much time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Ten minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama ten minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am very much opposed to the ruling of the Speaker in this case and hope the House will reverse the decision of the Chair, because I believe if the decision of the Chair is adopted as the ruling of the House in this case calendar Wednesday will pass away and be of no more benefit to the House than is the original right to call the calendar. The reason you could not do business under the old rule on the call of the calendar was that the chairmen of committees, under direction of the Speaker or the Rules Committee, could inject between the House and the calendar other business that they denominated as privileged business, and your calendar was gone. Now, the House, in its wisdom in adopting the rule for calendar Wednesday, said that this calendar Wednesday should not be interfered with except by a two-thirds vote of this House. That does not mean a ruling of the Speaker; that does not mean a decision of the Speaker as to whether a matter is privileged or is not privileged. It means a vote of two-thirds of the Members of this House. If the gentleman from Indiana had brought this bill into the House on some other day besides calendar Wednesday, could not the House have rejected the consideration of his bill by a majority vote? Then, if the House can refuse to consider a question of taking the census or relating to the taking of the census on any day of the week, why can not it by its rule say it shall not be in order to consider it on one day in the week? If it is in order because it is privileged to consider this bill because it relates to the taking of the census, it is equally in order to consider to-day a bill raising revenue. Does not the Constitution of the United States fix the duty on Congress and on this House to consider all revenue bills? Is a bill to take the census of any more vital import to the people of the United States than a bill to raise revenue to support the Government? Is it of any greater privilege or has it been considered of any greater privilege in the history of this House? Not at all. And therefore if this House to-day votes to sustain the Speaker and recognize the bill of the gentleman from Indiana as privileged, and thereby set aside calendar Wednesday, you open the door to inject between you and the call of the calendar an appropriation bill, a revenue bill, and other matters of privilege that will destroy the rule you adopted in the last session of Congress for the benefit of this House.

Therefore I say it is of the utmost importance that the membership of this House shall, when the roll is called to-day, declare whether they stand for the House to attend to the business that the House thinks should be considered, or whether they intend to go back to the old system and allow the Rules Committee to say to you what business shall be transacted in this House.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER]. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has forty minutes remaining.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like ten minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish the gentleman would make it five minutes, because I wish to yield to other gentlemen. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, we have had a great deal of talk on one side of this question. I am not going to undertake to argue the primary question—that is, that this is a privileged matter under the Constitution of the United States, for that seems to have been settled by the uniform line of decisions running through the history of Congress. So the question comes now as to whether that settled question is to be set aside by a mere rule of the House, which rule is only to facilitate certain bills that are already on the calendar to be considered in the ordinary course, but leaving to committees on Wednesdays the right to select certain bills and call them up. The argument that it would set aside the rule should have no weight. This calendar Wednesday rule, they say, can be set aside by a two-thirds vote only, but I claim, if the Constitution comes in, standing for a right higher than any rule the House can make, the calendar Wednesday rule does not need to be set aside. The rule itself, they say, was intended to prevent a majority of the House from doing business on Wednesday. That is to say, if a majority in the House desires to consider anything, the rule shuts it out and requires a two-thirds vote to do anything on Wednesdays save as the rule provides. So, they say and claim that this rule stands higher than the Constitution; that it takes the place of it, and unless something more than a majority of the House desires to set the Wednesday rule aside, we must go on under it regardless of consequences.

One gentleman on the other side, I believe the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], says that the Speaker violated the rule, technically, to-day when he swore in a Member of this House. That is exactly wrong in every respect. It has been held from the beginning of our constitutional Government that it was the duty of the Speaker at any time an application is made to him by a person who claims to have been elected to this House, and with proper credentials presented to him, to swear in as a Member of this House, unless—and this is the one and only qualification, and has over and over again been so considered—the House by a majority vote directs the Speaker not to do it. That has happened in the organization of the House frequently. After a large majority of the House has been sworn in, it has been attempted to ask the Speaker to refuse to swear in other Members, but he has stood on what is his constitutional duty, namely, to swear in all the Members on the roll unless a majority of the House directs otherwise. So that in the organization of this House the Speaker did his constitutional duty to-day in swearing in the Member, regardless of the calendar Wednesday rule.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like a little information, if the gentleman will yield for a question.

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like it if the gentleman from New York would give me five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Constitution provides that Congress must raise revenue. The Ways and Means Committee is the committee charged with that duty. Under the Constitution, would a report from the Ways and Means Committee set aside calendar Wednesday?

Mr. KEIFER. Not at all. That has nothing to do with the question at all. Generally the Ways and Means and the Appropriations committees have, under our rules, the right to take up business reported by them as privileged.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are both constitutional.

Mr. KEIFER. The Constitution says that revenue measures shall originate in the House.

Mr. MANN. The Constitution does not say that the Constitution shall raise revenue. It provides the power for raising revenue. In one case it shall do a thing, and in another case it shall have the power to do it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is practically the same.

Mr. KEIFER. The Constitution and the whole organic power of the Government are vested in the Congress, and there are various things that are essential to its life that Congress may do.

But the Constitution does not direct that they shall do all these things, as it does on this particular matter of the census.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Would it be in order to raise the question of consideration on this measure of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. KEIFER. To raise the question of consideration?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now.

Mr. KEIFER. That is a different question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. No; it is not. That is in order under the rule when we established calendar Wednesday. Would it be in order to raise the question of consideration?

Mr. KEIFER. What do you mean by that?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Take a vote as to whether we shall take up this measure.

Mr. KEIFER. I presume you could do that as to any bill on any day it is called up under any rule.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Would not a majority settle that question?

Mr. KEIFER. A majority would settle it; but that question could not, or need not, be taken up in the case we are considering until it is found whether the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana is in order. The claim of gentlemen on the other side is that it can not be in order under this rule, although the Constitution gives it a privilege and right over the rules of the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One other question. Does the decision of the Chair settle the question of consideration?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no; the Chair has entertained an appeal, and we are going to decide it by the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it not by rule really that the question of consideration can be raised?

Mr. KEIFER. I think that is a common rule with reference to any measure that comes up before the House rightfully, but still the House, the question of consideration being raised, might decide not to consider.

Mr. GARRETT. But under the rule the right exists?

Mr. KEIFER. I think you may say that under the rule, but what particular rule I have not in mind, but certainly that has been the practice.

Mr. GARRETT. Well, now, if this be a question of high constitutional privilege, the gentleman has said the question of consideration can be raised, and that it can only be raised under the rule. If this be a question of high constitutional privilege, why does it not overcome all the rules?

Mr. KEIFER. The answer to that is very simple. The House always decides, and by a majority, whether at any particular time it will consider a measure, although of the highest right or privilege to come before the House.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the gentleman will permit me, the constitutional provision under discussion seems to be section 3 of Article I of the Constitution, which provides for the enumeration of the census each ten years. Congress has already passed a law making provision for taking the census.

Mr. KEIFER. I thought the gentleman was going to ask me a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. This is the basis of it. This particular resolution simply provides for some other subject of inquiry in connection with this census.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I have not the time——

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If this resolution is in order to-day, I would like to ask the gentleman whether we may not be confronted here on every calendar Wednesday for the remainder of the session with some other resolution asking as to some other thing pertaining to the enumeration of the census?

Mr. KEIFER. You may ask the chairman of the Committee on the Census whether such an absurdity is likely to be worked out, and whether his committee would be responsible for such a proposition.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Would not such a resolution be in order under your contention?

Mr. KEIFER. Why, I am talking about what is presented; I do not attempt to determine things that are absurd and not presented.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Supposing a resolution declaring war were brought up as a matter of privilege, does the gentleman believe that that would be really within the prerogative of Congress? It could be in order regardless of the rule on calendar Wednesdays.

Mr. KEIFER. It might be said it would be the duty of Congress to set aside all its own rules and exercise that constitutional power given Congress to declare war—one of the powers that is specially vested by the Constitution in Congress. I have not undertaken, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the constitutional question that the gentleman on my right suggests, because that has been over and over discussed and uniformly decided one way, and the Clerk has read, at the instance of the Speaker, precedents sufficient to settle that question, unless we are going to reverse every former decision. The right of measures relating to taking a census has always been recognized as a constitutional right and duty cast on Congress, and such measures have uniformly been held privileged by virtue of the Constitution of the United States, and not to be set aside by any mere rule of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is exceedingly unfortunate that the gentleman from Indiana has on this day injected this controversy into the House. I have read his resolution very carefully, and I find it provides for something to be done which is not at all essential to the taking of the census. The constitutional requirement for taking the census has been met by enactment of law, and if this immaterial provision can displace the regular order to-day, on another Wednesday the gentleman or some one else may offer something similar, and calendar Wednesday will be no more. If this is such a constitutional question as takes precedence of this day's regular business, then bills appropriating money for taking the census and similar matters will be in order, and means for destroying calendar Wednesday will be always at hand.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it will be a great mistake for the House to allow the presentation at this time of a proposition not at all closely connected with such a taking of the census as is commanded by the Constitution, and then to let the Speaker, following a line of precedents established under other rules, decide that such a remotely related constitutional matter may displace the existing rule. For myself, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that this rule has been a most wholesome one, and under it more business has been considered in an orderly and careful manner than has been considered in the same length of time during any other Congress of which I have been a Member.

It appears that Speaker Henderson himself had some doubts about its wisdom when he made his ruling, because he said if it had not been for the precedents the Chair might have decided otherwise. But, Mr. Speaker, if we are to be governed by precedents, it is time we established a right precedent in this matter, in order that questions of this kind hereafter may be properly considered. [Applause.]

I do not believe we ought to import into this day's business foreign matters, and let this wholesome rule be dispensed with on such grounds. Therefore I believe that, inasmuch as the unfortunate question is before us, we should settle it right and should maintain calendar Wednesday. Nobody in this House thinks for a moment that the taking of the census or the law to provide for it is going to be interfered with by putting this matter off a day or two. It is in order under this very rule when that committee is reached.

There is no question about what this means, gentlemen. It means an end to calendar Wednesday if the decision of the Chair stands. This House can not afford to take the position, after it has operated under it so satisfactorily, of nullifying it. Therefore I hope that the decision of the Chair will not be sustained.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has not yielded the floor.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire recognition in my own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has the floor, and his hour has not expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I want to be very frank with the House. I do not wish to take an undue amount of time myself, nor do I wish to prevent a fair discussion of the question. I do desire to reserve the right to close the debate, and I believe I should have that right. I may want five or ten minutes to do so. I am perfectly willing to permit the gentleman to be recognized in his own right, and trust that no Member by demanding the previous question will deprive me of the opportunity later to close the debate on the question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that this resolution is privileged under the Constitution of the United States, because it relates to a duty that the Constitution expressly requires Congress to perform every ten years. There are a number of decisions settling that question. There is not a single one in the parliamentary history of this country to the contrary.

If this resolution is not privileged to-day, it has no privilege at all. I want the membership of the House to bear that proposition in mind. If this resolution does not go through to-day, it can not go through, because if it has any privilege at all, it is not under the rules of the House but in spite of them. If it has any privilege at all it is under the Constitution; and if the rules are higher than the Constitution to-day, they will be to-morrow, and every other day of this session of Congress. There is no use in quibbling about this proposition.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In a minute. The House is confronted with the proposition as to whether this important resolution, bearing directly upon the population schedule, shall be considered as a privileged resolution notwithstanding the House rules, under the Constitution of the United States. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas for a question.

Mr. SCOTT. Would the failure to adopt this resolution interfere in any material way with the taking of the census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would deprive the census of a great portion of its scientific value. I do not know whether the gentleman is aware of the fact that a great many organizations of men of foreign birth all over the United States, Bohemians, Poles, Finns, Lithuanians, Slovaks, Croatians, Hungarians, I do not know how many, but probably half a million, have petitioned Congress asking for this amendment of the population schedule, in order that they might be classified according to nationality or mother tongue.

Many of them lived in provinces now under the Czar of Russia. Under the law as it is they will be classified as Russians. Irishmen will be classified as Englishmen. Do you want to do it? Will the House refuse an amendment that provides for this important and, from a scientific and sociological standpoint, this very valuable classification of foreign population?

Mr. SCOTT. That is not a part of the constitutional mandate. The constitutional mandate goes only to the question of enumerated population.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But we have a population that is an apportionable population; we have a population that is a taxable population; and it has been decided by the Speakers of the House of Representatives to be privileged under the Constitution for so long a time that it almost seems to me a waste of time to discuss the question on its merits. The question is settled by a long, unbroken line of precedents.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Could the gentleman not bring this up to-morrow?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I could not. If it is not privileged to-day it will not be privileged to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Could not the gentleman ask to have it considered to-morrow?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What would be the use? If the House decides that it is not a privileged resolution, anybody who made the point of order against it could keep it out. I will tell the gentleman why it is not privileged to-morrow. If it has any privilege at all, where does it get it? It gets it from the Constitution. It is not privileged under the rules of the House. If it has no privilege to-day in spite of the rules, would it have any privilege to-morrow in spite of the rules? The Speaker would not be justified in recognizing the gentleman in charge of the bill to call it up.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The decisions of the Chair have held that it is privileged under the Constitution; and have they not always treated it as privileged under the rules in the matter of taking it up the same as any other privileged matter in the House?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; because the Speakers have held that this class of bills is privileged under the Constitution, which is higher than any law or rule which Congress may adopt.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It gives it no privilege over any other privileged report.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I say this, and I want the House to know what it is doing: If the House overrules the Chair on this decision, it decides that this legislation is not privileged to-day, to-morrow, or at any other time. It decides that this bill can not, as a practical proposition, be considered in time to be available for taking the next census.

I want the responsibility for the defeat of this bill to be properly located. I do not want any Member to mistake or misunderstand the responsibility he takes in relation to the important question now up for consideration. I will yield now to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I have this to say, that I should like to have this resolution considered, and I know that a great many other Members of the House would like to have the resolution considered. At the same time neither I nor many other Members with whom I have talked are in favor of dispensing with calendar day to-day, but we would be glad to have the gentleman bring the matter up any other day.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I want to say that the gentleman from Illinois can not relieve himself from responsibility in that way; that kind of talk does not relieve the gentleman from Illinois from his share of responsibility of defeating this legislation. [Applause.] I want him to know it now.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. If the gentleman brings the resolution up some other day than Wednesday he will get it passed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the House decides that it is not privileged to-day, I can not bring it up on any other day.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. The gentleman can, if he wants to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman can not, if he wants to, under the rule. Now, the talk about undertaking to defeat calendar Wednesday I do not have much respect for, because if the author of the calendar-day rule had not taken an appeal this bill would have been out of the way in five minutes. I do not believe there is any opposition to it in the House. It looks to me more like an attempt to use calendar day to defeat the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Indiana says that he has gone into the history of the rulings on the matter of bills like the census bills introduced in response to a constitutional mandate. Did I understand him to say so?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I stated that there was an unbroken line of decisions holding that census bills are privileged.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. So I understood. That being the case, did the gentleman go back and see that all of those rulings were based on this proposition, to wit, that if the privilege were not given to bills of this sort the situation might be such, owing to a crowded calendar, that the House could not act upon it, and that the whole reason for the privilege was in order to make sure that the House should have time to act upon them before adjournment sine die? And now let me ask the gentleman, in all fairness, Is this a parallel case to those on which the decisions were made?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, it does not make any difference, in the first place, as a proposition of parliamentary or of civil law, what the reason for a law is. The question is, Is it the law?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh, no; not in parliamentary ruling.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I must insist upon the privilege of making my own answer. I have had a little experience in the administration and construction of laws. It is not a question of what motive prompted a law. It is a question of what is the law, and it has been settled that under parliamentary law this kind of legislation is privileged. There may have been this motive, that, or the other. No two members of a legislative body need support a bill from the same motives. Motives differ, but when the law is enacted the law is the same, and in administering the law we can not go back and inquire about the motives of the members or of the majority of them in passing the law. All the administrative officers can do is to determine what has been done, not why it was done, and that question has been repeatedly settled and finally settled.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then the gentleman admits that if this were not analogous to the common law, for instance, it would be worth while taking into consideration what the motives were for the rulings in giving it privilege.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not admit that at all.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman will admit that always in all parliamentary bodies in the world not only the decisions themselves are considered, but the reasons for making the decisions are considered in order to find whether cases are analogous.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not in the construction of a statute.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Always, always!

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The general purpose to be accomplished, of course, is considered in the interpretation of an ambiguous law, but there is no such proposition here. This is a privileged resolution or it is not a privileged resolution, and the question of privilege does not depend upon at what stage of the session of Congress it shall be brought up; it does not depend upon the condition of the calendar as to whether it is privileged or not, because that is a question that nobody can determine.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the gentleman from Massachusetts, there is no lawyer in the House who has had any considerable experience in the interpretation of law who would contend for an interpretation so palpably absurd as to say that a privilege arising under the Constitution shall be made to depend upon the time, the date in a session of Congress when a measure arises, or the state of the calendar. It is privileged or it is not privileged, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman hear me for just a minute?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will listen to the gentleman for a minute.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has a minute yet.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman yield to me at the expiration of fifteen minutes of interrogation on the part of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield to the gentleman in just one minute.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I will give way to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Very well. The gentleman from Massachusetts gives way to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that the constitutional provisions which he invokes do not appeal to me as furnishing any appropriate argument of this question. Neither does his argument of necessity furnish reason for the emasculation of calendar Wednesday. It seems to me, and I ask this question, if we overrule the Speaker will it not be competent at any time for the gentleman from Indiana to move a suspension of the rules in order that this matter may have consideration of the House?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No.

Mr. CLAYTON. Can not the House suspend the rules by a two-thirds vote and therefore bring this measure before the House in a proper and orderly way, without the abolition or, at least, the emasculation of calendar Wednesday?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman has asked his question, and I will say that the gentleman in charge of the resolution can not move any day to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. He can not bring it up on any day.

Mr. CLAYTON. Can not you move to suspend the rules; is it not in order to-day to do so?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not any day.

Mr. CLAYTON. But would it not be competent to do so after we overruled the Speaker on a roll call?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not by any manner of means. A motion to suspend the rules and pass bills is not in order on any day except the first and third Mondays of each month——

Mr. CLAYTON. It is by a two-thirds vote of the House.

Mr. CRUMPACKER (continuing). Two days in a month, and the House could not do so if there should be any objection to it.

Mr. CLAYTON. But a two-thirds vote of the House can, I respectfully insist.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The rule provides that you can dispense with calendar Wednesday by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me answer. The resolution would not be in order if that were done. If it is not privileged now, it would not be privileged then, and the resolution would not be in order. If it is in order at all, it is in order now, and I repeat, and emphasize that fact, that action of the House overruling the decision of the Chair practically settles the question that this resolution is a privileged resolution at any time. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Is it not possible by a rule to provide when a privileged matter should be taken up?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of course the House may adopt a rule, I suppose, that would take up a measure, bill, or resolution at any time.

Mr. PARSONS. Can it not provide that certain matters shall be taken up at certain times? I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that while the Constitution says there shall be a census, it also says that the House of Representatives shall adopt rules.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. "May" adopt rules. Does it say "shall?" It gives the right and power to the House to adopt rules, but it says it shall provide for a census once in ten years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am getting a little bit confused by the number of gentlemen seeking recognition. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT. Could not this be put on an appropriation bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Would it be in order on an appropriation bill?

Mr. GARRETT. What is the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; it would not be in order.

Mr. GARRETT. Why?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because it is new legislation.

Mr. GARRETT. Why is not new legislation in order on an appropriation bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because of the rules of the House——

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; because of the rules of the House.

Mr. CRUMPACKER (continuing). Which keep it out.

Mr. GARRETT. Just so; and this calendar Wednesday is a rule of the House.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And this resolution has no privilege under the rules of the House——

Mr. GARRETT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Under a decision made before there was such a thing as calendar Wednesday it does have privilege. It still has, except on calendar Wednesday.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not under the rules.

Mr. GARRETT. These decisions were made, which were read by the Speaker, before there was such a thing as calendar Wednesday——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of course——

Mr. GARRETT (continuing). And I have no doubt on any other day in the week the gentleman could call it up, and under the precedents it would be in order as privileged.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems to me——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington rises to a question of order. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this question before the House is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state the rule upon which I made the point of order. It is Rule XXV; and I also call attention to the decision cited in the fifth volume of Hinds's Precedents, where it is stated—

It has been held that appeals from decisions of the Chair as to priority of business are not debatable under this rule.

Rule XXV provides that—

All questions relating to the priority of business shall be decided by a majority without debate.

The SPEAKER. That precedent relates to questions of priority of business decided by a vote of the House. This is a question where the priority depends primarily on a decision of the Speaker of the House, subject, of course, to appeal, and under the practice of the House the House itself shall determine as to whether it is to be debated or not, and as to the question of debate it can be determined either by the House ordering the previous question or by a motion to lay the appeal upon the table. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A parliamentary inquiry. I would like to ask if this question is not a question relating to the priority of business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already answered that question and drawn the distinction between the priority of business decided by the House and the question decided primarily by the Speaker, and secondarily and finally by the House on the appeal.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is right in his position that this is a resolution privileged under the Constitution, whether there is anything, or was anything, in the way of calling it up as privileged to-morrow morning instead of on calendar Wednesday?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There was nothing that I know of, but the question is up now, and if the House decides that it is not privileged, of course that decision binds the House and the Speaker to-morrow as well as to-day.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the House should decide that this is not privileged under the Constitution, it would then be in order upon calendar Wednesday, would it not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I beg pardon, but I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. My question was, If the House should decide that this is not a matter privileged under the Constitution, it would be in order on calendar Wednesday, would it not, for consideration?

Mr. KEIFER. It can not get on the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. My question is, if the gentleman is wrong in his position, and the House should decide that this matter is not privileged under the Constitution, then it would be in order upon the call of the committees on calendar Wednesday, would it not?

Mr. KEIFER. If it was on the calendar.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If it is not privileged, then it is in order on calendar Wednesday; but it can only be called up by the Committee on the Census. No other committee can call up the resolution; and, in view of the present condition of the calendar, the Committee on the Census will probably not be reached until after the enumeration of the census is had.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If it is a matter of such prime importance, as the gentleman claims, and it has its position on the calendar Wednesday call, would there be anything under the rules in the way of asking unanimous consent to-day to take this up and have it considered as on the Census Committee call?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Under the rule unanimous consent can only be requested for consideration of bills on suspension Monday.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. But this would be in order upon calendar Wednesday; and is not the question of the particular order of calling the committees one, after all, under the direction of the House?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think not. I want to say this, that it is an emergency bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In just about three minutes. I want to make a brief statement, and then I will yield for a question. I want to state to the House that this is emergency legislation. This is an amendment to the population schedule that is ready now for distribution, and this legislation must go through the House and the Senate without delay or it will be too late to accomplish what it is intended to accomplish. And that is the reason why this resolution was called up for consideration to-day. There was no purpose on my part, and I am sure no purpose on the part of any Member of the House who has any interest in this measure, to have it called up to-day for the purpose of embarrassing or delaying business that is eligible to be called this calendar Wednesday. I do not believe there would be any opposition to the bill at all if it should be submitted to the House. I hoped when it was presented that no objection would be made. If none had been made, five minutes would have disposed of the bill. The reason I did not ask unanimous consent was that it is not usual, I think. In the first place, it is not usual upon privileged propositions, and, in the next place, the custom now is that requests for unanimous consent can only be submitted to the House by the Speaker on suspension Mondays.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman whether he will yield the floor to me for a moment, he reserving his time, to make a motion to suspend the entire matter until to-morrow after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not want to lose control of the floor now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not lose the floor if he yielded. I would yield the floor as soon as I made the motion, so as not to use all of calendar Wednesday on this proposition.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will make the motion.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But that is a debatable motion. Let me ask unanimous consent in connection with this, that the whole question be postponed until to-morrow morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as the House has heard the debate, this is the proper time to consider it, and I shall object.

Mr. MANN. That would include the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that this matter be postponed until to-morrow morning; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not move to postpone an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the House sustain the decision of the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It occurs to the Chair that the House can postpone indefinitely, or to a day certain.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me suggest to the Speaker that the question before the House is the business the House shall proceed to to-day, and it is not within the power of the House to postpone the question until to-morrow what will be in order. The gentleman can not postpone consideration of his bill until to-morrow, because the question as to whether he has the right to call it up to-day is involved.

Mr. HARDWICK. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. The point of order, Mr. Speaker, was this: The gentleman can not move to postpone consideration upon a proposition to wit: This motion to bring up this resolution while the proposition pending before the House is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the sense of the House?" Therefore the motion of the gentleman from Indiana is not in order at this point of the proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The motion to postpone the entire matter would carry not only the resolution, but the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HARDWICK. I submit that the resolution is not before the House.

Mr. MANN. The question now is whether the resolution is before the House. That can be postponed until to-morrow, without losing the rights of anyone, and save part of the day for consideration of the calendar.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can dispose of it right away. The question would be whether it is privileged to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. Under Rule XVI a motion to postpone any question is in order, even when under debate; otherwise the majority of the House could not exercise its will. So the question is on the motion to postpone until to-morrow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry: What is the motion to postpone? There is nothing pending now but an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. It covers the whole matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the Chair that the pending question is the appeal from the decision of the Chair, and that is an entirely different matter from postponing a bill with certain amendments. Now, the motion is made when an appeal from the decision of the Chair is pending, and on the gentleman's resolution which is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. Why, it is not before the House anyway until this matter is decided on. If there had been no appeal, it would be before the House; but it rests upon an appeal. Now, then, it is not before the House until that appeal is decided. It may never be before the House, if the ruling of the Chair is reversed. But Rule XVI provides that when a question is under debate a motion to postpone is in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A parliamentary inquiry. I will ask the Chair to state to the House exactly what the motion of the gentleman from Indiana is.

The SPEAKER. To postpone the pending question until to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, now, is the pending question the appeal from the decision of the Chair or the resolution of the gentleman coming from the Census Committee?

The SPEAKER. The appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the decision on that appeal would determine whether the ruling of the Chair should be sustained. So it postpones the matter until to-morrow if that motion should prevail.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The proposition is not directly a proposition to postpone the bill of the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. It is to postpone the only question before the House, namely, the appeal from the ruling of the Chair and whatever goes with it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. On that motion, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that, this being calendar Wednesday, even a motion to postpone is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move the previous question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that an appeal from the decision of the Chair is not under the rule and practice of the House a "question" within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. FOULKROD. The previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. That is the question pending before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A "question" under the rule is a motion which upon the demand of any Member must be put in writing and read at the Clerk's desk, and no such demand can be made as to an appeal from a decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Well, on all questions that are pending before the House, the real important question of the appeal from the decision of the Chair, that is to determine whether this bill is privileged or not; and the majority of the House ought to have the fullest opportunity to determine either now or any other hour of to-day, to-morrow, or any other time; so that that is the question pending before the House, and the Chair has entertained the motion, and upon that motion the gentleman from Indiana demands the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Several MEMBERS. Division!

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, what is the question?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the previous question, on postponing this question until to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing, and it is in the power of the House to dispose of this motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there was confusion, and I asked the Speaker to state the proposition before the House. Is it on the previous question or on the motion to postpone?

The SPEAKER. On the previous question, on the motion to postpone until to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I hope the previous question will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 233, noes 4.

Accordingly the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on postponing this question until to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. GILL of Maryland, Mr. CLAYTON, and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 121, nays 153, answered "present" 12, not voting 102, as follows:

For this day:

Mr. GILLETT with Mr. TALBOTT.

On this vote:

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. BEALL of Texas.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TENER]. I wish to withdraw my vote in the negative and vote "present,"

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BYRNS, and he voted "present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. FITZGERALD was recognized.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to know if the time occupied by the House in determining this incidental question is to be taken out of the time that I had originally.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order——

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Indiana reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not remember whether I did or not; but if not, I want to reserve it now.

The SPEAKER. The time is gone if the gentleman did not reserve it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the right of recognition goes to the side of the House opposed to the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of any proposition on which to hang a point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thought the gentleman from Indiana proposed to take the floor. If I was mistaken in that, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My purpose was to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unless the gentleman reserved the balance of his time at the conclusion of his remarks, it is too late. Mr. Speaker, believing that the House is thoroughly informed as to the question and that it should act—since those who got the floor through my generosity tried to postpone the action of the House—I will demand the previous question.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from New York will not ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York withhold his motion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the Chair wishes to make a statement, and I will withhold the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withholds the demand for the previous question for the present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard a few moments on the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is a very nice question, in my judgment. When the gentleman from Indiana called up the resolution I made a point of order against it on the ground that this was calendar Wednesday. The rule provides:

4. On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of Rule XXIV, unless the House by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith shall otherwise determine.

Paragraph 4 of Rule XXIV provides:

4. After the unfinished business has been disposed of, the Speaker shall call each standing committee in regular order, and then select committees, and each committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day and on the House Calendar—

And so forth.

The question is whether or not, notwithstanding the rule, any business can be called up on calendar Wednesday except a call of the committees, and if any business can be called up, what business may be called up. It has been ruled that the reports from the Census Committee for the taking of an enumeration are privileged under the Constitution. The Census Committee has no privilege under the rules of the House. It has no privilege like the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Pensions, and various other committees, in reference to its reports. If it has any privilege to call up a resolution from that committee, except in the regular order, like a call of committees, then it has a privilege under the Constitution. The Constitution says that Congress shall provide for an enumeration every ten years. It has been ruled that the report from the Committee on the Census, with a bill for an enumeration, is privileged under the Constitution. It is quite plain that if the Census Committee has any privilege under the Constitution which overrides any rule of the House, then that report overrides all rules of the House.

The Census Committee having no privilege under the rules of the House, if this question arose to-morrow instead of to-day, it would be, Has the Census Committee on a bill reported from that committee affecting a decennial enumeration a privilege of calling up the bill out of the regular order—not under the rules of the House, but in spite of the rules of the House—has it a privilege given to it by the Constitution to present a matter before the House?

So that it is clear that if the committee has any privilege it is not derived from the rules of the House, but is derived from the Constitution, and if the Census Committee has the privilege of calling up a bill from that committee contrary to the rules of the House giving privilege, has it the right to call up a resolution on calendar Wednesday, contrary to a particular rule of the House? The rules of the House provide that the Census Committee can only call up its bill on a call of committees. There is no other method by which the Census Committee can call up this bill under the rules of the House except under a call of committees, or when all of the regular or other business shall have been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. And the point made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], so far as the logic of the situation is concerned, is correct, that the Census Committee having no privilege under the rules of the House to call up its bill out of order, except on a call of committees, it has no privilege to call it up to-morrow, unless it has the same privilege to-day, because if it calls up its bill under the constitutional privilege in spite of all of the rules of the House, then it may call up its bill in spite of the particular rule of the House affecting calendar Wednesday.

Now, it is quite plain, in my opinion, that the provision in reference to calendar Wednesday does not shut out all other business of the House. This morning a Member-elect was sworn in and would have been sworn in on calendar Wednesday in spite of the protest of any Member of the House who did not give an excuse, which excuse would have to be determined by the House; but suppose, for instance, the Speaker of the House should not present himself to call the House to order in the morning of a calendar Wednesday. The Constitution and the rules provide a method of selecting a Speaker pro tempore. That is a business which must be transacted by the House, notwithstanding the rule in reference to calendar Wednesday. It would be easy to amplify some other things that might occur.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite evident from the vote of the House last taken what the decision of the House will be upon this point. I do not regard it myself as of any great importance, except that it is well to have a decision made. There are few constitutional questions which can arise under this ruling which has been made in reference to the census bill. The authority to call up bills under the constitutional privilege, as differentiated from the privilege under the rules, has already been determined in decisions of the Chair in the past. There are few such cases which can arise. It probably would not occur in years to come that as much time will be occupied on the consideration of bills of this kind, privileged under the rules of the House, as has already been occupied to-day in discussing and disposing of the point of order.

But whatever the decision of the House may be, it will, in my judgment, remain without question that this House has determined to give to calendar Wednesday a fair and impartial trial and to preserve to the House calendar Wednesday so long as, in its judgment, it can keep on transacting the business of the country and maintain calendar Wednesday, and I believe that will be forever. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York to yield five minutes to me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with care to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said. I have listened with care to the rulings cited by the Speaker. The rulings cited by the Speaker in reference to matters reported from the Committee on the Census affecting the census were all decided before this House adopted the rule in reference to calendar Wednesday. The rule in reference to calendar Wednesday is a rule that is entirely different from any rule that has ever been adopted by this House before. The rule in reference to calendar Wednesday wipes out all matters of privilege. This House has a perfect right under its rules or by its votes, to say what matters it will consider, and by its rules it has said that on Wednesday it will consider no matter except by a two-thirds vote of the membership of this House that does not come up under the call of the committees. Now, there is no objection to this particular bill. It could go on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It does not affect its privilege, under the old rules of the House, any more than this vote will affect the privilege of an appropriation bill or a revenue bill, but this rule says we are going to set aside a day when every committee of this House may have an opportunity to transact its business, and nobody shall come between the House and the rule except by a two-thirds vote of the House, and if we vote to override the Speaker's ruling on this proposition we establish calendar Wednesday for all time as a right of this House not to be interfered with by any power except a two-thirds vote of the House. I consider it of the utmost importance that we should establish that precedent. The appropriation bills, I am informed, are further advanced than they usually are. It has been demonstrated already that calendar Wednesday does not interfere with the great public business, and if that is the case it is the duty of the membership of this House, who believe in allowing opportunity for a fair consideration of the business of the House, by the will of the House, to override the Speaker and establish this precedent here and now, once and for all time. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Chair wishes to make a statement and I have no desire to interfere with it by a demand for the previous question. I do not know whether the Chair believes I should yield time or simply withhold the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman withholds his motion for the previous question, the Chair will exercise the privilege, which the Chair has almost invariably in the past, of making a statement touching the matter in hand, namely, the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to state to the Chair I desire to demand the previous question, but do not wish that demand to operate to prevent the Chair making his statement. I do not know that it would.

The SPEAKER. The general practice is that the Speaker, either by courtesy or touching questions of order, may be heard from the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the demand for the previous question does not interfere with the opportunity of the Chair to express his views. I intend to demand the previous question, but I wish to say this in response to the gentleman from Indiana: This bill was reported yesterday as a privileged bill. No question as to its privilege was raised. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has stated the effect of overruling the Chair. The question before the House is, What interpretation shall be placed upon the rule? Is it the desire of the House that no legislative business shall be transacted on Wednesday outside of the call of committees, unless the House by a two-thirds vote so determines, or shall this House determine that the rule shall be broken down upon the plea that for one cause or another some question may be of high privilege?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. Suppose a general deficiency appropriation bill were brought in from the Committee on Appropriations containing an appropriation to pay the enumerators who are to take this census. Would the gentleman rise and pretend that, because the payment of these enumerators was essential to the taking of the census, that therefore that appropriation had a constitutional privilege and could be taken up in defiance of the rule? I believe the rule is a salutary one. I do not believe that the time will ever come in the history of the House when an important matter is presented for consideration on Wednesday that two-thirds of the House will not cheerfully vote to consider it. Desiring that this rule shall be fixed in the procedure of the House definitely, so that the mere caprice of a partisan majority will not be able to break it down, I hope that the House will, by overruling the Chair, establish now and for all time the fact that no ordinary legislative business shall be considered on Wednesday unless the House, under the rule, by a two-thirds vote shall determine to dispense with the proceedings under the call of committees. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] a question which has been troubling me somewhat. There are certain matters privileged under the rules and there are certain matters which have from time to time been held to be privileged under the Constitution, and therefore above all rules. Now, we have fixed calendar Wednesday for the exclusive purpose stated in the rule. We have an equal right to fix Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday for special business exclusively. Now, suppose we should do that, how would a question of constitutional privilege get before the House at all?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, when the House amends its rules so that no business can be taken up except by a two-thirds vote on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, I believe it will be ample time to enter into that question. We have this Wednesday, and I believe the House intends to keep it for the business on the calendars.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is a question as to the merit of the rule with which I am in harmony, but the technical question is one of privilege, that applies to this as well as if we had every day set apart for exclusive business.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Indiana had exercised his right under the rule when the House convened, and moved to suspend proceedings under this rule, in order to take up this bill, we would have had that bill disposed of long since, as well as other bills, under the rule of the House.

I ask for the previous question.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood you to say just now that a motion could be made and carried in the House allowing the taking up of this joint resolution under the rule. Is that true?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the rule setting aside Wednesday for the consideration of bills—calendar Wednesday, as it is known—it is in order to move to set aside the bills in order under the rule and take up some other business.

Mr. KEIFER. Is it not required that when you make that motion, to be carried by a two-thirds vote, that you dispense with the whole day?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, that question has not arisen. The gentleman could have had that determined to-day, had he so desired.

I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the previous question now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question, and pending that I ask unanimous consent, if it be necessary—I do not know that it would be necessary—that the Speaker may have whatever time he may desire to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would naturally be recognized to move the previous question.

Mr FITZGERALD. I withhold the demand, if the Speaker intends to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that attention shall be called first to the rule which establishes calendar Wednesday. It reads:

On Wednesday of each week no business—

That is broad and sweeping—

shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of Rule XXIV, unless the House by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith shall otherwise determine. On such a motion there may be debate not to exceed five minutes for and against.

Now, if the rule were to be construed literally, without any exception whatever, whether it be statutory law or the fixed law of the land—the Constitution—that might stand in the way, then nothing else could be done on calendar Wednesday except the call of the committees. Already, with the approval of the House, it has been determined that matters for unanimous consent shall not be submitted to the House on calendar Wednesday. Now, what business does come under this rule on that day—business upon the House or Union Calendar that is not privileged? Privileged business under this rule can not come up on calendar Wednesday, because privileged business has its chance under the rules of the House. Aliunde, under the rule that makes calendar Wednesday, an appropriation bill, which is privileged, would not be in order, and a revenue bill would not be in order.

Now, first, is this census amendment resolution privileged under the rules of the House? No. It is not claimed by anybody that it is privileged under the rules of the House. Well, can it be considered if it is reached on calendar Wednesday? Yes; when that committee is on call. It may be on call in a week, in two weeks, or a month. The Chair is not informed how many days the committees may consume before the Committee on the Census is called.

Is there any way by which this resolution can be considered, except on calendar Wednesday? The gentleman from Indiana rose in his place and called it up; and when called up, it was ascertained to be an amendment to the census law for taking the count of population. The point of order was made that it was not in order to-day because of the rule, which says "no business shall be in order." "But, ah," said the gentleman from Indiana, "this is in order under a higher law than the rule of the House, or, for that matter, higher than a statutory law—under the Constitution." Now, is there any matter in order under the Constitution? The Chair can not submit a motion for unanimous consent to swear in a Member. One was sworn in this morning; and yet a question of the highest privilege, a constitutional question, does not dwell in any rule. If a veto measure should come from the President to-day, would it be in order to receive it? If it is in order to receive it, the Constitution says what shall be done with it. Does the Constitution have to stand aside if a veto measure comes in on calendar Wednesdays? If a Member arises in his place and moves the impeachment of a federal official under the Constitution, would that be in order? The rule says "no business shall be in order." It would not be in order under any rule of the House. If it be in order at all it would be in order by virtue of the fixed law of the land—the Constitution; and in that way has been in order in times of peace and of war during the whole history of the Republic.

The Chair might mention other cases. If unanimous consent can not be asked on calendar Wednesday, as it can not be, if a Member can not be recognized to prefer articles of impeachment, how can it get before the House except as a question of privilege—a privileged question that banks upon the Constitution?

This is claimed to be a privileged question under the Constitution. In what gentlemen have said, it has been likened to an appropriation bill or a revenue bill. But those bills come annually. They have always been held under the rules to be privileged business, but never as presenting a question of privilege. A law touching the census, which is to be taken every ten years, is not a matter of annual occurrence. The gentleman from Massachusetts said the House would take notice that there were other days when this bill could be called up. Other gentlemen have said it could wait its time on calendar Wednesday until the Committee on the Census was called. Yes; provided Congress is in session. "Ah, but," somebody says, "Congress can not adjourn until it gets through its business." That is a matter of argument. This is a question under the Constitution and not a matter of expediency.

The Chair in ruling that this is a privileged question follows a uniform line of precedents wherever the matter has been ruled upon in the history of Congress.

Now, in order that calendar Wednesday may be protected, gentlemen say that the Chair should be overruled and a precedent established that no business of any kind can come up for consideration on calendar Wednesday. "But," says somebody, "what harm can it do?" So far as the Chair is personally concerned, whatever might perhaps be in the mind of one or more Members, seemingly to rebuke the Chair, through pique or otherwise, the Chair cares nothing about a proposition of that kind. If the House sees proper to overrule the precedents and to make this precedent that may come to plague the House in the future, well and good. The House has the power to do it, and the Chair has no feeling of pride or vanity in the premises. "But," says somebody, "is the House bound to consider this question when it is before the House?" No. There is no possible question that can come before the House that it is bound to consider. On the question of consideration, if the point of order had not been made upon this joint resolution, the House could have refused to consider it. That is one way in which the House could have gone on with calendar Wednesday.

Having said this much, if the Chair has succeeded in placing the House in possession of the reasons which caused him to make the ruling he did make, he is quite content, as the Chair must be, with what the majority of the House may do. If the Chair was 4 inches wide and a thousandth of an inch thick, the Chair would feel some gratification if the House should see proper to overrule the Chair upon the point of order that the action of the majority of the House, under its rules, in reversing the present Speaker, would make it plain that he has no more and no less authority than any Speaker who has preceded him, and would set at rest the question whether the Speaker "doth, like Colossus, bestride the world." [Loud applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from New York ready for the question to be put?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 163, answered "present" 13, not voting 100, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the remainder of this session:

Mr. CURRIER with Mr. FINLEY.

Until further notice:

Mr. GILLETT with Mr. RHINOCK.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. STANLEY.

Mr. MCMORRAN with Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

On this vote:

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. LATTA.

Mr. MCKINNEY with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. MILLINGTON with Mr. FORNES.

Mr. OLCOTT with Mr. PAGE.

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. BEALL of Texas.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. CURRIER. I voted "aye," and I desire to withdraw that vote and to vote "present," as I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The decision of the Chair does not stand as the decision of the House. The call rests upon the Committee on Military Affairs.

FIELD GUNS FROM THE STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 10280) to authorize the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to receive twelve 3.2-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining equipment from the State of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. There is unfinished business before the House.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understood that went over by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I think I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard, and the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 10280, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is not here, I will explain the bill. Some years ago the States of Connecticut and Massachusetts each bought of the Government out of state funds some ordnance, the same as described here, for the use of their National Guard. On the change of ordnance by the United States the Federal Government by act of Congress allowed the exchange for Connecticut. This is simply allowing the change for Massachusetts, virtually by increasing the appropriation for their militia funds the amount necessary to provide the guns or other equipment for the guard. It does not discriminate against any other State in the Union for the reason that these two States are the only two that did expend out of their own state funds the money necessary for the purchase of this ordnance necessary for the drilling of their troops.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is simply another way of paying a claim which the State of Massachusetts now has against the Federal Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hardly think it is a claim; it was referred to the Ordnance Department and reported back favorably.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not see why. There are a number of other States that have claims of a similar character growing out of the war and had their claims audited by authority of Congress and appropriations were made for them. I do not think this is a very good way for the Congress of the United States to pay claims of this kind.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the Clerk will read the report in my time, I think it will give all the information that I can give.

Mr. MANN. Then, it will not give much.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is all I have.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. HULL of Iowa), as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10280) to authorize the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to receive twelve 3.2-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining equipment from the State of Massachusetts, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

A similar bill was reported in the Sixtieth Congress by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, and said report is hereto attached and made a part hereof.

[House Report No. 1205, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4781) to authorize the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to receive twelve 3.2-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining equipment from the State of Massachusetts, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill was sent to the War Department for information and remarks, and the following is a report of the Chief of Ordnance and the Assistant Secretary of War on the same:

[Third indorsement.]

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE.
Washington, March 9, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War.

The material herein referred to was sold to the State of Massachusetts on January 1, 1900.

A bill of similar purport to this one, authorizing the department to receive back four 3.6-inch field guns and other pertaining material which had been sold to the State of Connecticut, was referred to this department for remark, and was returned on February 20, 1906, with the following statement:

"It was a patriotic act on the part of this State to purchase the 3.6-inch guns out of its own funds, and although they are now to be replaced without charge to the State with more modern guns, the State is not thereby placed in a position of advantage with reference to other States who are also about to receive modern guns without charge to them, and who had not expended any of their funds for the same purpose. The effect of the passage of the act will be to show recognition of the action of the State by intrusting its militia with an increased amount of military equipments for use in the service of the United States if needed."

The same remarks apply in the present case of the State of Massachusetts, except that the modern guns referred to above as about to be received by the States have now been issued to the State of Massachusetts and to other States.

The bill with reference to the State of Connecticut became a law.

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

[Fourth indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 9, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the foregoing report of the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, in whose views the department concurs.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think the fair thing to the House and to the gentleman from Massachusetts would be to postpone this matter until the gentleman from Massachusetts can be here?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from Massachusetts knew that this was to be taken up as the first bill.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what occasion the State of Massachusetts had to purchase this ordnance?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They purchased it out of their own funds for the purpose of instructing their militia, and after it was purchased and they had possession of it Congress entered on the enterprise of furnishing guns for the instruction of the militia in field batteries, and we carried in the army bill for a series of years appropriations to manufacture guns and ordnance for batteries of field artillery to issue to the militia of all States having light artillery. Now the State of Massachusetts is in the position of having purchased out of her own funds, as did Connecticut, all these guns, while other States had them furnished to them by the Federal Government, and did not expend a dollar of state funds to equip their guards.

Mr. MANN. Has Massachusetts the guns now on hand?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and they have others. Now they want the Government to reimburse them for what they put in in the first instance, the money to go into a fund for the militia.

Mr. MANN. They are now old-fashioned guns and out of date?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, they were bought since 1900.

Mr. MANN. But they are not modern guns?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not answer that.

Mr. MANN. Has not the gentleman read the report of the committee?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; I have.

Mr. MANN. Then, the gentleman knows that they have been replaced by modern guns?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; by later modern guns.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that all breech-loading guns are comparatively modern guns, but the guns referred to in this bill are not the latest.

Mr. MANN. General Crozier reports that these guns are now replaced with more modern guns.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; more modern guns.

Mr. MANN. And now Massachusetts wants us to buy the old modern guns of no value.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But the gentleman will remember that the State of Illinois and the State of Iowa did not buy any guns at all. The Government gave the guns to them for the purpose of instructing the militia. If the gentleman could show that Illinois or any other State had purchased guns out of their own funds and Congress had entered on the policy of furnishing those guns to the States, then I would say that the State of Illinois ought to be reimbursed.

Mr. MANN. The State of Illinois, as I remember, has a number of claims against the Government, some of which may be good and some bad.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But not of this character.

Mr. MANN. It has had various claims against the Government for many years, and so far as I recollect, never undertook to get them paid by giving back to the Government something of no value.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] will yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. The claims the State of Illinois has against the Government arise upon either express or implied obligation on the part of the Federal Government to pay them, but this claim rests on no obligation whatever, no liability. The expenditure was made by the State of Massachusetts voluntarily for the instruction and benefit of our own state militia. That does not create an obligation on the part of the Government if the Government changes its policy subsequently to reimburse the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman must remember that the Government in the case of Connecticut, exactly similar to this, did recognize a strong moral obligation to reimburse the State. In other words, the State expended——

Mr. MANN. How was that bill passed relating to Connecticut?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. By a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. Under suspension of the rules when we were having a filibuster carried on here?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know; whoever made the report on that probably took it up. It has been some time ago, and I do not remember; but it passed and is a law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand that. What was the amount involved in that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I assume about the same as this. I have not looked up the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, surely the State of Connecticut does not expend as much money on these guns——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, if they would buy guns at all they would buy a battery.

Mr. MANN. And every reason that goes to pay this back would apply, would it not, to any expense that any State has been to in reference to its militia?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because they may have gone to an expense in reference to the equipment of the militia that the Congress has never approved of. Congress has approved of this by enacting a law, and appropriations year after year have carried $625,000 each year for full batteries of artillery, to be issued to the States for the use of the militia.

Mr. MANN. And one of those batteries has been issued to the State of Massachusetts under that appropriation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but before that was done Massachusetts purchased this battery, and this is simply putting Massachusetts on the same basis as the other States that have not purchased.

Mr. MANN. Now it is proposed, as I understand it, that Congress shall pay for all the maneuvers of the state militia, and that policy has been adopted to a certain extent. Does the gentleman contend that when that policy is adopted, that means that the General Government is to go back and pay the claims of the States for money paid for maneuvers, five, ten, fifteen, or twenty-five years ago?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There were not any then.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but there were.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no. They were state encampments. There were no such thing at all until six years ago.

Mr. MANN. There may have been no such thing under the law of the United States. I participated in maneuvers more than twenty-five years ago.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Of the state militia?

Mr. MANN. Of the state militia.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There was a special law on that, and that was provided for by law.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is a special law for your state encampments; but let me answer the other question. Congress afterwards adopted federal maneuvers, or joint maneuvers with the Regular Army and the militia, and some of the States exceeded the law and used funds for the joint maneuvers that should not have been used; and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] brought in a bill here, a deficiency bill, repaying those States for the money that was used, and it was not an immoral thing on his part to do so.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that was because of a ruling of the comptroller overruling the decision of the military officers of the Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; the law specifically provided that this money should not be used for joint maneuvers.

Mr. MANN. It may have specifically provided, but more or less was paid out just the same before the money was paid—an entirely different proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under the law, the money had been expended and the comptroller held the money was not legally expended, and the loss fell on the individual officers, and we appropriated to reimburse the individuals who had been held responsible for paying the money; it was not to pay any claim of the State.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This money was appropriated by Congress for use in the States for arming and equipping the militia and for the use of the States in state encampments. It was diverted to general joint maneuvers, and Congress reimbursed them.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Do I understand it to be the object of this bill to reimburse the State of Massachusetts for expenditures which other States were not required to make?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; Massachusetts was not required to make it, but Massachusetts and Connecticut are the only two States I know of that did make it for equipping field artillery in their respective States before Congress adopted the rule of manufacturing field artillery and issuing it to the States for the use of their militia.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Then, the object of this bill would be to put Massachusetts upon the same footing as the other States?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is all.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. That is what I desired to find out.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. How much time?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. About three minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I think there is one suggestion this committee ought to consider before it finally passes on this bill. In arming the troops, both regular and volunteer, it is necessary that the branches of the service in which are these various troops should be considered in the order of their importance as to being furnished with arms. The hardest kind of work is to get troops for and secure arms for the field artillery in the service of the national guard. It is the most expensive part of the volunteer service. It is the hardest work to get men for that service. It is the hardest work to equip them for that service, and, naturally, there is a smaller proportion of field artillery than any other branch of the national guard. So that it is of the utmost importance to encourage the formation in the national guard of field artillery wherever it can be done. It is economy to do it, because we need a larger proportion of field artillery in the Regular Army unless the national guard can furnish their proper quota of field artillery, so that it is a matter of economy to encourage the formation and equipment of field artillery in the national guard. Congress has done that in the past, and it ought to do it. The department has encouraged it, and this bill continues that encouragement by notifying Massachusetts and Connecticut, where they have furnished their own field artillery, that Congress will encourage them to equip their troops with field artillery and with the very best kind of modern guns, and that is what this bill practically amounts to, and for that reason this bill ought to pass.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. The State of Massachusetts is now equipped with modern artillery by the Federal Government.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I presume so; I do not know, but I assume that that is true.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are treated just the same as all the other States are——

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, simply because this bill is for the purpose of giving to the State of Massachusetts an opportunity to recover back or be reimbursed from the Federal Treasury for similar equipment which it brought voluntarily before the Federal Government entered upon the policy of equipping the militia of the several States——

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. This is to take those guns off the hands of Massachusetts—that is just exactly what we do, and it is doing, as I understand, what we can well afford to do, providing these guns for the purpose of equipping the field artillery of Massachusetts, so that such troops may have a higher degree of usefulness.

Mr. TAWNEY. But are not they now equipped with modern guns? I do not say this does not affect the future efficiency of the State of Massachusetts at all, but it is a question of whether we shall pay them $42,000 for some old junk.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No, Mr. Chairman, that is the point. This Congress can well afford to equip these volunteer troops of the States and encourage the States in equipping their troops with the most modern appliances that can be found within a reasonable scope, and that is what this bill proposes to accomplish.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of those peculiar bills that remind me of the description of the "Heathen Chinee." It purports to be a bill to pay for some old ordnance which my friend from Minnesota describes as junk, but is really a bill to appropriate $43,000 more to the State of Massachusetts under the provision in relation to the national guard than she is entitled to in the general appropriation. How does it come about? At the time of the Spanish-American war, in 1898, when no one knew just where the Spanish fleet was, and the newspapers were teeming with reports as to the location of the fleet, there came a time when every man, woman, and child along the New England coast had a chill and a fever regularly every day and every night. No one in Massachusetts but trembled with fear that the Spanish fleet would sail up the coast and attack the coast towns. We all recollect the feeling in the House here.

I remember at that time that the distinguished Speaker of this House was Mr. Reed. I went to him once to get permission to call up a bill to guard the coast through the Live-Saving Service, and he, hating the Spanish-American war as he did, commenced to say some sharp words about some people in Chicago. I reminded him that Chicago was a long way from the coast; that there was no one there who suffered from fear of balls from any of the cannons on the Spanish fleet; but that I understood, in his home town of Portland, Me., no one went to sleep at night without praying God to deliver them from the Spanish fleet. And I was recognized inside of five minutes.

At the end of the war the State of Massachusetts and the State of Connecticut for their own protection, and they are to be praised for what they did, purchased some ordnance, the State of Massachusetts, I suppose, paying out nearly $43,000 for it. They bought the ordnance. It is theirs. They can do what they please with it. They have used it for years, until it is old and out of date, and have now secured from the General Government modern ordnance to take its place. We have already given them new ordnance to take the place of that which they purchased, and we make an annual appropriation, or a permanent appropriation, for the benefit of the national guard. Massachusetts gets a proportion of it, Connecticut gets a proportion of it, and Illinois and other States each get a proportion. Massachusetts wants more money, and now offers to give us this old ordnance, of no value to us and probably of no value to them, in order to increase her appropriation over that to which she is entitled pro rata, and over that which the other States receive. The proposition has no justice in morals. There is no reason why we should give Massachusetts a greater amount than she is entitled to over what we give to Pennsylvania or New York and any of the other States, either along the coast or in the interior. Each one of them would like to have more money. Why should we give Massachusetts, great as she is, the extra $43,000? If she ought to have that money, possibly other States ought to have an additional amount. If there be occasion for giving more money than these States have, give it to them all alike.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, just one word. Section 2 provides:

> That no part of the value of this material shall be paid to the State of Massachusetts, but the whole amount received from the sale thereof to the State shall stand as a quota of the State, the same as though allotted from the annual appropriations under the provisions of section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, and subject to all the conditions thereof.

That is to say, the additional amount does not go into the treasury of the State of Massachusetts, but does go into the support of the militia of the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. MANN. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The original amount was paid out of the treasury of the State of Massachusetts, and if they were patriotic enough to purchase these guns at a time when the Government would not supply them, it does seem to me they ought to have the benefit of their own money in the support of their own militia, under section 1661.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS], if he desires time.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to present to the House a correction of remarks which have recently been made. The State of Massachusetts purchased these guns with its own funds for the purpose of giving its own men—its own militia—an opportunity to drill with modern guns. They had previously been supplied with the old-fashioned muzzle-loading guns, and it was for the purpose of giving the militia a model equipment, so as to keep up the best efficiency that these guns were purchased by the State out of its own funds. It had nothing to do with the Spanish war, so far as protection against any outside foe was concerned. They are light artillery guns, used by light artillery companies and foot soldiers. They could not be used for the defense of harbors. In order to get the militia of the country supplied with proper material, the United States Government is now giving out to the various States equipment of its own. These have taken the place of the equipment that Massachusetts purchased herself, which, being more antiquated, has been replaced by the more modern apparatus authorized by the Dick bill. The passage of this measure would place Massachusetts in the same position she would have been in had she not made this previous appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question there?

Mr. PETERS. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. Did the Federal Government offer any inducement or make any request of the State of Massachusetts to purchase this equipment which has been supplanted by equipment furnished by the Federal Government?

Mr. PETERS. I do not suppose the Federal Government goes about selling equipment to the different States.

Mr. TAWNEY. The equipment was bought by the State of Massachusetts voluntarily, without any suggestion or any inducement of the Federal Government, was it not?

Mr. PETERS. It was bought to equip the state troops with equipment like that which the Federal Government was supplying to its troops, after consultation and with the Government's full knowledge and approval. It was done to promote efficiency under a scheme that met the approval of the War Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. For the benefit of the militia of that State.

Mr. PRINCE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PETERS. I will yield for the gentleman to ask me a question.

Mr. PRINCE. At the time that these guns were bought by the State of Massachusetts to help equip your field artillery, if the militia had been called into war under authority of the President of the United States, these guns would have been a part of the Volunteer Army establishment, would they not, and the guns would have been used in that war?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. And the Government would have received the benefit resulting from the use of those guns by reason of the drill the men received as a part of the militia?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. So it was the reserve line in the militia establishment of the Government?

Mr. PETERS. It was the reserve line. This equipment went to companies which themselves were prepared to enlist, and many of them did enlist, at the beginning of the Spanish war. Before a man can intelligently use artillery he must have some experience in handling it. I am speaking with knowledge, because I myself was in a troop which used this equipment, and I am familiar with the use to which it was put. I know that its use was appreciated, and that the men profited by it. It is a light-artillery equipment, which must be used some time before the men become accustomed to it; and that required drill in handling the guns. Therefore it was for the purpose of bringing the militia up to the highest standard that this purchase was made.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield such time as he needs to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill, and I regret that I have not been here to hear the discussion on it up to this time. I also regret that I turned over the papers in the case to my colleague [Mr. LAWRENCE], who seems to have been called away. However, I want to say that Massachusetts has always been foremost in maintaining its militia service. It had after the Spanish war two batteries of light artillery. Those batteries were equipped with old muzzle-loading guns. Wishing to bring the batteries up to the standard which the War Department proposed to establish, and not being able to obtain guns at that time of modern caliber and modern construction by allotment, because the department had no authority to turn them over to the States, the State of Massachusetts purchased these guns of the Bureau of Ordnance. Later a general act was passed which authorized the Government to furnish all the States with guns similar to the ones that had been purchased by the State of Massachusetts, but not exactly the same gun. Therefore all States which are maintaining militia organizations are on all fours with the State of Massachusetts, having received the guns of modern design and caliber, and the State of Massachusetts has on hand the guns purchased in 1900, for which it paid about $43,000.

Militia services are for national as well as for state purposes, and a State which has been foremost, as the State of Massachusetts has, in maintaining a service up to the highest standard, should be protected when it goes out of its way to equip its forces with the latest guns and the latest equipment.

The State of Connecticut was in exactly the same position in this respect. It did buy some equipment of this kind, and it was authorized to turn it in to the Ordnance Bureau of the army and receive credit for what it cost, and draw against the credit whenever it needed other equipment. That is what the State of Massachusetts asks in this case. It does not ask to be paid back the money which it paid for these guns.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the effect of it.

Mr. WEEKS. That is the final effect.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. So far as the militia only are concerned.

Mr. MANN. So far as the Treasury of the Government is concerned.

Mr. WEEKS. It asks that it be permitted to turn these guns back to the Ordnance Bureau, and that it be credited for their cost, and that when the State needs other equipment to be supplied by the Ordnance Bureau, the cost of the new equipment may be charged against this credit.

Mr. TAWNEY. And to that extent the allotment out of the federal appropriation for the State of Massachusetts is increased over the allotment allowed to other States.

Mr. WEEKS. Out of their own money, I think, that is true.

Mr. TAWNEY. But out of their own money which they expended before the Federal Government entered upon the policy of equipping the militia of the several States.

Mr. WEEKS. I think that is true, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he can state when the State of Massachusetts purchased this equipment from the Federal Government, and when the Federal Government adopted the policy of furnishing this equipment to the several States.

Mr. WEEKS. I think it was purchased of the Bureau of Ordnance in 1900.

Mr. MANN. It says 1900.

Mr. WEEKS. And it was in 1903 or 1904 that the act was passed which authorized the Ordnance Bureau to furnish modern ordnance to all of the States which were maintaining light batteries.

Mr. TAWNEY. There was an interval of about three years intervening between the time the State purchased the equipment and the time when the Government adopted the policy of equipping the state militia generally.

Mr. WEEKS. I should say two or three years.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa what will become of these guns when they come back to the Federal Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They will be held the same as any other guns are held by the Ordnance Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will they still be available for service?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell me what is done with rifles that are discarded by the Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. A large proportion of the rifles that have been superseded by more modern rifles are held by the Government yet. Some of them have been authorized to be sold under condemnation; but as a rule, they are kept as a reserve. A great many of the old Springfields are still owned by the Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do any of these discarded rifles ever get into the hands of parties hostile to the United States?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That I could not tell, for this reason: They are sold under condemnation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are sold in a public way.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are sold at public sale to the highest bidder. What the bidder does with the goods after he gets them is a matter with which the Government does not concern itself, except that under the general law of nations any government purchasing arms to carry on war with another in time of war would be violating international law, as well as the law of this Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The suggestion was made some time ago that arms which had been discarded by the United States had fallen into the hands of filibusters and eventually found their way into the hands of governments that were not very friendly to the United States.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If that was done, it was done in violation of law. There is no way in which you can prevent lawbreaking except by catching and punishing the lawbreakers.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that ought not to pass. There is no obligation on the part of the Federal Government to reimburse the State of Massachusetts for any expenditure which that State made on account of the militia for this purpose prior to the time that the Federal Government entered upon the policy of equipping the national guard of the several States. There was no such policy anticipated. The expenditure was not made in anticipation or because the Federal Government contemplated going to embark upon the policy that prompted the State of Massachusetts to make the investment of $43,000 for the purchase of this equipment.

Mr. WEEKS. Is the gentleman from Minnesota justified in making the statement that such a policy was not anticipated and expected by the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. TAWNEY. There was no bill pending in Congress authorizing the War Department to make the allotments that have since been made under authority of law.

I do not know what may have been in the mind of the War Department at that time, but so far as the policy of the Government is determined by the action of Congress, I say that the State of Massachusetts had no right to expect or anticipate that the Federal Government would enter upon this policy, and therefore the State made the purchase on her own responsibility, voluntarily from her own treasury, for the benefit of the militia of the State of Massachusetts.

I grant you the national guard of that State is advanced, and was at that time advanced far beyond the national guard of other States. That advancement, however, was due to the policy of the State of Massachusetts of equipping her national guard with the best military equipment possible in order to have the most efficient militia possible, and that is what prompted the State to purchase these guns for the use of the National Guard of Massachusetts. The fact that the Federal Government three or four years thereafter adopted the policy of equipping the militia of the several States with modern equipment of that kind does not give the State of Massachusetts the right to come in and claim that she ought to be reimbursed for an expenditure that she made voluntarily, made for the benefit of her own people or for an institution of her own State, namely, the national guard of the State.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any precedent for this?

Mr. TAWNEY. I believe that four years ago Congress passed a similar bill for the State of Connecticut. Now, I do not know the circumstances under which the bill in favor of the State of Connecticut passed, whether it was under a suspension of the rules or not, but I do know that the circumstances under which the reimbursement was made was not explained or was not known to this House at that time.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that the only precedent?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the only justification for considering the proposition to reimburse the State of Massachusetts for an expenditure she made voluntarily for the benefit of her militia or the national guard, without any reference whatever to any policy of the Federal Government, to reimburse her or any reference to any future policy in respect to equipping the militia of the several States with modern equipment.

Mr. KELIHER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. KELIHER. Was the Connecticut proposition similar to the one now pending?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; I understand it was similar, but the circumstances of its passage no one seems to be informed of.

Mr. KELIHER. But it is known that it did pass.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but whether under a suspension of the rules or not I do not know.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important matter now pending before the committee, and I suggest that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BUTLER. There are more than a hundred Members present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members present; a quorum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there was a bill passed in 1906 for the State of Connecticut, providing an appropriation for that State of $12,405.08. The principle was precisely the same in that bill that it is in this bill, although the amount was not quite so large. It apparently did not attract attention. Having secured the payment of $12,000 for the State of Connecticut, here is a proposition to pay $42,000 to the State of Massachusetts, and I notice that this bill apparently never was referred to the War Department.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It was referred, this identical bill, last year, and the War Department reported upon it. It was not necessary to refer the bill again this year.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the present administration of the War Department entertains the same views that the former did or not.

Mr. WEEKS. It is the same Chief of Ordnance who recommends this legislation.

Mr. MANN. The Chief of Ordnance, I beg to say, does not recommend the legislation. There is not anything in his letter which tends to recommend the legislation.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman from Illinois think it necessary to always have an opinion from the War Department or some other department before Congress can legislate on any proposition?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary, but I think it is highly desirable on matters of this sort to have the opinion of the administrative departments. I never have claimed Congress was under any moral obligation, much less legal, to follow the opinion of the departments, but the departments are supposed to express views in reference to such matters.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] says that the passage of this bill will place Massachusetts in identically the same position that the other States occupy. In my judgment, that is erroneous. Under this bill there are two sets of ordnance granted to the State of Massachusetts, as against one set of ordnance granted to the other States.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, the State of Massachusetts has paid for one set of ordnance, of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is speaking, out of its own funds.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman does not want the State to pay for it out of its own funds. The gentleman wants the General Government to give the State of Massachusetts two sets of ordnance, as against one to any other State, to provide the State of Massachusetts with the United States ordnance twice as against once for the other States.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, there is not a word of testimony before this committee that will substantiate any part of the charge made by the gentleman from Illinois. The State of Massachusetts bought this ordnance and paid for it, and now has received ordnance from the General Government just exactly as every other State has, and what it asks the General Government to do now is to take back the ordnance that it bought from it and give a credit, so that other equipment may be furnished against that credit.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman and I do not disagree except in the language that he intersperses in my remarks, stating, in effect, that I do not know what I am talking about [laughter], and I am quite content to leave that to the House. The gentleman's own statement shows that the State of Massachusetts wants to get ordnance twice at the expense of the Government, as I said, instead of once. The State of Massachusetts bought the ordnance from the Government in the first place. It had that set of ordnance. It has now received another set of ordnance from the Government. It now has both sets of ordnance. It has used one until it is too old to be used longer. It has received a new set, and now wants the Government to pay it for the first set. If that is not asking to provide ordnance to it twice, as against only once for the other States, I do not know how to count.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that all that is involved in this bill is the question of whether or not it is just and proper to put the State of Massachusetts on a plane of absolute equality with the other States as to the supply of this material of war. Massachusetts did buy this battery, bought it before the enactment of that statute—No. 1661, I think it is—which provides for the supplying of equipment to the States. Now, if that law had never passed, I dare say Massachusetts would never have been here in the attitude that she is to-day; but it did pass. The other States were supplied with the equipment, and Massachusetts stands in the peculiar position of having bought and paid good, hard cash for what the other States got for nothing, and she asks and this bill provides that the Federal Government shall take back from the state government the equipment she bought and paid for in 1900, and that the money shall be put to her credit in account for other equipment to be supplied in the future as needed. This is simply a question of whether or not we are to do what I conceive to be justice to Massachusetts.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do I understand that in the first instance Massachusetts paid for this battery?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to say that the Government in the first instance had given the State this equipment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No; the gentleman from Nebraska misunderstood the gentleman from Illinois. Massachusetts bought the first equipment, and then, after the act was passed that authorized the ordnance department to furnish such things to the states, Massachusetts received an additional supply.

Mr. HINSHAW. And now she wants to sell back the old ordnance to the United States?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; and put the value of it to her credit, so that other material may be furnished as needed in the training of the state troops.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, when this ordnance was purchased the ordnance was purchased at the standard the Government then gave out. Later the Government gave out a new form of gun, somewhat different, and it was necessary to have the militia of the country equipped with the same weapon. In the equipment of the militia with the present type of gun the guns which had been purchased by Massachusetts in 1900 were rendered more or less obsolete, and it was in order to have the militia all equipped with the latest weapons that the new ordnance was sent to Massachusetts. Now it is proposed to take the money which is to be credited to the State and have it used simply in the purchase of other and new material for the State. All Massachusetts wants is a fair exchange, profitable to both parties.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is hereby authorized and empowered to receive back from the State of Massachusetts the twelve 3.2-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining material which were sold to the State by the Ordnance Department for the sum of $42,423.21 in the year 1900.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I simply do that to call attention to the fact that the bill which was passed on the 2d day of April, 1906, for the purpose of receiving back guns from the State of Connecticut, was passed by unanimous consent. The RECORD reads:

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill authorizing the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to receive four 3.6-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining equipment from the State of Connecticut, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

There was no objection, and the bill was passed by unanimous consent, everybody agreeing to it. I simply wanted to call that to the attention of the committee.

Mr. MANN. No wonder that bill passed on its title, as this bill would if nobody read it.

Mr. HAY. I thought the gentleman from Illinois would have been there and known all about the bill.

Mr. MANN. Unfortunately the gentleman from Illinois was not there; if he had been there, the bill probably would not have been passed, and I doubt even whether the gentleman from Virginia would have supported it if it had not come from his own committee.

Mr. PRINCE. How much money did that carry?

Mr. MANN. Twelve thousand four hundred and five dollars and eight cents.

Mr. KELIHER. The principle is the same, no matter what the amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That no part of the value of this material shall be paid to the State of Massachusetts, but the whole amount received from the sale thereof to the State shall stand as a quota of the State, the same as though allotted from the annual appropriations under the provisions of section 1661, Revised Statutes, as amended, and subject to all the conditions thereof.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think that the language of this section would be clearer if the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and offer were adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would suggest, in section 2, line 1, page 2, to strike out the words "value of this material" and say "the money herein appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the words "value of this material" and insert "the money herein appropriated."

Mr. SLAYDEN. And also an additional line substituting the language describing the material.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, after the word "sale," insert "twelve 3.2-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining material."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The last language, I think, is already set forth in section 1.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is set forth in section 1; yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is only one question I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas, because he and I are in accord, I think, as to the general policy of the matter, and that is, there is really no appropriation here; it is a matter of bookkeeping more than appropriation. The money is kept in the Treasury of the United States until drawn out under section 1661.

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire if the object of this is to kill time?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I am trying to ascertain whether this amendment really perfects the bill or not.

Mr. SLAYDEN. In reply to the question of the gentleman I will say that I think it merely makes it a little clearer as to what is meant by the section, and it provides specifically that the money therein appropriated, instead of saying the money received from the material sold, and so forth, shall not be paid to the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that the bill does not say "money received from the sale of material," but "that no part of the value of this material." It is simply a matter of bookkeeping, and no money passes one way or the other.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have an idea that it clears the section, but if the chairman of the committee, who has given it more attention than I have, feels that it will not, I am willing to bow to his judgment in the matter. It is not important. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Accordingly the committee rose, and Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10280, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 12.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

USE OF UNITED STATES ARMY TRANSPORT.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate joint resolution 83, authorizing the use of a United States Army transport for certain purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 83.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ a United States Army transport to convey from New York to Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic, the delegates and their assistants appointed, under the authority of the urgent deficiency act, approved February 25, 1910, to represent the United States at the Fourth International Conference of American States which is to convene in Buenos Aires on July 9, 1910: Provided, That the total expense thus incurred shall not exceed $45,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] asks unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out the period after the word "dollars," in line 12, and insert a comma and the following: "said sum to be paid out of the appropriation made for the commission in the urgent deficiency act approved February 25, 1910."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the committee amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That has to be adopted by the House before it is a part of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This would take $45,000, possibly, out of the $100,000 appropriation. Does the gentleman have any idea whether there would be a sufficient sum left? As I recall it, the original appropriation that passed the House was $50,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I looked up the law, and it was $100,000.

Mr. MANN. As reported from the Committee on Appropriations it was $75,000. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] made a point of order against the item and it went out. It was agreed to in the House at $50,000 and increased to $100,000. Does the gentleman have any idea as to whether the $55,000 remaining will be sufficient?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I will say this for the benefit of the House, that the Secretary of State in his letter to me urging the enactment of this resolution expressed the idea that it ought to be paid out of the appropriation for the support of the army, and he did not indicate that he desired it taken out of that fund of $100,000. In my judgment, this is not a proper charge against the army budget.

Mr. MANN. Certainly not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And ought not to be carried in the army budget.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman. I notice that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] is inclined to be opposed to the committee amendment, whereas my recollection is that when the original proposition was before the House he was opposed to making any appropriation for this.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. My objection to the various appropriations for the international congresses was as to the method of appropriating money in the House, and not against the object itself. I made a point of order on several occasions against appropriations when there was no authority of law for making them, and on one occasion successfully, but never have I objected to the merits of the proposition.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was opposed to all of these propositions, inasmuch as he was so active in making points of order against them.

Mr. HARRISON. For a moment I ventured on the gentleman's private preserves to regulate the proceedings of the House.

Mr. MANN. I never make a point of order unless I am opposed to the proposition. I do not do it for amusement, as the gentleman from New York would seem to do.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman is very much mistaken if he thinks the regulation of orderly proceeding of this House is amusing. To many of us it is a very serious matter.

Mr. MANN. It is rather amusing, when the gentleman undertakes to preserve it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this proposition has been passed upon and the commissioners have been appointed. They are eminent men. One hundred thousand dollars has been appropriated to pay the expenses of the commission. It would be adding to the dignity of the commission to go in a United States vessel. The War Department is to furnish the vessel. But it is not fair in a case of this kind, involving another department of the Government entirely, something entirely outside of anything in connection with the army, to have that $45,000 charged upon the army bill; and if the Committee on Military Affairs had reported this back as originally drawn it would have meant that we had taken it upon ourselves to increase the appropriation for this specific purpose $45,000 more than Congress had authorized.

Mr. HAY. How many are there on this commission?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think either 7 or 10; I do not know exactly how many. The Committee on Military Affairs had no jurisdiction over that.

Mr. HAY. Then it would be providing an army transport to carry 7 people?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have all their clerks and other attachés.

Mr. HAY. And their clerks and interpreters.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but it will cost the Government more to use a government vessel than to pay their way by a commercial line from here to Europe and from Europe down to Buenos Aires. But it does seem to me that the Government can afford to pay a little extra expense to have our representatives meet the representatives of all the South American Republics, and that we should send our representatives in a manner befitting the dignity of this Government. I do not think, however, that the expense should come out of the army appropriation act. They ought to either represent us there without an additional appropriation, or have the extra amount provided by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAY. If they go down there, ought they not to go as other people go, and pay as other people pay?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are not traveling as other people do. They represent this Government.

Mr. HAY. We did not furnish them transportation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. When we sent the commission to the Philippine Islands we did, and, I think, properly so. The Government should not belittle itself.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Under this amendment it would not be obligatory on these commissioners to use this transportation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; it is not obligatory.

Mr. MANN. So that if they concluded that they could make better use of this $45,000, included in the $100,000, then they would not be required to use it in this way?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. They have the amount of money which they asked for in the first place—$100,000—and this is a simple proposition to give them authority, if they so desire, to use $45,000 of that in connection with the use of the transport?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is right; we furnish the transport and they pay for running it.

Mr. MANN. But they do not have to use it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They do not have to do so.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Time for debate on the amendment has expired. Does the gentleman move a pro forma amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the committee amendment will not prevail. I am sensible of the embarrassment of the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, as to the direction that this appropriation may take if the committee amendment is stricken out. I do not think, however, that we ought thereby to cripple this commission which we are sending down to Buenos Aires for the purpose of improving our relations with South America. If we are going to do it at all, we may as well do it handsomely. In dealing with foreign nations, especially with people of Latin descent, great stress is to be laid upon courtesy, style, and form; upon the method in which things are done. This embassy to the meeting of American Republics seems to me to be in pursuance of the efforts which our Government has been making for the last ten years. We ought, therefore, to make an extra effort to win the good will and friendship of the South American Republics. They are all going to be represented there. They have all made ample provision for their own representatives. In sending the representatives of the United States Government down there in an army transport I think it should be so done as not thereby to deplete the original appropriation made for the purpose of sending our delegates.

Recently one of the members appointed by our Government to represent the United States has stated that it will probably cost them $10,000 apiece out of their own pockets in addition to the appropriation made in the urgent deficiency bill. Therefore I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is unjust for this committee further to reduce the sum for sending this delegation down there, and that it is unwise to impair in any way the full dignity of our participation in this event.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The appropriation made in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill was clearly intended to cover the traveling expenses of this commission from the United States to the place where the congress is to be held, and even to other points in South America where there are centennial exercises being carried on or will be this year. Now, if they are going down there in a government transport, without the expense of transportation, then certainly the expense of taking the transport ought to come out of the appropriation. I do not see any reason why we should add $40,000 or $45,000 to the appropriation already made for the expense of our representatives in attending this conference.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman does not assume that as much as $40,000 or $45,000 would have been the traveling expenses of our delegates if we sent them by the ordinary means of transportation? Sending them by the transport will add dignity to the affair.

Mr. TAWNEY. When you take into consideration the number of representatives, clerks, secretaries, stenographers, and interpreters who are going, and the different places which they contemplate traveling to while in South America, I think very nearly that amount of money would have been expended by the time they return if they traveled in the ordinary manner.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand from the gentleman from Illinois that the House Committee on Appropriations originally recommended $50,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is another appropriation in there now of $75,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but that was put in in the Senate as an amendment, for another purpose.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The committee, after investigation, thought that $75,000 was the proper figure.

Mr. TAWNEY. The committee recommended $75,000, the House appropriated $50,000, and the amount was amended in the Senate by making it $100,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But $75,000 was the amount which you originally considered proper?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not only what we considered, but what the department considered, and that was their recommendation at that time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, with the $100,000 they can easily pay this appropriation, and the Committee on Military Affairs would not be justified in adding $45,000 to the amount fixed by Congress.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not a fact that unless this transport is used these commissioners will have to go to Liverpool in order to get a steamer to take them to South America?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether that is true or not. I am not objecting to the transport taking them down there. What I object to is increasing the appropriation for this purpose, which the Senate increased $25,000, and now it is proposed to increase it $45,000 more.

Mr. KAHN. As I understood it, the purpose of taking a transport was in order to allow the commissioners to go direct from the United States to South America. There is at present no direct line of steamers from the United States to South America except a very slow one, because we do not grant enough ocean mail pay to enable a fast line of steamers to run to South America. Therefore the department has recommended the use of a transport, there being no American line of sufficient importance to take these commissioners to South America.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if his committee made any investigation of the cost of fuel, crew, and so forth, of the transport? That will not be paid out of this $45,000?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes; everything. The Quartermaster-General estimated that the entire cost of putting on a crew, fueling, provisioning, and everything, would not exceed $45,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. We could charter one of the Panama Railroad steamers for that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have transports in service, but those can not be spared. We have the Sumner, a very elegant transport, and one or two others that are laid up.

Mr. MANN. We can speak a good word for it, for some of us have had trips on it, and it is a perfect thing for this kind of business.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is absolutely necessary that the army should carry these delegates?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The army is not carrying them. We are granting the use of the transport to the State Department, and also providing that the amount must be paid out of the appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. Why does not the State Department apply to the Navy Department?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I suppose because the navy is so awfully busy and has to have new boats all the time that they thought there were none to spare. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Iowa a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HAZING AT THE MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 5576, to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1901.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the portion of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1901, prescribing penalty for hazing, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. That the superintendent of the United States Military Academy, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, shall make appropriate regulations for putting a stop to the practice of hazing, such regulations to prescribe dismissal, suspension, or other adequate punishments for infractions of the same, and to embody a clear definition of hazing.

"SEC. 2. That any cadet who shall be charged with offenses under such regulations which would involve his dismissal from the academy shall be granted, upon his written request, a trial by a general court-martial, and any cadet dismissed from the academy for hazing shall not thereafter be reappointed to the corps of cadets nor be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the army or navy or Marine Corps until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member.

"SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply modifies the punishment in hazing cases so that a less punishment than absolute expulsion from the Military Academy may be given, and provides that if expulsion would follow a conviction, the cadet may, upon written application, demand a court-martial. It is practically the same law, although not quite so liberal to the cadet, as they now have in the Naval Academy.

We have been confronted at the Military Academy with this situation, that for the last few years punishment for the most trivial offense has been expulsion if convicted of hazing. Perfectly harmless pranks have been construed to be hazing, and the punishment is beyond the crime. In other words, it has fixed one absolute punishment regardless of the offense. This bill modifies it so that it may be expulsion or some lesser punishment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How does the gentleman define hazing in the bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It leaves the law exactly as it is now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is very hard to draw the line of demarcation between what is simply fun and what is hazing.

Mr. MANN. This requires that a definition of hazing shall be made.

Mr. HULL of IOWA. The regulations fix that now. This bill provides:

That the superintendent of the academy, with the approval of the Secretary of War, shall make appropriate regulations for putting a stop to the practice of hazing, such regulations to prescribe dismissal, suspension—

The Senate bill says "and other adequate punishment," but we have put it—or other adequate punishment for the infractions of the same and to embody a clear definition of hazing.

One trouble about this has been that two years ago several young men were convicted of hazing and the Secretary of War set it aside because he did not believe that they ought to be dismissed. It is such administration that virtually destroys the discipline in the academy, and in 1909 we had seven young men turned out for hazing, most of them properly so, because they believed that if they were convicted they could come to Congress and the Secretary of War and get relief.

Now, this fixes it so that if a man is discharged he can demand a court-martial, or where he is charged with an offense that would result in dismissal if convicted, and have his day in court. These young men claim that they have no day in court now.

I was opposed to the proposition when it was first suggested, because it did not seem to me that a cadet in school ought to have a court-martial, but I found that they always had the right to a court-martial until we passed this law. There have been 345 court-martials since 1850. They are warrant officers and they are subject to the rules and regulations of the War Department, and when they have had their day in court they have no excuse to come to a Member of Congress and beg for readmission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Referring to lines 15 and 16, page 2, it declares that a cadet shall not be eligible to appointment as a commissioned officer in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member. This cadet might be suspended or discharged just before graduation, and if he were to be readmitted two years after that he would be much beyond——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He could not be readmitted, because he would be overage.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know; but this would imply that a student who had once been admitted and had gone along with his studies for two or three years and was then expelled could be readmitted and permitted to finish the course.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is not the construction that has been held at the Naval Academy or by the War Department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This says that he shall not be admitted until two years after.

Mr. KEIFER. He would be too old then.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It says:

Shall not thereafter be reappointed to the corps of cadets nor be eligible for appointment as a commissioned officer in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps until two years after the graduation of the class of which he was a member.

Mr. KEIFER. He would be too old to come in as a cadet.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and I think the language provides that he shall never be reappointed—"shall not thereafter be reappointed to the corps of cadets," and so forth. If you put a semicolon in there, you would make it clear that that was what was meant.

Mr. PARKER. You could say "nor shall be eligible," and that would make it plain.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think he could ever get back to the corps of cadets, because he would be over age anyway, but I think the President, the appointing power, would not reappoint the man.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is it that fixes the age?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The regulations.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not a statute?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly it is a statute.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. These gentlemen here say a statute. The regulations are the same as law unless in contravention of the law. The ages fixed are between 17 and 22.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There would be some ambiguity, one saying that a student not more than 20 or 21 years of age shall be admitted, and this saying that he shall not be reappointed until two years after the graduation of the class.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is the reason I take the ground I do as to the meaning of this language—that he is not to be reappointed as a cadet, nor is he eligible for reappointment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I should think the gentleman ought to be willing to accept this sort of an amendment, "nor shall he be reappointed to the corps of cadets."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would be willing to make it stronger than that. I would be willing to make it that he never shall be reappointed. That is what I want to do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There must be something of that kind or else you are going to leave it open for a different interpretation.

Mr. PARKER. I suggest that the words "shall he" be inserted after the word "nor"—"nor shall he be eligible," and so forth. That makes it very plain—"shall not be thereafter reappointed to the corps of cadets, nor shall he be eligible for appointment," and so forth.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will accept that.

Mr. PARKER. Then, I move to insert the words "shall he," after the word "nor," in line 13, page 2.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is another question that I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill. I observe in his opening statement that he said that men or cadets had been punished, discharged for hazing, when their offense was nothing more than a playful prank.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know that I used the words "playful pranks." The law under the regulations defines hazing as bracing, and that is simply pulling yourself up in this way, so General Bell tells us, and one case that is now before the department is a case of that kind, where there was no bad blood or laying on of hands, no abusive language, where the man was not compelled to remain in the position, I think, over four or five minutes.

But a case was reported, and under the definition and the law as it stands the young man is to be expelled from the academy. That is out of all proportion to the offense.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that hazing under the definition?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is hazing under the definition, and the debate in Congress practically called that hazing when the law was passed.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask the gentleman a question as to what proceeding is taken to ascertain whether or not cadets are guilty of hazing. What steps are now taken under the law or the regulations?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, it is the duty of any officer of a corps of cadets when any hazing appears to have been carried on or anything not prescribed in the regulations done——

Mr. KEIFER. I understand, but how do they proceed to find that out?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They call the members of the corps of cadets before them——

Mr. KEIFER. Before whom?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Before the academic board of the academy.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the academic board act in the character of a court and decide the question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; they do decide the question, but the boy has no charges filed, as they have in a case of a court-martial; he has no counsel to appear for him, and the boys come before us now and say they did not know their rights and did not know that they could have counsel. If you have a court-martial, they would have counsel and can not say that they have been taken advantage of.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that rule certainly does not obtain at the Naval Academy, because there have been a number of trials there where I know that the midshipmen have had their day in court.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is what we want to give our boys at West Point. The laws are entirely different.

Mr. KEIFER. Is there any difference in that respect?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Altogether. I read the law before consenting to a court-martial here, and saw that at the Naval Academy they could have a court-martial procedure.

Mr. KEIFER. I am surprised, if the gentleman will allow me to observe, that it should obtain as a rule there in all the history of the academy that they should have no notice or any presence or any hearings or any right to have evidence——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, they are brought up and questioned and asked if they know anything about it, but they have no counsel.

Mr. KEIFER. Before this academy board do they have witnesses?

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Ohio was not here when this House had hysteria—a bad case.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The worst case of hysteria I ever knew. I had it myself.

Mr. MANN. And we provided not for a trial, but we provided that they should be summarily expelled from the academy.

Mr KEIFER. That is all right; but the point I am trying to make is, how you find out who are guilty before this summary expulsion.

Mr. MANN. That is done by the superintendent of the academy.

Mr. KEIFER. There must be some form of trial.

Mr. MANN. The superintendent of the academy makes the regulations.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He prescribes the regulations, and they are brought before him and the academic board, and he tries to find out if one case goes to another and——

Mr. MANN. He is not required to have any formal trial.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not a court-martial, but a trial, and gives the answers of the cadets and certifies them to the War Department. I want to say the author of this drastic law, who was at the head of the committee which investigated West Point, as I am informed, is one of the most earnest advocates of the change of the law to what is proposed by this Senate resolution.

Mr. MANN. Who is that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Senator DICK.

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman will allow me, it seems to me that the bill which he now proposes for the Military Academy at West Point, in liberalizing the punishment for hazing, goes very far beyond the law now in force at the Naval Academy. Under the law governing the Naval Academy there is no provision whereby a student in that institution can of his own motion call for a court-martial. Our committee took the view that that would be analogous to allowing a student in any of the high schools in the United States to demand a court-martial if the superintendent saw fit to punish him for breaches of discipline. What is provided in the hazing law as it applies to Annapolis is this, that the truth as to any issue of facts being raised, except upon a record as to demerits, it shall be determined by a board of inquiry. The hazing law as applied to Annapolis does not give the cadet the right to demand a court-martial as to whether or not he shall be dismissed from the academy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This does not give the right to say as to whether he shall be dismissed from the academy or not, but does give him the right to demand a court when charged with an offense that will result in dismissal if he is convicted. They do not let him pass on the question, but if the conviction for an offense would result in dismissal he has the right to demand a court-martial.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAWSON. I move to strike out the last word, simply for the purpose of asking a question. Is it not true that any cadet found guilty of hazing would thereby subject himself to dismissal from the academy——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Under the old law he would have to be dismissed.

Mr. DAWSON (continuing). So that any offense of hazing would give the cadet the right to demand a court-martial?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, if it was of a gross character, or absolute hazing, I would say yes. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the Secretary of War has promulgated new regulations defining hazing that results in dismissal and hazing that does not. So that the man directly charged with the higher crime would find himself dismissed.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

It seems to me that there is a misapprehension as to what constitutes hazing. Under this it will be left to the superintendent of the United States Military Academy, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, to define what hazing is, and it would be entirely possible for him, if he saw fit—that is, the superintendent and Secretary—to make an impossible definition. Of course he would not do it, but he might make such a narrow definition that such an offense would never be committed as would result in dismissal. Now, that is practically the law now. The present law has been greatly exaggerated as to its harshness. Under the present law the Secretary of War has the right to make regulations defining hazing. Hazing is not defined by the law as it stands. It is defined by the regulations of the department, and the department has changed those regulations and greatly modified them only recently and has defined hazing as willful intent to humiliate and injure, which very seldom happens. So that the present law as it stands is just about what this section 1 provides, and very greatly liberalizes present conditions. The result is that right now, under the law as it stands, the great bulk of the offenses popularly known as hazing are not hazing in the academy under the present regulations and would not be hazing under this section 1. The difficulty is that the old regulations were too severe, not the law. The difficulty is that we are liable to get too extreme and make regulations too liberal, and that it would encourage petty offenses and would encourage humiliation of the cadets, which would not come within the definition of hazing.

Now, I am very much afraid that would result, because it has resulted in the academy within the last few months. There is a resolution before this committee to-day asking us practically to restore three cadets who have been guilty of these minor infractions.

Mr. MANN. It is before the House?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It is before the House.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Possibly he refers to a Senate resolution, which recites that the regulations upon the subject of hazing having been modified so and so.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I do refer to Senate resolution No. 70.

Mr. MANN. That is pending in the House?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. That, Mr. Speaker, is pending. Regulations did exist which defined hazing. Those regulations were modified, and those modified regulations are desired to be retroactive. Of course, that is another matter which does not concern the pending resolution. The difficulty with the pending resolution is that it liberalizes the regulations, and that if an offense is made severe enough to demand dismissal from the academy, as many of them deserve, it enables the cadet to demand a court-martial and to go through the form of things it encourages.

It dignifies the outrageous performances of these cadets. They ought not to be dignified in such a way, but ought to be punished summarily. For that reason I do not believe that a resolution of this kind ought to pass. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think that this is a bad piece of legislation and ought not to be enacted. I am opposed and have been consistently opposed to any modification of existing statutes with reference to the offense of hazing. I believe that any letting down of the bars, any modification of the punishment for hazing, will be promptly followed by an outbreak of that offense at the Military Academy. I know that that is the opinion of gentlemen who are charged with the management of the academy. I know that it is the opinion of the superintendent. I know from personal talk with them that it is the opinion of the professors who have charge of the instruction of the young men at that academy. They all deprecate it, although they give no utterance upon the matter to anybody but those clothed with proper authority to inquire. They know that it interferes with the discipline and administration of the academy in a hurtful way.

Last year seven cadets were found guilty of the offense of hazing. It is a serious offense, Mr. Speaker, under the laws and the regulations made in accordance with the laws, a penalty for which was fixed by Congress when it was indignant at an occurrence that resulted in the loss of life. And the practical result would be to disarm to a great extent the administration board officiating at the Military Academy. If this bill is passed, it will be taken as an indication to every young man who has been charged with the most serious offense he can commit at the Military Academy that all he has got to do is to press his application to be forgiven for a violation of the law or for a violation of the rules of the academy.

I dare say the bill will pass, because I have seen several times since I began my service in the House similar measures proposed here, frequently measures for the benefit of some particular individual, and almost invariably over the protests of those charged with the administration of the academy, such measures have found favor in this House, when certainly they should not pass.

There is pending here another bill making applicable modified regulations at the academy to three cases now held in suspension. Congress fixed dismissal as the penalty for hazing and left to the officials of the academy the making of regulations that defined it. They declared what should be considered hazing and made the regulations known to the cadets. They committed none of these offenses unwittingly. They were repeatedly warned and urged to obey the laws, but they disregarded the warnings and pleadings of officers, and by persistent infractions invited penalties. After a long and serious investigation these young men were found guilty of flagrant breaches of discipline, and such legislation as this is meant to relieve them of the consequences of their folly. There are various classes of offense, Mr. Speaker, and one of these cases is not as serious an offense as some of the others. The effect of such legislation will be to encourage and develop a mutinous spirit. I started to speak of the resolution now pending that seeks to make applicable a modified definition of hazing proposed by the Secretary. The three cases are under suspension. I have gone over the testimony and have discussed the matter with the Secretary of War and familiarized myself with it, and I can not agree with him. Some of these cases are not as serious as the others. Under the law, perhaps, there was no avoidance of the maximum penalty; but they were all guilty of hazing, and it will be a good thing for the academy to let the whole bunch go.

Now, I doubt, Mr. Speaker, very much whether this measure should pass, but certainly I am not in favor of repealing a statute that was deliberately enacted while Congress was in hot indignation at gross outrages perpetrated by the students at the Military Academy.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I have only a word to say on the subject. I may say at the outset that I have run the gamut of hazing at Annapolis in perhaps its severest form, and I feel that it is only fair also to myself to say that I never hazed anyone else. I am in favor of this measure for two simple reasons:

The first reason is that the second section of the measure inflicts severer punishment than is inflicted at present upon the real offense of hazing when it is fairly established by court-martial. The second reason why I support the measure is that the first section enables a reasonable definition of hazing. Under existing law I have seen some of the best cadets that ever entered Annapolis dismissed for offenses that really ought not to have been regarded as serious in any sense of the word. There are various things that we call running and jumping that are good for the plebe when he comes in. He may be going along the walk in a slouchy way. If you tell him to "hold his fins out and stand up straight there," it is good for him. That is what we call running. Now, many a good cadet has been dismissed simply because the law did not allow enough latitude in defining what was hazing. This measure might have been changed somewhat; but as the first section stands, there is more latitude given to define what the offense really is, and there ought to be such latitude. The second section does give a boy a chance when his whole career may be blighted, does give him an opportunity for trial by general court-martial. Then, if found guilty, the punishment is more severe for the real offense than it is to-day, simple dismissal, because this punishment makes him ineligible for two years after the graduation of his class for appointment or commission in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman familiar with the present definition of hazing as applied to the cadets at the Naval Academy?

Mr. HOBSON. I am more familiar with the results, as seen in the dismissal of these good cadets.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The statute applicable to the midshipmen at the Naval Academy goes into particulars in very full detail as to what shall constitute the offense of hazing at the Naval Academy.

Mr. HOBSON. That is a new enactment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. If a proper amendment relating to that could be offered to this bill I should be very glad to support it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman think it ought to be left in the discretion of the commanding officer at the academy?

Mr. HOBSON. I am inclined to think it is wise to do that unless you make an ample definition in the law. The superintendent can be relied upon to oppose anything that is against discipline.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. These regulations are not enforced until approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOBSON. That is true.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In order to give the information to the gentleman from Alabama and other gentlemen I would like to have the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON], who has the statute applicable to the Naval Academy, read the definition of hazing and see what the gentleman from Alabama thinks about it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DAWSON. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I will read from the act of April 9, 1906, which act passed this House after full debate. This bill was reported to the House by a committee which spent two or three weeks on the ground at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, investigating the hazing which was somewhat prevalent there at that time. Section 4 defines hazing in these words:

> That the offense of hazing as mentioned in this act shall consist of any unauthorized assumption of authority by one midshipman over another midshipman, whereby the last-mentioned midshipman shall or may suffer or be exposed to suffer any cruelty, indignity, humiliation, hardship, or oppression, or the deprivation or abridgment of any right, privilege, or advantage to which he shall be legally entitled.

Mr. LOUD. That does not cover "running."

Mr. HOBSON. That is in entire accord with my views on the subject, although that has been enacted since I was a cadet. I think that is wholesome legislation, and has relieved the condition at Annapolis to which I refer. But the condition at West Point has not been so relieved.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, the vital difference between the bill now pending in the House and the law relating to the Naval Academy I think should be stated to this committee before we vote on the bill.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The offenses which the gentleman from Iowa has just read would not be hazing at West Point at the present time or under this bill, but they would be minor offenses.

Mr. DAWSON. The law as it applies to the Naval Academy at Annapolis leaves the question of discipline in the hands of the superintendent of that institution. When you pass a law which takes from the superintendent the power to discipline the cadets you utterly destroy discipline in the institution.

Now, this bill proposes to give to the cadets the right to demand a court-martial if accused of hazing. What does the law provide at Annapolis? It provides that in these milder cases of hazing they shall be dealt with as offenses against good order and discipline and for violation and breaches of the rules of the academy, but no midshipman shall be dismissed for a single act of hazing except as provided in section 3.

Now, section 3 provides that where the offense is one that may carry the midshipman outside of the academy, then a court-martial may intervene, but not on the application of the midshipman himself, because that would destroy the discipline of the institution. But it provides that the superintendent of the Naval Academy may, in his discretion and with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, cause any midshipman of the said academy to be tried by court-martial for the offense of hazing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, did I get the extra five minutes or did the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. DAWSON. I think I had the extension of time.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. By unanimous consent we are in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and everyone who speaks has a right to an hour.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNET of New York). This bill is on the House Calendar.

Mr. PARKER. And being on the House Calendar, it is debated under the House rules, and there is no question about the gentleman having a right to the time on this bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa has an hour.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will take the time in my own right.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. How much time has the gentleman from Iowa remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has thirty minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa, my colleague, if he regards the fact that since the organization of the Military Academy to the time this law was passed the students have always had the right to demand a court-martial has destroyed discipline there?

Mr. DAWSON. I am not sure that they have had the right to a court-martial.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have had it on hazing up to the passage of this law, and still have it on every charge except class standing and hazing.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will pardon me, the House ought to understand that this law was passed for the Naval Academy after the most thorough examination on the ground at Annapolis and after conditions there were fully debated in the House, and it was the judgment of the House that the conditions warranted the passage of this law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The difference between the situation at Annapolis and at West Point, if this bill is passed, would be that if the offense involved a dismissal at the Naval Academy, the superintendent would convene the court-martial, while at West Point the student would have a right to demand it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would the gentleman from Iowa have any objection to the definition that the gentleman from Iowa has read from the statutes?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know that I would, but the superintendent of the academy and the Secretary of War have given long study to this question of hazing and are getting up new regulations, if they have the right to promulgate them, and I believe it is better to have hazing defined by the regulations than it would be for us to fix a cast-iron definition in the law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then a new superintendent could make a new definition.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; not without the consent of the Secretary of War.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, he might get that consent.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, I think that is remote.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why not have it in the statute and have it fixed by law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, I want to say further that during this year of 1910 there have been three courts-martial at West Point for offenses other than hazing, and yet it has not destroyed the discipline. Cadets were entitled to the court-martial. These cadets are not schoolboys in the ordinary sense of the term. They are practically warrant officers. They are commissioned and sworn to obey the laws of the country and the regulations of the War Department and the commands of their superior officers, and they are subject to the discipline of officers of the army.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman think it rather a preposterous performance to have a court-martial, with generals and colonels and lieutenant-colonels and their epaulets and swords and all that, sitting on a lot of schoolboys?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, they do not do it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not discipline those boys just like a man who has got sense, running a private school, disciplines his boys?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because it is under the Government. The men are officers of the army to a certain extent. They are paid by the Government, and if the gentleman has had any experience with any of his cadets being turned out, he knows that life is a burden to him from the time that he is out until he is reinstated.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did have that experience.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This House has on two or three different occasions reinstated in the Naval Academy and reinstated in the Military Academy cadets that have been discharged under this law for hazing. Now, if they have a trial by court-martial—the gentleman never heard of a cadet coming up here asking reinstatement who had been tried by court-martial and discharged, and why? Because he has had his day in court.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I had just exactly that experience.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Who was it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A boy from my own district, the son of the Republican postmaster, that got his appointment to the Naval Academy under a competitive examination that I ordered. I would rather it had been a Democratic boy; but this boy got it. I appointed him, and he cut high, fantastic capers over there, and they court-martialed him on five charges and convicted him, and the first thing I knew he was down here wanting me to get him reinstated.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have not had any application where the boy was court-martialed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask another question, and that is if the gentleman does not think it gives the boys an exaggerated idea of their own importance to have these grand court-martials sitting there on their cases?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken about that; but I want to say to the gentleman that there always have been court-martials there. There have been 345 court-martials held on cadets since 1850, and several of them were held in 1910.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is no reason why you should ever hold another one.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They do hold them for everything. This would provide for a possible court-martial where the punishment would be dismissal. But in cases of standing in studies, the academic board is supreme, and the boy who does not keep up in his class is dropped.

Mr. DAWSON. I would like to inquire if the Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point is in favor of this provision of the bill which grants the student the right to demand a court-martial? It is not the court-martial that I object to, but the method of ordering it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say this, that the Military Academy is radically in favor of a change in reference to the regulations respecting hazing, so that the authorities will be able to save three boys who deserve saving.

Mr. DAWSON. I have never found anyone in the naval or military service that had responsibility for these midshipmen or cadets who was willing to place in the hands of cadets the right to demand a court-martial in a case of discipline.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not in a case of discipline. Suppose it is a case of drunkenness or going off the ground without permission. They can demand court-martials for that, if the penalty is dismissal. In your case here of hazing, whenever it comes to the question of dismissal, your own superintendent can have the court-martial if he believes it necessary. In fact, is it not his duty under the law to convene a court?

Mr. DAWSON. Gentlemen will agree with me, I think, that acts of hazing are infractions of the regulations with regard to discipline, almost entirely.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it not a fact that in substance there is a court-martial for all of these offenses? A court-martial is merely a court to investigate charges against a soldier or enlisted man or an officer, or a cadet, if it is provided for by law. They have an investigation by a military commission, have they not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have; by the academy board.

Mr. SLAYDEN. By competent men?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. By men who are inclined to look with great leniency upon the acts of misbehavior.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; that same board would pass on everything that does not involve dismissal.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The court-martial that this law proposes would probably, I might say actually, be composed of the same people.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh; not necessarily.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Not necessarily, but in practice.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The court-martial giving the right of review, as suggested, is an addition to the other. This court of inquiry is quite different from a court-martial in protecting the rights of the boys. Now, I am not one of those who believe the boys have been wronged except by the drastic law we put on the statute books. I do not believe the academic board want to dismiss these boys in all cases, because under their very findings of guilty under the hazing law they recommend the Secretary of War that some lighter punishment be substituted for the dismissal.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My information from the Superintendent of the Military Academy is he wants no modification.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Under the law as it stands, could not they define hazing in such a way as not to administer severe punishment in case it was not necessary?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Secretary of War thinks he will try it, but he much prefers we should pass another resolution, as an independent proposition, confirming his new regulations.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Under the law as it stands the superintendent of the academy and Secretary of War have a right to change the regulations and define hazing as they think best, without the necessity of our passing this act.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the Secretary of War claimed that before us.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. So section 1 of this act——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. At the same time he claimed it was a very close question and he would like to be relieved of the responsibility of it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. So section 1 is substantially what the law is now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I think not.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. One question more. Now, in changing the defense, in passing upon what young men have done, has it not been the argument before the Committee on Military Affairs that we must be lenient to them as boys, yet when it comes to the machinery of making the punishment effective, that then we must treat them as men? Has not that been the situation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hardly understand the gentleman's question. Will the gentleman repeat it?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. When these young men come before the Committee on Military Affairs or this House to have the offense of which they have been guilty considered, we are asked to consider them as pranks of boys; but when it comes to the machinery to punish them, we are asked to consider them as men. Is not that the situation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, I think it is hardly to that extent. I think, when they come before us and ask to be reinstated, it is done on the ground that what they did was not sufficient to deserve expulsion. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion? It is now half past 5 o'clock. Does not the gentleman think it would be wiser to have this question come up after he and other Members have had a chance to see if they can not tinker with it a little?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You mean come up as unfinished business?

Mr. MANN. It will come as unfinished business on next calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no objection to that. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 6639) for the relief of Margaretha Weideman, Clarence C. Weideman, and Auguerite E. Weideman, owners of lots 1, 2, and 3, square 434, in the city of Washington, D. C., and the same was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 17, 1910.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONSTRUCTION OF MODERN BATTLE SHIPS.

Mr. HALE. I have here, Mr. President, a letter to my colleague on a most important public matter, which I present in the nature of a memorial or petition. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the memorial presented by the Senator from Maine on behalf of his colleague.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Senate Document No. 438, Sixty-first Congress, second session.]

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE FORE RIVER SHIPBUILDING COMPANY, QUINCY, MASS., ADDRESSED TO HON. WILLIAM P. FRYE, UNITED STATES SENATE, WITH REFERENCE TO THE UNDERBIDDING OF FOREIGN COMPETITORS BY THE UNITED STATES IN THE MATTER OF THE CONSTRUCTION OF MODERN BATTLE SHIPS.

FORE RIVER SHIPBUILDING COMPANY,
Quincy, Mass., March 11, 1910.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Knowing the interest that you always take in matters relating to shipping and shipbuilding, I am pleased to respond to your inquiry as to how it is possible for the United States to underbid foreign competitors in the construction of modern battle ships.

This inquiry is of importance, because it is well known that American shipbuilders are unable to compete with English and German shipbuilders in the construction of commercial vessels.

In commercial vessels the cost of the vessel to the shipbuilder is divided almost equally between labor and materials, whereas on a battle ship from two-fifths to one-half of the cost, depending upon the nature of the design and the extent of the equipment furnished, is in the armor and armament, which the shipbuilder merely puts in place, and is supplied to him in the case of the United States vessels by the Government itself and in the case of private contracts by a subcontractor. In the case of the hull and machinery, which the shipbuilder provides, the proportion of labor is smaller and the proportion of materials and auxiliary machinery much greater than in a commercial vessel. The shipbuilder's cost of labor is much greater in the United States than in Great Britain and Germany, being placed variously from 40 to 80 per cent greater here than abroad, and, of course, affects the cost of a naval vessel in the same way that it does the cost of the commercial vessel, but much less in proportion to the total, as explained.

In building battle ships abroad I find that there is considerable competition among the shipbuilders to obtain contracts for hull and machinery, and that the prices of hulls and machinery obtained by foreign governments are moderate, but not on such a low basis as they are under the severe competition existing in the United States. The manufacture of armor, guns, and gun mountings abroad is confined to a few large concerns, and competition between them does not appear to be active. The consequence is that the prices for armor and armament abroad are high.

An examination of the costs of completed battle ships for the United States and the costs of completed battle ships abroad indicates to me that the United States Government has been obtaining its vessels always on prices not above those abroad, and in recent years for prices considerably less; the average for the last few years being 15 per cent less for the completed vessel in the United States than those in England.

Under these circumstances we always held an advantageous position in the Argentine competition, for at our regular prices and with use of our American turbine, which is cheaper and more efficient than the English type, we had a margin in our favor enabling us to offer something better at the same price, which we did and won out on our designs, promising the standard of workmanship set by the United States Navy.

I think it will be clear to you that in obtaining the Argentine business we have been dealing simply with a commercial proposition upon our regular practice in which our success depended upon submitting the best design and guaranties. It should be a sufficient answer to anyone inquiring on this matter for me to say that we shall be glad to duplicate these vessels for the United States at the same price.

Very sincerely, yours,

FRANCIS T. BOWLES.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HALE. The letter which has just been read, Mr. President, is a very important contribution to furnishing information on this most important subject. It will, of course, appear in the RECORD: I ask that it be also printed as a Senate document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MONEY. I could not hear the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is that the communication be printed as a Senate document. It will, of course, be printed in the RECORD, having been read at the desk. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be printed as a document. (S. Doc. No. 438.)

Mr. HALE. I do not know whether it ought to be referred to the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on Naval Affairs, but for the present I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, of which my colleague is chairman.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reference will be made, as requested by the Senator from Maine, to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10280) to authorize the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to receive twelve 3.2-inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining equipment from the State of Massachusetts, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 83) authorizing the use of a United States Army transport for certain purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) construing section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved lands in Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904; to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEAN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the salary of the Solicitor for the Navy Department from $3,000 to $4,000 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of the chief justice and five associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia from $6,000 to $7,500 each, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. KEAN submitted an amendment providing for the survey of Pensauken Creek, New Jersey, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for improving Maurice River, New Jersey, etc., to $50,000, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for connecting the landing at Bordentown with the Delaware River channel, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $8,000 for dredging between the mouth of the Raritan River and Great Beds, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BULKELEY submitted an amendment relative to the improvement of the harbor at Bridgeport, Conn., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

WAGES AND PRICES.

Mr. LODGE. I send to the desk a communication from the Commissioner of Labor, Department of Commerce and Labor, in response to a request for certain information for the use of the Select Committee on Wages and Prices of Commodities. I move that the communication and accompanying papers be printed as a document and referred to the Select Committee on Wages and Prices of Commodities. (S. Doc. No. 436.)

The motion was agreed to.

PRICES IN WINDSOR AND DETROIT.

Mr. LODGE. I present a report forwarded by the consul at Windsor, Ontario, being a summary of prices in Windsor and Detroit. I move that the summary be printed as a document and referred to the Select Committee on Wages and Prices of Commodities. (S. Doc. No. 437.)

The motion was agreed to.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Mr. DIXON introduced a bill (S. 7242) to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes, which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. DIXON. Before a reference of the bill is made I think I ought to make a statement to the Senate as to the preparation and condition of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I will inquire of the Senator if the bill he has just introduced is the one he referred to when he spoke to me?

Mr. DIXON. It is.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to state before I sit down that I have, I suppose, a copy of exactly the same bill, which was sent to me from the Department of Commerce and Labor to be introduced in the Senate. I will not introduce it just now because of the pendency of the bill introduced by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I wish to say, for the information of the Senate generally, that this bill regarding the amendment of the present law concerning the killing of seals in Alaska was prepared by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources, and for the reasons I shall state.

Something like two months ago some resolutions regarding the killing of the fur seal and their near extermination were introduced and referred to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources. The committee has had one full hearing regarding the matter and has had several conferences with officials in the department, especially with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The present bill, I think, was prepared along the lines of the hearings heretofore held by the Committee on Conservation of National Resources, and was given to me by the department in further consideration of the hearings and the conferences heretofore held.

Day before yesterday, when a message came in from the President regarding this same matter, I think largely through inadvertence, and possibly following some old tradition, it was sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The President's message and my present bill, prepared by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have no more relation to foreign affairs than to the moon. The bill merely provides for an amendment of the present law under which these seals have been almost exterminated, the Secretary holding that the present provisions are mandatory and that the lease, which will expire next month, he will have to renew under the present law. There is no discretion on his part. This bill, prepared by him, merely amends the existing law regarding the letting of a lease to some company for the killing of the seals on this island.

I think there is no possible question about the jurisdiction of the committee which has charge of the matter and has been having hearings all winter, and I have asked that the bill be referred to that committee, the same as the resolutions which the committee has had under consideration heretofore.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, it seems that we have some trouble nowadays very often in finding the right committee. I do not know what ought to be done with this bill, but it seems to me that it ought to be sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where bills on this subject have been sent heretofore.

I wish to give a little brief history. In the beginning this whole business started years ago with the conference and controversies that we had in Paris, led by Senator Morgan and Judge Harlan. On the basis of that work, Senator Morgan, of the Foreign Relations Committee, reported the first bill dealing with the subject in the nature of a treaty, and so forth. That was in April, 1894. The next bill that I find was presented by Senator Davis, another chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. That was approved December 29, 1897, and it dealt with the fur-seal question. The next, as I understand it, was introduced by Senator Sherman, also a chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that, too, dealt with the fur-seal question. The next bill that was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations was reported by Senator Foraker, then a member of the Senate, and that dealt with the question. The next one, I believe, was sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations by one of the Members of this body who was then upon the Committee on Territories. That committee was sent to Alaska for the purpose of making a general investigation of that Territory as to what was there ascertained. The Committee on Territories reported a bill and sent it to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and the Senate dealt with it. So you may look the record over, and pretty much all the time the Committee on Foreign Relations has had charge of this subject, through Senator Morgan, Senator Davis, Senator Sherman, and so on down.

It seems to me, Mr. President, whatever may be the particular thing that ought to be done with this bill now, the subject ought to remain in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations, because it is an international question more than anything else, and it ought to be dealt with as such. So whether a lease is to be made now or something else is to be done, it ought to remain in the same hands that have had charge of it for very many years.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. DIXON. I have the floor, have I not?

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. DIXON. I have not so intended. I yielded to the Senator from Illinois to make a statement.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will excuse me if he had not completed his remarks. He sat down and I supposed he had yielded the floor.

Mr. DIXON. I had taken my seat, having yielded the floor to the Senator from Illinois to make a statement. I did not understand that I had yielded the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; go on.

Mr. DIXON. I will gladly yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Montana to yield the floor. He made no intimation that he did not so intend. The Chair understood the Senator from Illinois to claim the floor in his own right.

Mr. CULLOM. I myself supposed so.

Mr. DIXON. I have no inclination whatever to do anything except what is perfectly fair and right. It was not my intention to yield the floor. I had a further statement to make, but in view of what the Senator from Illinois had said before I gladly yielded to him to make a statement.

I merely want to say at this time that I desired to include in my first statement a motion that the bill be referred to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the request was practically a motion. The Chair would have recognized it as a motion.

Mr. DIXON. I want to say at this time, in answer to what the Senator from Illinois has stated, that what he has said regarding the past history of Alaskan fur seals, when it referred to an international question, it had undoubtedly gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as it was right and proper it should; and at this time, if the bill contemplated anything in any way on earth affecting foreign affairs, without any hesitancy it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. But the bill which I have introduced, prepared by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, goes only to the repeal of the mandatory provisions of the present law, under which the Secretary of Commerce and Labor feels that his hands are tied, and that on the 30th day of April he will be compelled to enter into a new lease, which, in his opinion and in the opinion of the most eminent zoologists of this country, means the extermination of the fur seals within the next two or three years.

The Committee on Conservation of National Resources was organized at the last session of the Senate. It holds a membership of 15 Senators, many of them old in the service of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DIXON. Gladly.

Mr. BROWN. Has the committee had this subject under consideration?

Mr. DIXON. For the past two months.

Mr. BROWN. Have hearings been had by the committee?

Mr. DIXON. Hearings have been had by the committee and conferences with the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BROWN. And this bill is the result of those hearings?

Mr. DIXON. I think without any question this bill is the result of the work the Committee on Conservation of National Resources have been doing this winter. No other committee seemed to have any interest or choice in the matter. This committee, consisting of 15 Senators, with very little to do, urged by eminent zoologists of the country, took the initiatory steps to bring about some condition to save this country from what I believe to be a national disgrace.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. DIXON. Gladly.

Mr. JONES. What was the foundation for the hearings that the Committee on Conservation of National Resources has held? Were there any resolutions before it?

Mr. DIXON. Resolutions regarding this same matter, introduced on the second day of the present session.

Mr. JONES. And referred to that committee?

Mr. DIXON. And referred to the committee without a question being raised.

Mr. JONES. Without objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. DIXON. Gladly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask by whom this bill was presented? Was it presented by one of the members of the committee?

Mr. DIXON. It was presented by me as chairman of the committee. The bill was prepared by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And with a view to preventing the evils which the committee had been considering under those resolutions?

Mr. DIXON. Refefring precisely to that lamentable condition of affairs, and for the express purpose of repealing the mandatory provisions of the present law, which have nothing on earth to do with foreign affairs, referring to the seals on the Pribilof Islands. The committee took cognizance of it, they have had their hearing, they have been at work on the question, without any thought that it overlapped or conflicted with the work of any other committee of the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator whether the evidence before that committee developed the fact that the herd of seals was gradually being exterminated, and that if this contract was let under the requirements of existing law the herd would be absolutely exterminated before the expiration of the contract?

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Nevada is perfectly correct.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And whether the Secretary of Commerce and Labor did not regard himself as bound by the mandatory provisions of the law against his judgment to execute this contract?

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Nevada states the case very explicitly. In 1870, when we first entered into the policy of killing the seals under governmental supervision, there were 4,500,000 seals on this island. The annual catch was in excess of 100,000 a year. The last report by the Commissioner of Fisheries shows that at this time there are about 60,000 left. The catch last year fell to 14,000 seals. The revenue to the Government originally, until the seals had practically disappeared, was nearly $6,000,000. During the last six or eight years, under the present policy, the Government has expended over $200,000 a year in policing and patrolling those islands.

With these conditions confronting us, with the demand from all over the country that some action should be taken, the committee to which I ask that this bill shall be referred, took up the work, and now when it is reaching its completion another and older committee of the Senate steps in and asks to have the matter turned over to them. They say they have had jurisdiction of it for fifteen or twenty years. If they have, God knows the results have been most lamentable. Our committee believes unanimously——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As a member of the committee——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DIXON. Gladly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask a question right in this connection. Is there any assurance and were there any assurances before our committee that if we would take such action on the part of the United States Government in protecting these seals we had every reason to believe that the other Governments interested would also acquiesce in certain agreements that our committee is on the point of reaching?

Mr. DIXON. I think that suggestion was made.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, is that a point on which the Senator from Montana says this has nothing to do with foreign relations?

Mr. DIXON. Not this bill or the President's message.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. DIXON. The President's message expressly recommended a repeal of the present mandatory provision of the law, and nothing else. There is no question which arises in the Senate which in its ultimate relationship may not affect foreign affairs, but the President's message in this case merely goes, and this bill merely goes, to the amendment of the present law, which makes it mandatory upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to re-lease or extend the lease to the Alaska Seal Company, which has had complete control there for the last twenty years.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from New York, I wish to say what has already been said by the Senator from Montana, that ultimately probably this entire matter will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations whenever it involves a question of the treaty-making power between this country and other countries. The only question now before the Senate, the only question to which the President's message related, and the only question under consideration by this committee, is one of conservation of the natural resources of the United States—the preservation from destruction of a great herd of seals now reduced to almost nothing—so that the revenue obtained by the Government does not even equal the expense of maintaining the policing and patrol. Now, that is the only question.

The question before the committee was: Is this one of the natural resources of the country? Is this natural resource being wasted and destroyed? Is there anything that can be done by this country alone to prevent that waste and destruction? It is perfectly evident to the committee that in order to prevent that waste and destruction it would be necessary to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to do what he wished to do and what the President recommended, to end for the time being the contract under which those seals are being destroyed. When that has been done and when the destruction has been averted, then will come up the question of negotiations between this country and other countries with reference to the exercise of their mutual power in the preservation of this seal herd; and then it seems to me the jurisdiction of the Foreign Relations Committee will attach.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DIXON. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I do not wish to impose upon the good nature of the Senator from Montana, but I should like to say to the Senator from Nevada that the time to which he refers, that is to say, the time when the question as to what we shall do upon those islands with these seals becomes involved in negotiations with other countries, is now here.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand the Senator to say that negotiations are now being conducted?

Mr. ROOT. They are.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I still assert that, so far as that question is concerned, it belongs, of course, to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROOT. There is no question in my mind whatever about the correctness of the proposition of the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Nevada, that the mandatory provision regarding the length of this lease ought to be repealed. The existence of the lease has been an obstacle in the way of the negotiations which the Government has been attempting to carry on with other countries for a number of years. The lease ought to end, but the question as to what to do with the seals on those islands is a question inexplicably involved in a complicated negotiation, which already at this moment involves Great Britain, with the attendant necessity of consultation with Canada and Russia and Japan, and which, before it is finished, will necessarily involve every country in the civilized world, for it is only by the universal assent of the civilized powers that the seals can be preserved. It is of primary importance for the preservation of the seals that no legislation shall be adopted by Congress which has not been scrutinized with reference to its effect upon the pending negotiations and the power of our Government by treaty to do what is necessary to give effect to those negotiations, and that must be made, properly, by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. ROOT. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Senator from New York whether this question of the repeal of a provision compelling the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to make a contract with certain parties permitting them to kill the seals is not purely a domestic question?

Mr. ROOT. No.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As to that question, has any foreign country any concern whatever?

Mr. ROOT. I will answer that. The Government of the United States has been for many years contending that the destruction of the seal herds of the Pribilof Islands was the result of pelagic sealing. We came to the verge of unfriendly relations with Great Britain upon that proposition, and we undertook to settle a long-standing and active controversy on that subject by means of a treaty and arbitration before what is commonly known as the Bering Sea tribunal. In that arbitration the counsel for the United States committed themselves without reserve, and, in my judgment, established by irrefragable proof of the proposition that the fact that around the borders of those islands the sealing vessels ranged themselves and shot the female seals as they went to and fro in search of their food was the cause of the extraordinary and lamentable diminution of the herd. That view was adopted by the tribunal; and although the decision was that these seals were not natural resources of the United States, that they were not property that we had any control over the taking of on the high seas, nevertheless, in accordance with a provision of the treaty, the tribunal established a series of rules and regulations prescribing limits within which the seals were not to be shot—a closed sea within which they were not to be shot.

It has been proved that the regulations which were adopted by the Bering Sea tribunal were insufficient to accomplish their purpose. They did not put an end to the destruction of the seal herd, and the diminufion of the herd continued, notwithstanding those regulations. Numerous efforts have been made to secure further regulations, without avail, because the Canadian seal-fishing interests were unwilling to give their assent, and, therefore, the government of Canada was unwilling to give its consent, and, therefore, the Government of Great Britain was unwilling to make any agreement for further restrictions.

But now has entered upon the scene another destructive force, and the seal fishing vessels of Japan have made their appearance, not limited even by the insufficient regulations of the Bering Sea Tribunal, and they range around those islands just outside of the 3-mile line, and every seal that makes its appearance, going out or coming back in search of food, is shot. We are face to face with the certain fact, proved, long maintained by the Government of the United States, that this pelagic sealing is the necessary destruction of the seal herd. There is but one way in which we can put an end to that destruction, and that is by negotiation and agreement. When Mr. Hay died, in the summer of 1905, there was already pending a proposition from him to Great Britain for a plan to put an end to the destruction of seals by Canadian sealing vessels. The terms of that proposition, which I shall not go into in open session, though I should be very glad to make the fullest explanation to the Senate in executive session if the Senate so desires, involved necessarily an agreement on the part of the Government of the United States as to what it would do with the seals on land. You observe that is the very thing that this legislation seeks to accomplish. That proposition——

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether these negotiations would have any effect upon the renewal of this lease if no further legislation is passed?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I have already said that, in my judgment, this lease ought not to be renewed, and that the mandatory clause which requires it ought to be repealed.

Mr. JONES. That is all there is involved.

Mr. DIXON. That is all there is in this bill.

Mr. ROOT. If there is nothing else in this proposed legislation, I am ready now to vote to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. JONES. That is all there is.

Mr. ROOT. But I do not know; I have never seen the legislation which is proposed by this committee, and I am undertaking to show that the question of what we will do with the seals, what law we pass about what shall be done with the seals, ought to be scrutinized by that committee which has been so long familiar with negotiations with foreign countries, through which alone this seal herd can be preserved. Is it worth while for me to go on further and explain what the present situation of the negotiations is?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator allow just one interruption?

Mr. ROOT. I shall not continue, unless the Senate desires that I shall do so.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask for a reading of the bill which is the subject of discussion?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I thought I had the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has the floor. To whom does he yield?

Mr. DIXON. I want at this time——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has the floor. The Chair desires to know to whom he will yield?

Mr. DIXON. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit an explanation by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I will gladly yield to him.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator will excuse me a minute——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. DIXON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, we are proceeding in the dark. We do not know what the bill is which is now the subject of so much controversy. It is very desirable that it should be read. That is what I now desire.

Mr. DIXON. I shall be very glad to have the bill read.

Mr. MONEY. I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Montana state his whole case, and when he has gotten through with that statement, for him to yield to the other side.

Mr. DIXON. I will ask, before we hear from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], that the bill be read so that the Senate may be advised.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 7242) to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes, the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have power to authorize the killing of fur seals and the taking of sealskins on the Pribilof Islands, in Alaska, under regulations established by him prescribing the manner in which such killing shall be done and limiting the number of seals to be killed, whenever he shall determine that such killing is necessary or desirable and not inconsistent with the preservation of the seal herd: Provided, however, That under such authority the right of killing fur seals and taking sealskins shall be exercised by officers, agents, or employees of the United States appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and by the natives of the Pribilof Islands under the direction and supervision of such officers, agents, or employees, and by no other persons: And provided further, That male seals only shall be killed and that not more than 95 per cent of 3-year-old male seals shall be killed in any one year.

SEC. 2. That any and all sealskins taken under the authority conferred by the preceding section shall be sold by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in such market, at such times, and in such manner as he may deem most advantageous; and the proceeds of such sale or sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall constitute a fund to be called the Alaska seal fund, which shall be used, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to defray the expense of furnishing food, shelter, fuel, clothing, and other necessaries of life to the native inhabitants of the Pribilof Islands and of providing for their comfort, maintenance, education, and protection, and to defray the cost of administering the laws of the United States relating to the seal fisheries of Alaska, including the salaries and expenses of all officers, agents, or employees appointed to enforce said laws.

SEC. 3. That whenever seals are killed and sealskins taken on any of the Pribilof Islands the native inhabitants of said islands shall be employed in such killing and in curing the skins taken, and shall receive for their labor fair compensation, to be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who shall have the authority to prescribe by regulation the manner in which such compensation shall be paid to the said natives or expended or otherwise used in their behalf and for their benefit.

SEC. 4. That section 1956 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and section 173 of the act of March 3, 1899, be amended to read as follows:

"No person shall kill any otter, mink, marten, sable, or fur seal, or other fur-bearing animal, within the limits of Alaska Territory or in the waters thereof; and every person guilty thereof shall, for each offense, be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both; and all vessels, their tackle, apparel, furniture, and cargo found engaged in violation of this section shall be forfeited; but the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have power to authorize the killing of any such mink, marten, sable, fur seal, or other fur-bearing animal under such regulations as he may prescribe; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to prevent the killing of any fur seal except as authorized by law and to provide for the execution of the provisions of this section until it is otherwise provided by law."

SEC. 5. That section 1959 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and section 176 of the act of March 3, 1899, be amended to read as follows:

"The Pribilof Islands, including the islands of St. Paul and St. George, Walrus and Otter islands, and Seal Lion Rock, in Alaska, are declared a special reservation for government purposes; and until otherwise provided by law it shall be unlawful for any person to land or remain on any of those islands, except through stress of weather or like unavoidable cause or by the authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; and any person found on any of those islands contrary to the provisions hereof shall be summarily removed and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both fine and imprisonment; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to carry this section into effect."

SEC. 6. That section 1960 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and section 177 of the act of March 3, 1899, be amended to read as follows:

"It shall be unlawful to kill any fur seal upon the Pribilof Islands, or in the waters adjacent thereto, except under the authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and it shall be unlawful to kill such seals by the use of firearms or by other means tending to drive the seals away from those islands; but the natives of the islands shall have the privilege of killing such young seals as may be necessary for their own food and clothing, and also such old seals as may be required for their own clothing and for the manufacture of boats for their own use; and the killing in such cases shall be limited and controlled by such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

SEC. 7. That section 1961 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and section 178 of the act of March 3, 1899, be amended to read as follows:

"It shall be unlawful to kill any female seal or any seal less than 1 year old at any season of the year, except as above provided; and it shall also be unlawful to kill any seal in the waters adjacent to the Pribilof Islands, or on the beaches, cliffs, or rocks where they haul up from the sea to remain; and every person who violates the provisions of this or the preceding section shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and all vessels, their tackle, apparel, and furniture, whose crews are found engaged in the violation of either this or the preceding section shall be forfeited to the United States."

SEC. 8. That section 1 of the act of December 29, 1897, be amended to read as follows:

"No citizen of the United States, nor person owing duty of obedience to the laws or the treaties of the United States, nor any person belonging to or on board of a vessel of the United States, shall kill, capture, or hunt, at any time or in any manner whatever, any fur seal in the waters of the Pacific Ocean, including Bering Sea and the sea of Okhotsk, whether in the territorial waters of the United States or in the open sea."

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall have authority to appoint such additional officers, agents, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and the laws of the United States relating to the seal fisheries of Alaska, to prescribe their duties and to fix their compensation; he shall likewise have authority to purchase from the present lessee of the right to take seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, at a fair valuation to be agreed upon, the warehouses, salt houses, boats, launches, lighters, horses, mules, wagons, and other property of the said lessee on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, including the dwellings of the natives of said islands, the title to said dwellings upon acquisition by the United States to be vested in the native occupants thereof and their heirs; he shall likewise have authority to establish and maintain depots for provisions and supplies on the Pribilof Islands and to provide for the transportation of such provisions and supplies from the mainland of the United States to the said islands by the charter of private vessels or by the use of public vessels of the United States which may be placed at his disposal by the President; and he shall likewise have authority to furnish food, shelter, fuel, clothing, and other necessaries of life to the native inhabitants of the Pribilof Islands and to provide for their comfort, maintenance, education, and protection.

SEC. 10. That sections 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968, 1969, 1970, 1971, and 1972 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act, are hereby repealed. The provisions of this act shall take effect from and after the 1st day of May, 1910.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, some years ago the Committee on Territories sent a subcommittee to Alaska, and they made a most exhaustive report on the fur seal. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM], and one or two other Senators, whose names I do not now recall, composed that committee; and I now want the Senator from Minnesota to make a statement.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in 1903 a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories, consisting of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM], the then Senator from Colorado, Mr. Patterson, and myself, were sent to Alaska to investigate the conditions in that country. Among other matters which were investigated was that in relation to fur seals——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order, which is that the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] has no right under any rule or practice of the Senate to hold the floor and farm it out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Montana is not——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Montana will say all he desires to say, and then give other Senators an opportunity to be heard, and not subject them to the necessity of speaking by his favor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DIXON. I want to say to the Chair and to the Senator from Georgia that the Senator from Montana, I think, is less guilty—if that is the phrase I ought to use—of trying to farm out the time of this Senate than anybody in it. I think the Senator from Montana occupies as little time, except when he is really and pointedly interested in questions, as any Senator here. The Senator from Montana introduced this bill; he obtained the floor; he wanted to make a full statement, but in deference to the wishes of other Senators he has yielded to everyone who has wanted to make a statement ahead of the time when I finish my statement. If I have farmed out the time in any way that every other Senator does not always do in the Senate, I should like to have the Chair so to advise me.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing for the Senator from Montana to occupy fully as much time as he desires. I only desire that he shall complete what he has to say in order that others may be heard without having to have his permission to be heard.

Mr. DIXON. Then, Mr. President, if the Senate and the Senators who wanted to be heard in this case had allowed the Senator from Montana to finish his statement, he would have concluded it long before this, but before I had barely begun my statement different Senators asked me to yield, which I did in what I thought was the best of good nature, not needing to have done it; but in order to have the matter fully and fairly discussed I yielded to everyone who asked me. In what way I have farmed out the time or overstepped the rules of the Senate I want the Senator from Georgia or the Presiding Officer now to inform me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana, it seems to the Chair, has pursued the course which is quite customary in the Senate, but which is always done by unanimous consent and which can be done in no other way; but the moment the rule is invoked, it can not be done. The rule has now been invoked.

Mr. DIXON. I understood I could not yield except by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly; and the yielding was done on the theory that it was by unanimous consent until objection was made.

Mr. BACON. All I now ask is that the Senator will proceed in his own time.

Mr. DIXON. That is what the Senator is proceeding to do. The Senator from Georgia invokes a rule that I did not know was in existence; but if the Chair sustains it, then I am through for the present, and I will conclude my remarks later on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has not lost the floor. The Senator from Montana now has the floor as long as he himself desires to occupy it, but not to yield to other Senators to make speeches.

Mr. DIXON. That is what I understood. The Senator from Minnesota asked if I would yield to him.

Mr. LODGE. That, under the rules of the Senate, can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say that I asked exactly the same privilege that was accorded to the Senator from New York, and the privilege accorded the Senator from New York I think I ought to have.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana alone is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DIXON. If the Senator from Georgia objects, I can not yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BACON. I am not objecting to anything. I want the Senator to proceed in his own time, and I have no objection to his occupying the entire day, if he so desires. I do not mean by that to indicate that there is any such disposition on his part, but I want to cut off any possible suggestion that I wish to abridge his rights in any way. I do not. I wish the Senator to have the full time that he desires; but I do think in the matter of orderly procedure that he should go on and proceed to say to the Senate what he desires to say, and then other Senators may have an opportunity.

Mr. DIXON. That is exactly what the Senator from Montana was trying to do, but in his good nature and his respect to the opinions and feelings of every other Senator here, when some Senator while I was proceeding with my statement asked leave to make some remarks, in perfect good nature and in a perfect feeling of harmony and reciprocity I yielded. When the Senator from Minnesota asked if I would yield, I gladly did so. Now, if the Senator from Georgia objects to my yielding to the Senator from Minnesota, I can not do so.

Mr. BACON. I am in favor, Mr. President, of the Senator from Montana proceeding and finishing, and then let the Senator from Minnesota take the floor in his own right.

Mr. DIXON. Then, the Senator from Georgia objects to my yielding to the Senator from Minnesota, and I will resume my seat and present my remarks at a later time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think there is the slightest difference of opinion as to the merit of the bill if it is confined, as I understand it to be, to the repeal of the mandatory clauses; but it involves a question of jurisdiction which seems to me a very important one. On the 7th of December the Senator from Montana introduced a resolution; which was to this effect:

Resolved, That it be the sense of the Senate of the United States that the Government of Great Britain be requested by the Secretary of State to unite with the Government of the United States," etc.

That is clearly a foreign relation, if anything can be. That resolution was ordered to lie upon the table and be printed. On the same day the Senator introduced a resolution asking the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to furnish for the use of the Senate copies of all letters addressed to the Secretary of that department which related to the condition of the fur-seal herd in Alaska. That was a simple resolution of inquiry. Neither resolution was referred to a committee when it was introduced. Both resolutions were ordered to lie upon the table. Senators constantly introduce resolutions and ask to have them lie upon the table. Their destination is not determined by that. I well remember during the Cuban trouble many Senators introduced resolutions in regard to Cuba, which necessarily had to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but they were ordered to lie upon the table, so that they could be taken up and be debated. That is what was done with those two resolutions. When the reference was made I do not know; but it is very easy to make a reference of a matter lying on the table when nobody is paying any attention to it. They are small matters, and nobody is noticing them.

That first resolution is clearly a foreign-relation matter. Therefore, I suppose this proposed legislation is founded on the resolution of inquiry. Now we have a repetition of what happened yesterday. A resolution of inquiry is introduced. It asks for information from a department. Any Senator may submit such a resolution, and it does not, as a rule, require a reference to any committee. Subsequently it may be sent to a committee, and on it legislation be based. I think, Mr. President, that is not a sound method of procedure. I do not think we ought to deal with legislation in that way.

Questions relating to the seal herd have been before the Committee on Foreign Relations ever since I have been in the Senate. The act of 1870, which dealt with Alaska and was in the nature of an organic act, was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Commerce. At that time the seal question was in no sense international. It had never occurred to anybody at that time, I suppose, that the herd was in danger of extinction. By and by it was found that the herd was in danger of extinction, not from the killing on the Pribilof Islands, but from pelagic sealing, and we could not deal with pelagic sealing except through international arrangement. We made a claim that we retained our title in the seals despite the fact that they left the islands and went into deep water and returned. It was our effort to secure protection.

The seals are not a natural resource. I wish they were. If they had been, we would have stopped the extermination of the seal herd long ago. Unfortunately, it has been held by a tribunal, to which we assented—the Paris tribunal—that they were not a natural resource of the United States; that the moment the seal herd passed beyond the 3-mile boundary it became open to all the world to kill and destroy. That has been the condition that we have been met with.

Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations is constituted to deal with matters which in no way touch our foreign relations.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me if I suggest to him right in that connection——

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I think I will have to invoke the rule which has been invoked on me.

Mr. BACON. I would like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. DIXON. I will invoke the rule of the Senate. We may as well have this matter understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts is not yielding time for a speech. Any Senator can yield for a question, if he so desires.

Mr. DIXON. That is exactly what I was doing.

Mr. LODGE. The cases are not parallel. The Senator from Minnesota did not ask for recognition in his own time; he did not address the Chair. The Senator from Montana turned around and handed the floor over to him.

Mr. NELSON. I did address the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has the floor.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to ask——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. I yield for a question.

Mr. BACON. I ask if it is not true, in recognition of its international character——

Mr. DIXON. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will state his point of order.

Mr. DIXON. If it was unparliamentary for me to yield to the Senator from Minnesota, it is now unparliamentary for the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to the Senator from Georgia, and I raise the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Senator from Massachusetts is yielding for a question; the Senator from Montana yielded for a speech.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I beg to differ with the Chair. I yielded for no speech, but for a statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A statement and a question are not the same thing.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the question I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts is this: In recognition of the fact that this sealing question was distinctively an international question, is it not true that we sent as our representative to the Paris tribunal a Senator who had been chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations and was at that time the ranking member of the minority on the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. LODGE. One member of the Paris tribunal was the late Senator Morgan, who had been chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate. The subject had always been before that committee.

I was speaking of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Claims which involve in any way a citizen or subject of another power, or the claim of one of our own citizens which arises under a treaty, or any claim which in any way touches a foreign country go to that committee.

We have a Committee on Industrial Expositions; but if an exposition is international, bills relating to it go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Such bills do not involve treaty relations in the slightest degree, but they do involve relations with a foreign country; and those bills go to that committee, and have gone always to that committee without any question at all.

Mr. President, if there is any international question in the world, it is this question of the seal fisheries. It has been the subject of treaty, the subject of protracted negotiations, the subject of the decision of a tribunal. Nothing can be more certain than that. At this moment negotiations are pending with one country with regard to these seal fisheries. As the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] has pointed out, if we are to save the seals, it must be done by a general agreement which shall put a stop to pelagic sealing.

The long bill which was read here touches at a half a dozen points the articles of the treaty which were enacted—and I have them here on the desk—as agreed upon by the tribunal of Paris. I can not tell, nobody can tell until he has compared them, whether the terms of that act are consonant to the regulations by which we are bound, not only by the act of Congress enacting them, but bound as parties to the treaty which agreed to them. Nobody can tell that without the most careful examination. I do not mean to say that the Committee on Conservaion of National Resources is not able to make that comparison just as well as the Committee on Foreign Relations. But, Mr. President, the duty has been imposed upon the Committee on Foreign Relations. It has been created for that purpose—to deal with all legislation which not only affects our foreign relations, but particularly touches at any point a treaty or an arbitral decision. Those are the matters with which the committee has dealt. It is the only committee which has had every treaty before it, which has had every act before it to carry out the provisions of the treaty.

Here comes an act which must necessarily, as a matter of precaution, be compared with the articles of the treaty, the articles and regulations agreed on by the arbitral tribunal and enacted into law, sanctioned by a treaty. That comparison must be made.

Mr. President, whether this jurisdiction is to be spilt up among a half a dozen committees it is for the Senate to say, but it seems to me that the jurisdiction of the committees ought to be preserved; that the committee which is chosen to do a certain work should be permitted to do it. I certainly should resist just as strongly any attempt to take from the Committee on the Conservation of National Resources what belongs to it, just as I resisted yesterday the attempt to take from the Committee on the District of Columbia what I thought belonged to it, as I should resist an attempt to take from the Committee on Foreign Relations what it is perfectly clear, under unbroken precedent and practice, belongs to it.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. DIXON. I will put it in the shape of a question, so as not to ruffle the feelings of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. If it appears to the Senator from Massachusetts that the original act of Congress, which this present bill only attempts to amend, was reported from the Committee on Commerce——

Mr. LODGE. So I stated.

Mr. DIXON (continuing). And not from the Committee on Foreign Relations, would the Senator still insist that by some legerdemain it should now go to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. LODGE. There is no legerdemain about it, Mr. President. If the Senator from Montana had done me the honor to listen to me, he would have heard me say at the beginning that the original act, what may be called the organic act, was reported from the Committee on Commerce. At that time the seal fisheries were not and had never been considered an international question. No disputes had arisen from seal fisheries. Nobody contemplated the extermination of the herd. It became an international question subsequently, a question of prolonged and bitter discussion between countries, and then it passed within the control of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. DIXON addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. I was going to yield to the Senator from Vermont, but I am perfectly willing to yield to either of them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can yield to whomsoever he chooses.

Mr. LODGE. I yield first to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I thought the Senator from Massachusetts was laboring under a misapprehension, possibly, when he referred to the organic act relating to Alaska.

Mr. LODGE. The act of July 1, 1870, is the one I referred to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The act of July 1, 1870, is entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska."

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. And is not the organic Alaska act.

Mr. LODGE. I used the wrong phrase in saying "the organic act." It was an act which covered the whole seal-herd question.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I wanted to make this suggestion to him because he is making a very illuminating address. This act provided for the leasing of the islands for the purpose of killing seals, and it was under this act, as I understand, that all of the contracts have been made from that time to this.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It was not until as late as 1893, a good many years after, that this became an international question. It then became an international question, and it was determined that the Americans might kill upon the islands and that the Canadians might have the right to kill at sea, as I understand. If this is a bill that relates simply to the killing of the seal herd on the Pribilof Islands, I do not see how it can become a question of international importance.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I was merely going to make the same statement that has been made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

Mr. BROWN. While the Senator did not perhaps clear up my mind on the subject at the same time he answered the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, the message of the President on this subject seems to be written on the theory that this law is necessary to be passed before negotiations with foreign countries will be undertaken. This act, as I understood the chairman——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is mistaken about that. The negotiations are now pending.

Mr. BROWN. The President says, after discussing this very act which has been introduced by the Senator from Montana:

> But the discontinuance of this policy is recommended in order that the United States may be free to deal with the general question in its negotiations with foreign countries. To that end it is recommended that the leasing system be abandoned for the present.

Mr. LODGE. And yet, after reading that, Senators say this has nothing to do with foreign relations, and we are asked to repeal the act in order to promote negotiations.

Mr. BROWN. No.

Mr. LODGE. As a matter of fact, negotiations are now pending, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. As a matter of fact, the language here says that foreign negotiations are not due until this obstacle is removed. He sends the bill here to remove them.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that the President sends the bill here, and I do not know how the question got in the Department of Commerce and Labor. That has nothing to do with me, however, on the question of reference.

Mr. BROWN. The message refers to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I dare say. I did not know that the President had ordered the bill drawn or that it had been sent here by the President. I was not aware of that, but wherever it comes from——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LODGE. For a question only; not for a speech.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator stated that he did not know how this matter came before the Department of Commerce and Labor. I have the statute here; does he wish me to read it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would judge from the response of the Senator from Massachusetts that he did not.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should judge so, too. But I should like to have the answer of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the Senator. My attention was distracted for a moment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator stated that he did not know how this matter came before the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. LODGE. I will deal with that later. It is not important now.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator does not wish the information now?

Mr. LODGE. No; not at this time.

I have now a copy of the President's message, and I am a little at a loss to understand what the Senator from Nebraska said about the negotiations not to be begun. The language of the President is:

> As far as present conditions admit of, pending negotiations.

I am correct, Mr. President. I am not misinformed about the fact of negotiations with foreign nations.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senator what interpretation he puts upon the language of the President?

Mr. LODGE. I put the interpretation on the language of the President that he meant exactly what he said.

Mr. BROWN. I want to raise the point of order against the Senator that he will not answer my question. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I make the point of order that I do not yield. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Very good. If the Senator from Massachusetts does not yield, the Senator from Nebraska will cease his conversation.

Mr. BROWN. I appeal to the Senator to yield to me for a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator appealed to my courtesy to yield for a question. I yielded for a question, and then he proceeded to lecture me. I am perfectly willing to yield for a question.

Mr. BROWN. I thank you. My question is what interpretation the Senator from Massachusetts puts upon this language of the President in his message sent to Congress yesterday:

The discontinuance of this policy is recommended in order that the United States may be free to deal with the general question in its negotiations with foreign countries.

Mr. LODGE. I take it to mean precisely what it says, that it will make the United States free in its negotiations with foreign nations. My point is that these negotiations are now pending, as the President says farther on, and that therefore this bill, on the President's own statement, is connected with negotiations with foreign nations. The whole statement in that message is that the one principal object of this bill is to enable us to carry on negotiations now pending with foreign countries. The Senator from New York has already stated it. I do not care to go into details. But there are negotiations pending with one country greatly in interest. If we can extend those to two other countries, if we can make agreements with them—being interested in fisheries—if we can extend them perhaps still further to the southern rookeries and then get an agreement from the nations of the world that they will not permit their flag to be used for pelagic sealing, then you will save the seal herd, and you will save it in no other way. No legislation that you can pass will save the seal herd.

I want to see this mandatory clause repealed. I should be glad to see killing on the Pribilof Islands absolutely prohibited, but unless we can stop the pelagic sealing, the prohibition of the killing of seals on the Pribilof Islands would not save the seal herd.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator if the pending bill makes any changes in the existing law, except to repeal the mandatory provision of the statute requiring the renewal of the lease, and to give possession of the islands to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I am not familiar with the bill; it has not been printed.

Mr. LODGE. The repeal of the mandatory clause is in the bill. It is a very long bill. It is almost impossible to determine its provisions from merely hearing it read once, which is all I have done. I heard it read this morning at the table, but I heard clauses there which, unless my ears misled me, referred directly to international regulations and were based on articles enacted into law under the Paris tribunal.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. DIXON. I have read the bill, and the Senator says he has not read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I only heard it read.

Mr. DIXON. If I should state positively to the Senator that there is not a line or a word in it referring to international affairs, would it change his present view of the matter?

Mr. LODGE. Not at all.

Mr. DIXON. That is what I supposed, but I wanted to know.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. I do not think that affects it. The bill is inevitably connected with foreign relations. If it has not been carefully compared with the articles in the act approved April 6, 1894, after the Paris tribunal, it ought to be, because that goes to the very root of the whole matter, and no bill in reference to fur seals can possibly be properly considered unless it is based in many of its main provisions upon that act. It has affected and it must affect our international relations. On the President's own statement it does, for he says it will be a benefit to us in our negotiations. How can it be detached from our international relations?

Mr. President, I come back to the matter of jurisdiction; and I want to say just one word more. The jurisdiction of the committees of the Senate, especially the standing committees of long standing, has been well defined by practice and by precedent. It is absolutely impossible for any committee to know whether or not a matter belongs within its jurisdiction if legislation can be based on little resolutions of inquiry, which any Senator has a right to introduce on any subject, and those resolutions of inquiry can be sent to some committee unnoticed, and on that can be reared a fabric of legislation.

I was not aware that there was any attempt to legislate on that resolution of inquiry; and that is all the Senate had before it. It does not even show when it was referred. It was introduced to lie on the table.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that the committee ought to retain the jurisdiction which custom and practice have always given them and that they should not invade each other's jurisdiction in any way. It seems to me that is necessary for the orderly and proper transaction of business. I think that is especially the case in matters dealing with our foreign relations. They are matters to which many Senators give no special attention. They are matters to which the Committee on Foreign Relations gives necessarily the closest attention. The Committee on Foreign Relations has to be informed as to all these things. They are not subjects which, as a rule, other Senators enter upon very much. I think that that committee certainly which is appointed for that purpose and that purpose alone should be intrusted with all matters which relate to our international relations.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I have the honor to have been assigned both to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Conservation of National Resources. I confess I am unable to see one single convincing argument why this matter should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

In the first place it has nothing whatever to do, as I understand, with our dealings with foreign governments in any way. It is simply a question as to how the proper officer of the United States shall execute a lease in dealing with government property upon government territory, and there is no way whatever in which that matter of dealing with the fur seals on the Pribilof Islands becomes in any sense the concern of any foreign nation. It is a matter for the United States itself to consider and for it alone to consider. The fur seals on the Pribilof Islands are a government asset. They are a government liability.

Mr. LODGE. How long do they remain a government asset?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As long as they are on the Pribilof Islands or within 3 miles thereof.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And this bill deals with those seals when they are on the islands or within the 3-mile limit, and the jurisdiction of the United States over the seals is not subject to the concern of any foreign nation on earth as long as those seals are within the 3-mile limit or on the Pribolof Islands.

This is simply a matter of routine business. The Committee on Commerce recommended a certain leasing system on the Pribilof Islands. The proper administrative officer of the Government says that in the present instance it is not to the benefit of the Government to renew the lease. He construes it to be his duty, unless affirmative action is taken by Congress to the opposite effect, to renew the lease, and he wants Congress to amend the original act, the commerce act, which allowed and compelled him to make the lease. If that is not a purely domestic transaction, I, for one have not the clearness of vision to discern one when I see it.

Another thing. I have been wondering all this session what the purpose of the Senate was in creating the Committee on Conservation of National Resources. At the time the committee was created there was considerable said in the newspapers and on the floor of the Senate as to the very important duties to be devolved upon that committee.

The whole question of the conservation of our national resources was to come before this session of Congress, and it is before the Congress. Bills relating to every known and to a great many imaginary national resources have been brought before this Congress and referred to various committees, and not one of them has found its way to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources. What was it created for? I accepted the creation of that committee in good faith. I believe the Senate as a whole accepted it in good faith. And yet every question relating to the water powers of the United States, every question relating to the forests of the United States, every question relating to the grass of the United States, every question referring to every resource of the United States has gone, not to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources, formed especially to consider those bills, but to other committees. That those committees are fully qualified to deal with those subjects I grant, but as long as you have a committee to deal with them, with its jurisdiction specially defined, those questions should go to it.

Now, when this last one little question of the few remaining seals upon a small island within the territory of the United States presents itself and the question of the renewal or nonrenewal of the lease by the Department of Commerce and Labor comes up, it is in vain that the chairman of the committee suggests that it be referred to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources.

I have, as a member of either committee, no feeling in this matter, but it seems to me as a matter of just administration, as a matter of right, as a matter of the rights of these committees, that this bill, if any, should go to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources.

I will say, in regard to the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts, that there is hardly a question we consider in this body but which in some way or other affects our relations with foreign countries. As well might the Senator make the argument that our tariff bill should have gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations, because in the tariff bill we have a maximum and minimum clause. We have to deal with foreign nations. It has to deal with our treaties. Why not send our tariff bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations? The same is true in regard to questions of immigration. Why not send those questions to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts to the contrary notwithstanding, the jurisdiction of the committees of this body is not limited or bound by any well-known or defined rules. I have sought in vain to find any definite statement as to what are the real rights and jurisdiction of any of the committees of this body. A committee is simply formed, and its jurisdiction is defined by the custom which we have here from day to day in referring bills. Committees take charge of them, take jurisdiction of them, but the mere fact that a committee has jurisdiction of one phase of a subject-matter does not deter another committee from dealing with another and different phase of the same subject-matter.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am sorry I was the instrument of breaking the rules of the Senate. In my innocence I supposed that the Senate would accord me the same privilege that it did to the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who injected quite a bit of a speech into the remarks of the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. But I am glad I have found out about this, and all I can say is, I will be careful in the future not to break the rules.

In 1903 a subcommittee, consisting of four Senators, of the Committee on Territories, was sent to Alaska to investigate conditions in that Territory. I was a member of the subcommittee. We spent upward of eight weeks on the trip. Among other places we visited was the Pribilof Islands, and while we were there we examined the seal herds, and we saw some of the killing, and before our own eyes we saw seals killed contrary to the provisions of the lease. We became convinced of the fact that unless killing on those islands was absolutely suspended at once, the herd would in a very few years be totally exterminated.

When we returned the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who was a member of the subcommittee, prepared a very able report, and he brought to the attention of the Senate the fact that there was danger that the herd would be exterminated and recommended that the killing on the islands be totally suspended. I quote the following language from that report made to the Senate on the 12th of January, 1904:

> The committee therefore recommend that a suspension of all killing by the lessees of the seal islands be made at once and indefinitely, and that the Government of the United States shall attempt to reopen and conclude negotiations, etc.—

About pelagic sealing.

We became convinced of the fact that the first step, in order to open successful negotiations with foreign countries to stop pelagic sealing, was for us to stop the killing of seals on the islands to prevent the extermination of the herd. The moment that could be accomplished then we were in a position to force Japan and Canada to negotiate with us.

I know very well that the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who was then Secretary of State, did his very best to secure favorable negotiations with Canada and Japan, but he was handicapped in various ways, and I am satisfied of the fact that if we had passed a law at that time, as recommended by the subcommittee, absolutely stopping the killing of seals, the Senator from New York, as Secretary of State, would have been successful.

Mr. President, that is not all. On January 12, the same day that this very able report of the Senator from Vermont was made, he introduced a bill, being Senate bill 3355, the first section of which provided:

> That all killing of male fur seals on the Pribilof group of seal islands of Alaska by the lessees thereof, known as the North American Commercial Company, is hereby suspended at once and indefinitely.

Then the other sections of the bill provided that negotiations should be opened with foreign countries to stop pelagic sealing.

Now, what did the Committee on Foreign Relations do with that bill? They reported a substitute which I hold in my hand, Public Resolution No. 18, which instead of simply suspending the killing as they ought to have done, instead of enacting the bill of the Senator from Vermont into a law, was simply a joint resolution providing for a negotiation. It was passed, and from that day to this negotiations have gone on, and now we are no nearer a successful determination of that question than we were at that time.

The subcommittees were satisfied at that time, and I have been satisfied ever since, that the first step to accomplish in order to lead to a successful negotiation is to absolutely suspend the killing of the seal on the islands by these lessees.

Now, Russia had the same experience. When Russia first got hold of the Pribilof Islands the fur-seal trade was an immense one. They killed from 100,000 to 200,000 seals a year. It kept dwindling and dwindling until there was nothing hardly left of it. Finally they had to do what it is proposed to do in the pending bill. They had to utterly suspend all killing on the islands; and what was the result? The result of that suspension was that when we acquired the Pribilof Islands, under the treaty by which Alaska was ceded to us, the seal herd had recuperated and grown until at that time, if I remember the figures, they killed upward of 200,000 seals a year.

Now, what is this bill? From that day to this—and I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to answer the question—has the Committee on Foreign Relations made any attempt to stop killing the seal on those islands? Now, what is the situation here?

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. NELSON. Let us look it plainly in the face.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator want me to answer?

Mr. NELSON. No; I do not care. The Senator is probably out of order.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator asked me a question, and then answered it himself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota declines to yield.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, certainly; I do not insist.

Mr. NELSON. What is the question?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator asked me a question.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator want to answer it now?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I am perfectly ready to answer it.

Mr. NELSON. The question was, Why has the Committee on Foreign Relations done nothing from that day to this to stop the killing of the seal on those islands?

Mr. LODGE. I will tell the Senator. It is very easily answered. The stopping of the killing of seal on the Pribilof Islands means simply that none shall be killed by Americans and they shall all be killed by pelagic sealers under the worst circumstances, which would mean the extermination of the herd. It would not prevent the extermination of the herd. Apparently this bill is of value only to help us in negotiations.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Massachusetts is transgressing the rules of the Senate. He is making a speech.

Mr. LODGE. I have stopped.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts was proceeding under the consent of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. We are confronted exactly by the same conditions that Russia was. When Russia stopped the killing of seal on the islands it lead to the replenishment and recuperation of the herd. It was nearly exterminated at one time under Russian administration, and because of the fact that they utterly suspended and discontinued the killing for a long period—I do not recollect the time—the herd became a big and strong one, so that when we got the islands, as I said a moment ago, there were upward of 200,000 seal killed, in the first instance, by the lessee. It has gone down year by year, and since we were up in Alaska in 1903 it has been diminishing year by year, and diminishing to a large extent by the lawless killing that is going on upon the islands. You can never replenish that herd by merely stopping pelagic sealing. Unless you stop the killing of seals on the islands, any future effort will be futile and vain.

Now, let us look at this concrete case. Let us be a little fair and generous to one another. What are the facts? Here is this committee, of which the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] is chairman. That committee, and not the Foreign Relations Committee, has gone to the pains and labor of investigating this question, thoroughly investigating it, and brought it to the attention of the Department of Commerce and Labor, that has jurisdiction of the fur seals in Alaska. The outcome of its investigation is this bill, which has been brought in here to the Senate. That is what we have to the credit of that committee. Can the Committee on Foreign Relations point to a credit account as big as that?

I submit to the Senate, after a committee has been to this labor and investigated this subject, and has been instrumental in getting a message from the administration, and been instrumental in getting a bill introduced here, is it fair to take it out of the hands of that committee and put it into the hands of a committee—and I say it in the utmost Christian spirit—that has practically been sleeping on its oars for all these years? [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Applause in the galleries is not permitted.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, there seems to be some confusion with reference to the facts being considered here.

Mr. NELSON. I am not through yet.

Mr. CARTER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that the Senator from Minnesota had yielded the floor.

Mr. NELSON. I was not through, and the Senator from Montana must be careful or some Senator will call him to order.

Mr. CARTER. With the permission of the Senator——

Mr. NELSON. Of course I yield.

Mr. CARTER. I rose merely to make a suggestion.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. CARTER. I could put it in the form of a question to come within the rule.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator can put an interrogation point at the end of it.

Mr. CARTER. That would help some.

Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator and to the Senate that the discussion of the matter now before the body can not proceed with any degree of intelligence without having the bill, which is said to be the proper subject of consideration by the Committee on Conservation, printed so that its terms may be consulted and considered. I rose merely to suggest that the matter go over until to-morrow, that the bill might be printed, so that we may have the privilege of reading it.

Mr. NELSON. In a moment I will be through. I have only a few more words to add.

I am convinced that our State Department can not succeed in negotiations to stop pelagic sealing until they absolutely stop the killing of seals on the islands. The moment we do that we lay the foundation to bring foreign nations to terms.

I might say further, incidentally, that while these pelagic sealers are flying there the Canadian or British flag and the Japanese flag most of those Japanese sailing vessels are equipped, and the funds furnished, and they are really owned by Americans. They are really owned by Americans flying the Japanese flag.

Now, what about this bill? This is simply a bill which proposes, in substance, so far as the seals are concerned—it refers to other fur-bearing animals, but as far as the seals are concerned it proposes to suspend the killing of seals on the islands. Is there anybody here who will contend that we must consult foreign nations before we have the right to suspend the killing of the seal on our own islands and within our own borders? Is that a foreign question? If foreign nations have nothing to do with that, if we have the right to do with our own property and in our own borders what we please, what question is there in it that appertains to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations? This bill simply aims to stop the slaughtering of seals on those islands in our own territory.

The only fault I find with the motion of the Senator from Montana is that the bill ought to go to the Committee on Territories. That committee has jurisdiction of Alaska and all that pertains to it. It belongs more appropriately to that committee than it does to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

But I want to be fair, I want to be just, I want to be generous. I want to be just to the committee that has devoted its time for two months to the investigation of this problem. It has examined witnesses, it has taken testimony, it has made inquiries and presented the facts to the Department of Commerce and Labor, and that department has taken hold of the matter and prepared a bill and induced the President to send in a special message. After all that work has been done by that committee, why should we relegate the bill to a committee that has not done anything at all about it for several years?

Mr. President, this is all I have to say. I believe in fair play and comity between committees of the Senate, and I believe that some of the younger Senators who happen to be at the head of some of the minor committees which are ordinarily not considered of much consequence should have some comity and some justice accorded to them.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I have been looking over the bill. It is quite apparent that there are many things in the bill properly the subject of consideration by the Committee on Conservation of National Resources or the Committee on Territories, some committee which is familiar with the management of the seals by the Department of Commerce and Labor. There are also, however, in the bill provisions which clearly ought to be subjected to the scrutiny of the committee having to do with foreign relations and be made the subject of conference with the Secretary of State, who is now conducting the negotiations upon which must necessarily depend the saving of the seal herd.

There are two aspects of the bill. It seems to me that it ought to be possible to have both things considered. Certainly this legislation ought not to be enacted without the consideration of the committee charged with the foreign relations and with conference with the Secretary of State.

Let me say that the negotiations which are now pending are to a large extent based upon the very able report the Senator from Minnesota has just referred to, the report signed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. That committee made a very full and exhaustive examination of the subject. They made a report, and the report was transmitted to the State Department, and has been made the basis of the negotiations which are now pending. In this bill I find provisions which appear to me to be inconsistent with the conclusions reached in that report and made the basis of negotiations.

I think in some way that the terms of this bill ought to be made the subject of conference with the Secretary of State, who is engaged in the negotiations, and I suppose that that should properly be through the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New York what provision in this bill relates in any way to foreign relations or to the treaty-making power. I looked it over myself and I was unable to find it, but my examination was only a casual one.

Mr. ROOT. That illustrates the trouble of having such a bill passed on exclusively by a committee which is not familiar with the negotiations that have been and are in progress. There is no one with greater acumen than the Senator from Nevada, and no one who would see more quickly where provisions here may create a situation under which we would have to go to Congress and get a repealing statute in order to give effect to the negotiations that are in progress. This he would see if he was familiar with the negotiations; but he is not. I will tell him personally or I will tell the Senate in executive session, but I do not think it is wise in public to go into the details of negotiations in progress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 6737.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am quite willing, if it be the pleasure of the Senate, that the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside for the completion of the debate and the submission of the motion now before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I think we had better have the regular order and let the discussion of the railroad bill go on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to laying aside the regular order.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10280. An act to authorize the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, to receive twelve 3.2 inch breech-loading field guns, carriages, caissons, limbers, and their pertaining equipment, from the State of Massachusetts, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COURT OF COMMERCE, ETC.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6737) to create a court of commerce and to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS resumed the speech begun by him on Tuesday. After having spoken for fifty minutes,

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the remarks of the Senator from Iowa, but it strikes me that here is one of the great questions confronting this administration, in which the administration is vitally interested, and the bill having been reported here without even comment by the committee which reports it, and when a Senator of the United States, who probably knows as much about this question as any living man, is attempting to discuss the matter reported by the committee, there ought to be a full Senate to hear him. So, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana not to require a call of the Senate? I know very well why Senators are absent. We have been held here until 2 o'clock by morning business, and Senators must have something to eat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless the Senator from Montana withdraws the suggestion, the Chair will, under the rule, have to order the roll to be called.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, in deference to the Senator from Iowa, if he insists upon it, I will withdraw my request for a call; but I think it is more important for the absent Senators to be here at this time than it is for them to be eating down in the restaurant and taking care of their physical comfort.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; I shall not interfere.

Mr. DIXON. I think I shall insist on the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Clay	Gore	Percy
Bourne	Crane	Guggenheim	Perkins
Brandegee	Crawford	Hale	Purcell
Briggs	Cummins	Heyburn	Richardson
Bristow	Curtis	Hughes	Scott
Brown	Depew	Johnston	Simmons
Bulkeley	Dillingham	Jones	Smith, Md.
Burkett	Dixon	Kean	Smith, S. C.
Burnham	du Pont	La Follette	Stephenson
Burrows	Elkins	Martin	Sutherland
Burton	Fletcher	Money	Taliaferro
Carter	Flint	Nixon	Warren
Chamberlain	Frazier	Overman	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	Gamble	Paynter

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS resumed his speech. After having spoken, with interruptions, in all for about two hours, he said:

Section 12 is entirely new in the legislation of the United States. It touches and embraces the most important subject which is now before the people of the United States for consideration. It proposes changes in the law which are of vital import. I shall deal with that section at some length. As I am nearing the end of the bill, and as I know those Senators who have been patient enough to listen to me must be weary of the sound of my voice, and as I hope that some of these vacant chairs may be filled at some other time, if it is the pleasure of those in charge of the bill, I would be glad to yield the floor at this time to resume it to-morrow.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I entirely agree to the Senator's request, and I ask that the bill may be laid aside temporarily until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

[For Mr. CUMMINS's entire speech see Senate proceedings of March 18.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, March 18, 1910, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 17, 1910.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., delivered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, we thank Thee that the good men do lives to inspire, ennoble, and purify those who come after them; that to-day the name of Ireland's patron saint will be hallowed in the hearts of men irrespective of race or creed. In recognition of his brave, self-sacrificing devotion in carrying the light of the Gospel to a benighted people. Grant that we may emulate his virtues by living the truth as it is given us to see the truth in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, the Journal having been read and approved, I demand the regular order.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DWIGHT. There is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 143 gentleman present; not a quorum.

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the RECORD show in connection with this roll call that my colleague from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has been confined to his home by illness since Saturday, and at the proper time will ask that he be granted leave of absence on account of such illness.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and eighty-nine Members have responded; a quorum.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] demands the regular order. The regular order is business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, a privileged question.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 8 OF CENSUS ACT.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration House joint resolution 172, a resolution of privilege under the Constitution of the United States, notwithstanding the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up as a privileged question under the Constitution a House joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 172.

Resolved, etc., That the schedules relating to population for the Thirteenth Decennial Census, in addition to the inquiries required by the act entitled "An act to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, approved July 2, 1909," approved February 25, 1910, shall provide inquiries respecting the nationality or mother tongue of all persons born in foreign countries.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read as follows:

Strike out the period at the end of line 10 and insert "and of the nationality or mother tongue of parents of foreign birth of persons enumerated."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BUTLER. I make the point of order, under the rules of the House, the resolution has no privileged standing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that under the rules of the House the joint resolution just read does not present a privileged question.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Chair desire to hear me?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman, although the Chair——

Mr. BUTLER. I have no desire to make a statement on the point of order after the action of the House yesterday.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana on the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as I understand it, is that the resolution is not privileged under the rules of the House. I do not claim that it has any privilege under the rules of the House. I admit that it is not privileged under the rules of the House; but what I do claim is that it is privileged under the Constitution of the United States, notwithstanding the rules of the House, because it is legislation for carrying out an absolute and unqualified mandate of the Constitution.

The Constitution requires, as strong as language can require, the Congress to provide for taking a census of the population of the country every ten years. That provision has been construed as mandatory from the time of the adoption of the Constitution until the present time. Every time a census bill providing for the decennial census of population has been brought up and considered in the House it has always been considered as a privileged measure under the Constitution, without at any time enjoying any preferential status under the rules of the House. There are perhaps half a dozen decisions by various occupants of the chair in this body during the last century holding, without a single exception, that legislation providing for a census, under the Constitution, is privileged legislation, and is always in order as a matter of privilege.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, is a resolution amendatory of the law providing for the taking of the Thirteenth Decennial Census. It refers exclusively to the enumeration of population. It is a resolution to amend the schedule of population, requiring a more particular classification, for political and scientific purposes, than the original law required.

The law as it now stands simply requires a classification of alien-born persons by place of birth. That sort of classification carries with it no kind of social or scientific value, because everybody understands it to mean a classification by political division. There are countries in Europe, and perhaps other continents, where political division is not a correct designation or a true criterion of the question of nationality or race, or racial distinction. Russia, Austria, and Turkey, for instance, contain principalities and provinces formerly independent. Men born in those principalities and provinces would be classified as Russians, as Austrians, or as Turks, as the case may be; when, as a matter of fact, there is little or no homogenity between the people born in those principalities whose racial characteristics are fixed, and the ordinary native of Russia, or Austria, or Turkey. In England, Ireland, and Scotland the people are born under the political dominion of the Kingdom of Great Britain. A man born in Ireland or Scotland, under existing law, might properly be classified as an Englishman. That kind of classification, I repeat, carries with it no particular scientific or sociological value whatever. The object of the proposed resolution is to classify the alien-born population of the United States according to race or mother tongue as far as it can be done.

Every Member of the House knows that there are hundreds of thousands, millions of men and women of foreign birth, many of whom are now citizens of the United States, who will be enumerated in the census and will be reckoned as the basis of apportionment of Representatives. Those citizens and those persons are distributed throughout the country, largely in the industrial centers. Thousands may be found in the mines, in the factories, in the workshops, on the railroads, in the stores, on the farms, and in all the trades and industries. They are valuable citizens in this great country of ours; but naturally those people feel a just attachment to the mother country, the country that contains the remains of their ancestors, the country around which clusters so many social and personal recollections that are dear to their hearts; and this great body of adopted citizens of the United States have petitioned Congress to make the classification that this resolution proposes. A large delegation, composed of representative citizens of foreign birth, visited this city last week to urge the adoption of this legislation. They presented a petition signed by several thousand men representative of those of our citizens of foreign birth. The petitioners came from Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and almost all the States in the Union, carrying this request.

I submit that it is a reasonable request. A citizen who has no love for his mother country, it seems to me, can not acquire a very strong attachment for his adopted country; and the mere fact that these alien citizens still remember the fatherland, with all of its sacred recollections, is evidence of the very highest devotion to government and to political institutions.

This resolution was brought up for consideration yesterday. It was held in order by the Chair, but the decision of the Chair was overruled by a substantial vote of the House. I said on the floor yesterday that I believed the resolution was in order on account of its constitutional privilege; that if it were not in order yesterday it would not be in order to-day. I believed that then; I believe it now; but, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of Members of this House, as I am informed, who believe that the special rule creating calendar Wednesday for the consideration of a particular class of business made it exceptional, and that while this resolution is a resolution of privilege ordinarily, it was not a resolution of privilege on calendar day.

I want to say in this connection, in justification or in explanation of the manner in which this resolution was presented to the House yesterday, that there was no thought of subverting calendar day or impairing its usefulness for the consideration of nonprivileged bills; but I regarded this bill as a privileged one, even on that day, and it is an emergency bill. I will quote one paragraph from a letter of the Director of the Census, printed with the report on this bill, on this subject. After approving the bill, it says:

> Moreover, if enacted, it should be within the shortest possible time, in order that the necessary additional instructions to the enumerators may be framed and distributed before the enumeration actually begins.

A bill embodying this amendment passed the Senate two or three days ago, but it included a reenactment of all of section 8 of the present census law; and if the House Committee on the Census had agreed to that bill and reported it to this House it would have opened up the entire section for amendment, a section which has provoked, and probably if presented to the House again would provoke more coutroversy and disputation than any other section in the census bill. And in order to avoid that, in order not to occupy unnecessary time, the Committee on the Census concluded to report the amendment in this brief resolution, presenting to the House exactly what it desired to accomplish, and nothing more. I found no opposition to the resolution among Members of the House. I innocently supposed that by calling it up yesterday morning it might be disposed of within a period at most of ten minutes and be out of the way, and I felt the pressing exigency that this resolution should be considered, earnestly desired as it is by the Director of the Census, justified its immediate consideration. I felt then and I feel now that it ought to have been considered yesterday. It was not considered. The House, by a decisive vote, held it not to be in order.

I believe now, as I believed yesterday, that the resolution was in order. If the act of the House yesterday is to stand as a precedent, holding this class of legislation to be nonprivileged, the result will be the reversal and overturning of a long list of precedents and a change of the policy of the House in relation to this kind of legislation since the very organization of the Government. In view of all the circumstances, I do not regard the decision of the House yesterday as decisive of the question. I believe the resolution is in order, notwithstanding the rules of the House, according to the practice that has behind it the sanction of generations of wisdom and experience.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I did not raise this point of order either to provoke mirth nor to invite a fight. I did it in sincerity. The argument made by the gentleman from Indiana was good prior to March 16, 1910; but this tribunal yesterday rendered a verdict against him, and I ask it to-day to enter judgment thereon. Under the rule providing for business in order on calendar Wednesday I find the following language:

> On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except—

And so forth.

And under Rule XXIV, the rule that I conceive operating to-day, I find the following language:

> The daily order of business shall be as follows.

Therefore, if this resolution was not privileged yesterday, it can not be privileged to-day. It was argued by some of the Members of the House that it could have been considered day before yesterday. I want to know whether or not during the night and after we adjourned yesterday these rules of themselves changed. I want to know what has happened in the House since last Tuesday to alter or change the rules. I have no recollection of any change. The majority yesterday settled with me the question of privilege raised on this resolution under these rules. I believe in the verdict made by the majority, and I shall vote, if opportunity is given me, against the consideration of this bill to-day.

There was no fraud practiced yesterday in obtaining the majority and none can be charged. There was no accident; no one claimed there was, and those who secured the majority will certainly not confess a mistake was made.

I raised the point of order in sincerity. I want to vote for this resolution when it can be reached properly. If the House concludes that this is the day for it, and overrides this point of order, I am content and will vote for the resolution. In the meantime, I would like to know, either from the Chair or from the House, whether or not this resolution has a privileged standing to-day under the rules of the House.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman's logic is that as the Constitution was voted down yesterday it ought to be voted down to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. My logic is that if the Constitution of the United States did not apply in this House on March 16, 1910, it has no application March 17, 1910, and will not apply to it to-morrow, affecting its business. In response to the gentleman from Missouri, to make myself as plain as I can, I have no excuse whatever to make for the point of order I have made, raising the question of privilege on the pending resolution.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I voted against this proposition yesterday, and I am against it to-day for the same reason I was yesterday. I should have supported it yesterday, in spite of yesterday being calendar Wednesday, if I had thought it presented a question privileged under the Constitution. I want to call the attention of the House to this view of the matter. The constitutional provision is that there shall be an actual enumeration of the people of the United States every ten years. That says a numbering of the people, not how they shall be classified. The object and purpose of this constitutional provision is to find out how many people there are in the United States, not what kind of people they are or of what race or of what nationality they belong to, for the purpose of apportioning Representatives and electors among the States, as well as taxes, when direct taxes are to be levied.

So that it is utterly immaterial, so far as the object and purpose of the constitutional provision is concerned, whether they are Irishmen, Dutchmen, or Jews.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. A few years ago, while slavery was in vogue, under the Constitution I believe the colored population counted only for three-fifths their number. Would it not be necessary to determine how many colored people there were?

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman mentions the only exception, except Indians not taxed, because the constitutional provision was three-fifths of the slaves should be counted and Indians not taxed should not be counted. Now, it is utterly immaterial for the purpose named in the Constitution, in order to carry out the mandatory provision laid upon Congress by the Constitution, whether these people belong to one race or another. The question is how many people there are in the United States, and that question must be determined so that we may know how many Representatives there shall be in the Congress of the United States and how many electors, and how taxes shall be apportioned. Therefore in legislating it looks solely to finding out how many people there are in the United States, in order to determine how many Representatives shall be elected to this body; but when you come to the matter of classification, it is a matter of detail, and not actual enumeration for the purpose outlined in the Constitution, and it seems to me it is not a matter of constitutional privilege, even under the precedents.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Some States have what is called the "grandfather clause."

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly; and it is a very good provision.

Mr. OLMSTED. And it may be very necessary to consider, when we come to determine the apportionment here, the right of a Member to his seat under the Constitution. It may be necessary that there be some enumeration along that line. So that a mere count of the number of people living in the United States would not fulfill the requirements.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman gives another possible exception. [Laughter.] That is all right, gentlemen. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania contend for a moment—and he is a good lawyer, although some of the gentlemen who laugh on the other side are not lawyers at all [renewed laughter]—does the gentleman contend that there can be any such question raised by a resolution of the character presented by the gentleman from Indiana? How could that possibly be involved in the purpose for which Congress is required to enumerate inhabitants in apportioning Representatives, electors, or taxes?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman say that the constitutional requirement for an enumeration is simply for the purposes of representation?

Mr. HARDWICK. And to apportion taxes; yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the use, then, of finding out how many children and women there are in the country?

Mr. HARDWICK. We base representation, of course, on population, as my friend suggests. That involves the necessity to enumerate women and children and anybody else in the country.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the number of women and children are not taken into account when we come to establish the ratio of representation in Congress.

Mr. HARDWICK. O Mr. Speaker, I am astonished at the gentleman that he does not know that much. We take the whole population—even counting the insurgents. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, while the constitutional privilege may extend and may override the rules of the House in so far as it is necessary for this Government to enumerate and find out the total number of people in the United States, it certainly does not extend to every detail of classification. Why, we have a Census Office, a permanent bureau; and if the contention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] is sound, every piece of legislation that comes here for an extra clerk, every detail connected with the operation of the permanent Census Bureau, becomes a matter of the highest privilege that overrides every rule of the House——

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. With pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that if he yesterday had determined that this resolution was in pursuance of a mandate of the Constitution, he would have voted to sustain the Chair?

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly. The gentleman understood me correctly. I want to say to the gentleman, to make it plainer, that the fact that yesterday was calendar Wednesday had nothing whatever to do with my vote on this question; nothing whatever. I do not believe that the privilege extends as far as the gentleman from Indiana insists. If this were the bill providing for an enumeration, and that only of the total number of people in the United States, in order to apportion Representatives, I would believe it was a matter of the very highest privilege.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fourteenth constitutional amendment, which provides:

> But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the legislature thereof is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] just directed attention to that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania directed attention to what he called the grandfather's clause.

Mr. HARDWICK. And to this question also.

Mr. MANN. But this of course goes away beyond the question of the grandfather's clause.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How is that amendment connected with this question?

Mr. MANN. Does not this contemplate that there may be information to be derived in addition to the mere enumeration of the inhabitants?

Mr. HARDWICK. I thank the gentleman for his question, and I believe it was propounded in good faith. Mr. Speaker, I have already said in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] that undoubtedly if that were the resolution which the gentleman from Indiana rose in his place and offered, it might be privileged, but the resolution that he offered is not that. It does not squint at that. It is to classify according to nationality these foreign-born people, and no such question as that suggested by the gentleman from Illinois can enter into the question now raised by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what questions might enter into the question of representation and enumeration under this provision of the Constitution.

Mr. HARDWICK. I quite understand that; but I am judging by the resolution as it reads, that is presented here by the gentleman from Indiana, which does not even refer indirectly or remotely to the question the gentleman raises. In answer to the position I take the gentleman suggests a suppositious case, one that might arise or might not.

Mr. MANN. But we are discussing a point of order and not the merits of the proposition.

Mr. HARDWICK. We are discussing a point of order on the resolution now before the House, whether the resolution before the House directing information to be obtained in reference to the classification according to nationality of the people enumerated is in order, under the constitutional mandate of the Constitution that an enumeration of the people shall be provided for by Congress.

Mr. MANN. Is it proper for us now to determine the constitutional effect before we get the information?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, one more word, and then I will conclude. The gentleman's question is fair and I will answer it candidly. If the proposition presented by the gentleman from Indiana could possibly affect representation in this body, could possibly affect the total of enumeration, could possibly affect the number of Representatives in this House, or of electors, then I do think that it would be a matter of the highest privilege; but when the classification presented by the gentleman in this resolution is one that can not, on its face and in its own terms, possibly affect this question, the gentleman, who is a lawyer himself, will readily see that the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana can not possibly come within the reasoning suggested by himself or by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. An enumeration of the classes of population affords the basis for the imposition of a capitation tax?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman believe that the Federal Government might in this way discriminate between the alien and citizens in imposing capitation taxes? Then, another question. The Constitution says this census shall be taken within every subsequent term of ten years in such manner as they shall by law direct. This is the law directing the manner in which this shall be taken, applied to its classification. Is not that part of the constitutional census itself?

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, replying to the gentleman's question. We have already passed a law under which the work of enumeration will be done, and the gentleman's amendment here can not possibly affect the efficiency, the accuracy, or the correctness of the total enumeration, and the fact that some of the people are of one nationality or some of another does not possibly, and can not possibly, affect their representation or taxation, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, there is no possible way in which this resolution can be privileged under the Constitution. Just one word further.

I want to say that I am not opposed to the resolution, but I am opposed to the precedent that the gentleman seeks to establish. I would willingly and gladly, as far as I am concerned, yield unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, but I do not believe it is a fair construction of the constitutional provision that the gentleman cites to say that every amendment to a census law, amendatory to the bills providing for the taking of each decennial census, in mere matter of detail, or of classification of the population, are clothed with a dignity, rank, and importance over and above all other legislation and without regard to the rules and procedure of this body.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will hear me for a moment I would like to state my views on the question as to whether this proposition is in order to-day. Yesterday I did not believe the proposition was in order under the rules of the House. To-day I believe that the proposition is in order and the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to recognition, and I desire to state to the House my reasons for this belief. The rules of this House are divided in two separate parts, one established by the written rules that are enacted by the House and the other by the precedents of the House adopted from time to time. Precedents are just as much a part of the rules as the rules themselves. Now, back in the distant past the rules themselves established certain questions of privilege. In other words, they say that some business should be considered ahead of other business. In the past some Speaker decided in a matter affecting the taking of a census, that as that was a constitutional requirement which Congress must carry out, that that itself made the question a matter of privilege which should be considered before other business was transacted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. First let me finish this statement and then I will yield. Now, I take it that no man denies the proposition that this House by a majority of the House can refuse to consider any matter if it desires to do so, no matter how high the privilege is.

If the Speaker holds this question is in order to-day, and says it is a matter of privilege, any gentleman on the floor can rise in his seat and raise the question of consideration and the House can refuse to consider it. Therefore it is absolutely in order for the House to adopt a rule to refuse to consider any matter, regardless of how high the privilege is, that it could refuse to consider by a majority vote at any time. The rules are merely an expression of the will of this House written into permanent shape. The will of the House is often expressed from day to day. The rules express the permanent will of this House. But you can override and change these rules whenever the House in its judgment sees fit.

Now, the position we took yesterday in reference to this matter was not that this proposition had not been a matter of privilege in the past.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield here?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. HARDWICK. It is right on that point.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I prefer to finish my statements in sequence.

Yesterday we did not deny that under the precedents established, a long line of them, it had been held that a matter that affected the census was privileged. Nobody denied the precedents that were cited by the Speaker, but the argument we made to this House was that this rule establishing calendar Wednesday had been written subsequent to the making of these precedents, and that the purpose of the rule was to wipe out every precedent that interfered with the calling of the calendar and the consideration of bills under the Wednesday calendar. We did not contend that it did away with the precedents for the consideration of business on any other day in the week. We merely contended that it did away with the privilege of certain classes of business on Wednesday. We contended that it did away with the privilege of calling up an appropriation bill on Wednesday. We contended that it did away with the precedents established by some Speaker in the past who said that a census bill was a matter of privilege.

Now, that is the contention we stood on yesterday, and we merely contended that this House had written in its permanent law a rule that no matter of privilege coming under the rules of the House, no matter of privilege established by a ruling of the Speaker, should interfere with calendar Wednesday. That is what we fought for. That is what we stood for yesterday. And, in my judgment, that is what we ought to stand for to-day. We stood for the right of this House to set aside this particular day, and not allow it to be interfered with by any business that was not on the calendar. That being the case, I think the decision of yesterday on the part of this House goes no further than Wednesday, and that on all other days in the week the rules and precedents that applied before the adoption of calendar Wednesday apply to-day, as they did in the past.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Upon what is the precedent based that has heretofore controlled the action of the Chair in determining whether or not bills such as the gentleman now presents had a higher privilege than any privilege of the rules of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Based on the will of this House.

Mr. TAWNEY. Based on the Constitution of the United States; and that is what the gentleman said yesterday. That is the argument of every man on that side of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why, not at all. I never made any such argument. I will refer the gentleman to the RECORD. My argument is there. There is nothing in the rule which makes a constitutional question privileged. Merely some Speaker in the past said that this being a constitutional question it was privileged, and the House sustained, either by not appealing from the Speaker or by a direct vote, his ruling, and they put it in the rules and it became a part of them at that time.

Mr. REEDER. I would like to ask you if you desire now to say that the Constitution shall have no precedence over the rules?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think the Constitution has any privilege over the rules, except the privilege that this House itself gives the Constitution. There is nothing in the Constitution defining what business shall be privileged in this House. And there is nothing in the Constitution that gives any matter constitutional privilege.

Mr. REEDER. Does the gentleman desire now to place himself and this House in the attitude of saying that the Constitution shall have no such preference?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman evidently does not understand my argument. The only thing we established yesterday was that no matter is privileged to interfere with Wednesday's calendar.

Mr. HARDWICK. I just want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. REEDER. Do you say that you desire personally, or desire that this House shall take action that the Constitution shall have no preference?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I never said anything of the kind, and I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. REEDER. Do you wish it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not desire to discuss the question, because it has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask the gentleman this question: He speaks of the precedents on this subject. If the gentleman has examined these precedents themselves, he will know that in each case where this matter was held to be privileged it was a census bill, providing for the enumeration, on which the Speaker gave us the rulings, and not a mere amendment, providing some sort of classification by race or nationality.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman I draw no distinction in my mind between an amendment to a census bill and a census bill. As a matter of fact, the original bill the gentleman from Indiana brought before this House at this session was an amendment to the census law.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly; but it provided for an enumeration of the population. This only applies to a classification.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand. It is along the same line, and I draw no distinction between them. What I do contend is that the rules of this House on the matter of privilege have not been changed on any day of the week excepting Wednesday, and on Wednesday we have made an absolute change in the consideration of business, both by the rule and by the precedent established yesterday, so that no business shall be considered by this House on Wednesday except that which comes on that calendar.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman? [Cries of "Rule!"] The gentleman understands that the Constitution of the United States itself provides in relation to Congress that the House may establish the rules and manner of its proceeding.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And this is simply a rule established by the House in accordance with the authority of the Constitution as to the mode and manner in which it will proceed to consider bills.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly. The constitutional warrant for adopting the rules; the constitutional warrant for determining what business we shall consider at any particular time.

Mr. HARDY. It is only a matter of precedent which makes the census a privileged matter, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I had yielded to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY. As it is merely a matter of precedent and that not by any constitutional provision giving it precedence, and any other subject of legislation under the Constitution would, so far as the Constitution is concerned, be of just as high privilege, would it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand it, this privilege is established by precedent and not by the Constitution, and a vote against it is a vote against a precedent of this House and not in conflict with the Constitution.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair indulge me to the extent of listening——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is recognized. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York in a moment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, just a few words, chiefly in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia.

I hope that the point of order made by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] will not prevail. I admit that he had abundant justification for it, but, nevertheless, I do not think that it should prevail. It has always been ruled, I think, from the beginning of the Government almost that legislation presented in obedience to an express mandate of the Constitution is privileged over and above the rules of the House; but the gentleman from Georgia says that this proposed joint resolution is not in pursuance of a mandate of the Constitution. He says that the Constitution merely commands that the number of people within the United States shall be ascertained. Now, I wish to call his attention to the language of the Constitution which provides for the enumeration:

> Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.

Now, how could those elements be determined by a mere count of the human beings within the limits of the United States? Clearly the Constitution contemplated more than that as necessary to comply with its mandate. The census is to be taken for the purpose of apportioning direct taxes and for the still more important purpose of determining the apportionment of Members of Congress and their rights to their seats.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand my colleague to say that, in his judgment, this resolution is privileged.

Mr. OLMSTED. I thought so yesterday, and I think so to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, my friend has not changed his mind since yesterday?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I did not change it yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me call his attention to the two rules: Rule XXIV, which governs the business to-day, and Rule XXV, providing for calendar Wednesday. In his judgment, is one rule as binding upon the House as the other?

Mr. OLMSTED. In my judgment, equally so.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the gentleman think that the precedent made yesterday by a clear majority against the privilege invoked for this resolution binds the House to-day?

Mr. OLMSTED. It is quite within the power of the House to reverse it to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman would not expect the House to reverse itself within twenty-four hours.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, I do not know.

Mr. MADISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. MADISON. Would not the holding that this motion is privileged to-day be a reversal of yesterday's action?

Mr. OLMSTED. I think it would.

Mr. MADISON. Clearly a reversal of it?

Mr. OLMSTED. I think so.

Mr. MADISON. Because if this is a constitutional question, then unquestionably the constitutional right to override the rules yesterday applies equally to-day.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the Constitution rises above one rule of the House, it rises above all.

Mr. MADISON. If it is applicable to-day it was applicable yesterday.

Mr. OLMSTED. I entirely agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MADISON. There can not be any question about it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Not in my mind. Now, I want to go one step further in reply to the gentleman from Georgia. We have in this country subjects of Russia who in a general enumeration would have to be called Russians, but who are Chinese and Japanese. Russians generally are permitted to be naturalized and to become voters, while Chinese and Japanese are not under our existing law, even though they may be Russian subjects. It is very important that they be enumerated. This very joint resolution provides for classifying them.

There are certain sections of our country that would consider that a most important provision. I think, therefore, that this joint resolution is within the rulings of the Chair, as shown by the precedents from the original formation of this House down to the present day, and is entitled to privilege over every rule of the House.

I am just as much in favor of calendar Wednesday as any gentleman here; as much so as my friend from Alabama. I think I was the first Member on this side of the House to say a good word for the rule. I voted for it, while the gentleman from Alabama, I think, opposed it.

I was sorry my friend from Indiana felt it necessary to interpose a privileged motion yesterday. I felt it was privileged because of the constitutional mandate rising higher than any rule. I think it is privileged to-day, and hope the point of order will not be sustained.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman, on the constitutional proposition, if his theory is right, would it not follow that this would be in order, even though there was no report of a committee on the resolution? To make myself plain, if it is in order because the Constitution makes it in order, then the report of a Committee on the Census does not add anything to it. Would not that follow?

Mr. OLMSTED. It has been so held in election cases as to the right of a Member. It was so ruled by Speaker Reed.

Mr. NORRIS. Any Member could come in with a bill that had not even been printed and take up the time of the House on the ground that it was an amendment to the census law.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think he would have to come in in the regular way.

Mr. NORRIS. He would have to claim recognition, of course.

Mr. OLMSTED. He would not get any standing unless he came in in the regular and proper way.

Mr. NORRIS. Would it not follow logically, from the gentleman's theory, that any Member of the House to-morrow could present here a bill touching the census without ever having it referred to a committee, as a question of the highest privilege under the Constitution and the law, and would it not be the duty of the Speaker to say that that was privileged?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not think every amendment to the census law would be privileged.

Mr. NORRIS. No; but you could have one on this point, or he could bring in a bill making a new census law.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not think the House would consider it for a minute unless it came in backed up by a committee report.

Mr. NORRIS. Would not it be privileged, and would it not be the duty of the Speaker to permit it to come in? The House could vote it down, of course.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know what the Speaker would feel it his duty to do. I think it would have more privilege if it came in in the regular and proper way. There are certain matters arising under the Constitution which any gentleman could rise in his seat and claim to be of the highest privilege, in spite of any rule.

Mr. NORRIS. And I take it that it would necessarily be one according to the gentleman's claim.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, that is because of the supremacy of the Constitution over and above the rules of the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Under the rules, is there any limit to debate on a point of order?

The SPEAKER. Debate on a point of order is within the discretion of the Chair.

Mr. HAMLIN. We have now occupied about an hour and a half in this debate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the point of order should be overruled. The Chair yesterday ruled that this very resolution was a privileged question. So far I think the ruling of the Chair was sound, but the Chair went further and ruled that a question of this privilege could override the rule establishing calendar Wednesday, and could displace that day. The House, however, judging that the precedents cited by the Speaker in the further ruling established before the enactment of the rule establishing calendar Wednesday were not binding on the House, thereupon and therefore, overruled the decision of the Chair.

Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is making an indirect attack on calendar Wednesday. If his point of order should prevail the fruits of yesterday's victory would be snatched from us. If he should succeed in persuading the Chair that this was not a privileged resolution he would thereby destroy the value of the decision of the House yesterday, the House having decided that it would not consider a question even if similarly privileged, on calendar Wednesday.

Now, if the gentleman's contention is correct that this is not a privileged resolution, the whole ground will be knocked from under the decision of the House yesterday. The gentleman from Pennsylvania inquired what had happened since last Tuesday. I can tell the gentleman that what happened was that this House expressed decisively its determination, under the law, that no tampering upon any pretext whatever should be allowed with calendar Wednesday.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to occupy any considerable time. I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] utterly misunderstands the provision of the Constitution in relation to authorizing the census to be taken.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman is mistaken. He would not want to misquote me.

Mr. KEIFER. I state now what I stated in the first place. And then, after being questioned and having some suggestions made to him he made a few concessions; but, Mr. Speaker, what is provided for in the Constitution is the taking of a census within the meaning of that word, that had a definition long before the Constitution itself was framed. Let me read from the Standard Dictionary, the only one I could get hold of handily, giving a definition of the census spoken of in the Constitution. I read:

Census: An official numbering of the people of a country or district, with the collecting of various statistics of nativity, age, sex, employment, possessions, etc., in the United States made, since 1790, every ten years.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman is defining the word "census." Does the word "census" appear in the Constitution?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I shall stop reading the definition from the dictionary, for I understand that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] have not had time enough in their lives to read the Constitution through, so I will read from the Constitution for their benefit where the word is used. I read paragraph 4 of section 9, Article II, of the Constitution of the United States:

No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or the enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

Now, I was about to read from the Standard Dictionary a further definition of the word "census" as it was understood long ago:

In ancient Rome a somewhat similar enumeration of the people, but with special reference to their property, in order to determine taxation.

We adopted the idea of a census in the United States to cover age, nativity, property, and all those things. All of the progressive, civilized nations in the world have been acting upon this theory. The great premier, so to call him, of Germany, immediately after Germany was humiliated and overthrown by the great Napoleon, resorted to a census that is said to have done more to bring about and restore the German Empire than any other one thing that has happened in its history.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the result of the vote yesterday. One gentleman has said that the result of that vote was not to break down the precedents of one hundred and twenty years as to the interpretation of the Constitution in this respect, but that the joint rule presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] relating to the census was in order now. Stated differently, the claim is that we have come to find that in the second session of the Sixty-first Congress of the United States we had reached a time when we could adopt a rule that would override the Constitution of the United States, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says that is all it did accomplish, and that now to-day the Constitution is higher than any other rule. I maintain the Constitution existed yesterday, day before yesterday, and exists to-day; and there is force in the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] as to precedents, for they have had a long period of time to be considered, and when we adopted our rules we adopted them in the light of the precedents from the earliest times. These precedents, ancient and modern, must stand as to parliamentry law like we say of judicial decisions often, that they are stare decisis, and unless we stand upon some such principles as these, we will have to come to the idea that we are not governed by any fixed rules at all, but by our wishes, prejudices, or other things.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I will be pardoned if I refer to an earlier Congress. I remember a Congress in which there were on the other side of this House at least some distinguished Democrats—ex-Speaker Randall; John G. Carlisle, who became Speaker later; Samuel S. Cox, of New York, who had temporarily filled the Speaker's chair; William L. Holman, of Indiana; Hammond, of Georgia; Proctor Knott and Joseph C. Blackburn, of Kentucky; John Randolph Tucker, of Virginia; William M. Springer, of Illinois; Mr. Turner and Mr. Crisp, of Georgia; and so down the line; and when this question came up and the Chair decided it there was talk about an appeal, but these men, standing by principles, said then, as they said over and over again during the Forty-seventh Congress, that the question should be decided upon its merits, not upon any notion as to what was pending, and they uniformly sustained the Chair. I can say with some pride for the Chair that there were more appeals taken from the decision of the then Speaker [Mr. KEIFER] in the Forty-seventh Congress than within any other Congress within my knowledge. [Applause and laughter.] And that by reason of these men and others like them, although the House was about equally divided politically and without regard to party, that there was never any parliamentary decision of the Chair overruled. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up the time of the House very long. It is gratifying to hear you, Mr. Speaker, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], and other gentlemen upon the Republican side, who have spoken, refer to the Constitution of the United States as a living, breathing instrument. I thought that was reserved for this side, and sometimes I have thought that it was reserved only to a few upon this side to refer to and strictly observe that great charter. I do not believe that the rule which we adopted, which enacted that calendar Wednesday should be established, violated the Constitution or that it in any way contravened the Constitution of the United States, but I do believe that it was in full accord with the authority granted by that instrument to each House to establish and determine the rules of its procedure.

I am strengthened in the suggestion that I shall now make, that the House, when it adopted calendar Wednesday, on the 1st day of March, 1909, was informed that it was the opinion of the Committee on Rules, of which the Speaker was then, as he is now, chairman, as reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], that when calendar Wednesday was established no appropriation bill and no other privileged bill could be called up so as to destroy or take away calendar Wednesday or prevent the transaction of business as provided under the rule creating calendar Wednesday.

To establish that statement I will read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 1, 1909, the statement of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who reported House resolution 607, which established calendar Wednesday, the only difference between his resolution and the one adopted on the 15th of March being that under the resolution reported on the 1st of March from the Committee on Rules a majority could dispense with calendar Wednesday, whereas under the Fitzgerald amendment, on the 15th of March, that amendment required a two-thirds vote in order to dispense with calendar Wednesday. Now, what did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] say would be the effect of the calendar Wednesday rule when he reported it from the Committee on Rules, presided over by the Speaker, and authorizing it to be established? He said this:

Complaint has been made, Mr. Speaker, of the uncertainty as to the call of committees and as to the infrequency of that call.

The resolution that I have sent to the Clerk's desk amends paragraph 4 of Rule XXIV, answers that complaint, and seeks to do three things:

First, to make it certain that there shall be once a week every week during the session, except during the last two weeks, a call of committees.

Second—

to provide that that call can not be dispensed with except upon a direct motion to dispense with it. In other words, this calendar Wednesday can not be dispensed with by calling up appropriation bills, or by calling up any other privileged bill, so as to put on the Members the burden of voting down the privileged bill so as to preserve the call of committees. To repeat, to dispense with this call, as provided for by this rule, there must be a vote upon a direct motion to dispense with it. These two things then are provided for—an automatic call of committees once a week and the impossibility of dispensing with that call unless the House, by a majority vote on a direct motion to dispense with it, shall so determine.

That is what the Committee on Rules brought into this House from its deliberations, authorized to be reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and that is the statement the gentleman from Pennsylvania made to the House in order to amend the rules in that respect.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. There is absolutely nothing inconsistent with the ruling of the Speaker on yesterday and what I said in reporting that rule. I said appropriation bills or "any other privileged bill"——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. Now there are a number of other privileged bills. The Committee on Rules is privileged, the Committee on the Public Lands is privileged, the Committee on Ways and Means is privileged, and there are a half a dozen of the committees of the House which are privileged, and if the gentleman will look at the rule itself——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have it before me.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not have it before me.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Here it is.

Mr. DALZELL (continuing). He will see that the term "privileged under the rules" is used.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Well, it is true, it is privileged under the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow, the precedents are just as much a matter of the rules as the rules themselves.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I was coming to that.

Mr. DALZELL. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or Union calendars, excepting bills which are privileged under the rules.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that.

Mr. DALZELL. The rule now discussed is a question of bills that are privileged under the Constitution.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I thank thee, Republican, for that word "Constitution."

Mr. DALZELL. We have a little share of regard for it over here.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am glad you have regard enough to speak of it.

Mr. BUTLER. We have been trying to observe it all our lives.

Mr. HARDWICK. If so, you have made a woeful failure.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. My good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] says they have been trying to observe it all their lives. He may have succeeded, but his party has made a miserable failure of it during its existence. Mr. Speaker, that is all I desire to say, except this, that this House, when it adopted calendar Wednesday, adopted it with the impression and with the assurance that it was an automatic measure by which no measures could be brought in superseding the business of calendar Wednesday except by a vote of the House. The Dalzell resolution on the 1st of March provided for a majority vote, and the resolution on the 15th of March, known as the Fitzgerald amendment, provided for a two-thirds vote. Therefore, when the Speaker decided that the House did not have the right under its rules to dispense with the immediate consideration of the census bill, I voted, and will vote again, to say this rule, adopted, as it has been, in order that the public business should be transacted, should stand unimpaired, and that the House had not gone beyond its constitutional privilege when, in pursuance of the authority granted by the Constitution, it enacted its rule for its procedure in accordance with the power granted by that great instrument. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] demanded the regular order. The regular order is as follows:

> First. Prayer by the Chaplain.
> Second. Reading and approval of the Journal.
> Third. Correction of reference of public bills.
> Fourth. Disposal of business on the Speaker's table.
> Fifth. Unfinished business—
> And so forth.

Now, this rule fixing the daily order of business does not say "may be," but it says "shall be." This rule, with all the other rules adopted by the House and now in force, was adopted at the beginning of this Congress. One rule is just as old as another, and not a second older. The rule that fixes calendar Wednesday fixes the daily order of business. What is the calendar Wednesday rule? It sets forth:

> On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order—
> And so forth.

Is that more binding than the rule that fixes the daily order of business? Both of them control the action of the House, each within its sphere, under all the rules construed together.

Let us come to the next step. On the demand of the regular order the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] calls up from the calendar a House joint resolution that he claims to be privileged, not under any rule of this House, but under the Constitution. If this resolution be in order, it is in order by virtue of the constitutional provision and not by virtue of any rule of the House. On the contrary, it is against every rule of the House.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], who is always logical when he addresses himself to constitutional questions, based his opposition to this order of business proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] upon the ground that the Constitution does not cover it, and that, if it did cover it, it applied to yesterday as well as to-day. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] does not agree with him, nor do many other gentlemen on each side of the House. The Chair does not think that a body composed of nearly 400 members, part Democrats, part Republicans, and part Populists [laughter and applause], can be held under partisan stress and feeling to absolute consistency from day to day in its construction of the rules. Many times since the Chair has been a Member of Congress, with partisanship running mountain high, he has seen the House ignore construction of similar rules made for the harmonious conduct of the House from the organization of the House in the First Congress. The Chair saw in the House in the Fifty-first Congress, on a motion to amend the Journal, when there was a small, nominal Republican majority, enough Republicans vote, after a week's debate on the question of free silver, with a solid minority to change the Journal of this House and make that Journal tell an untruth.

That is behind us. Now, this question comes to the Speaker to be ruled upon. The Chair would have had no trouble in ruling upon it yesterday. He has but little doubt as to what the ruling of the House will be to-day. The Chair has no pride of opinion and no stones to throw at Members who voted yesterday to overrule the Speaker. If any apology is needed, gentlemen can apologize to themselves. The Chair merely calls attention to the condition in many former Congresses and as it is now. As an individual, the Chair's belief is that the House has power to do anything that a majority desires to do, whether it is in conformity with the Constitution or not.

The Chair listened with great interest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] when he said, in substance, that the Constitution does not control the House except as the House sees proper to submit to the Constitution. [Laughter.] And that is evidently correct.

In the last analysis we are responsible to our constituencies. Now, as one Member of this House, the Chair is ready to vote that this resolution which was called up by the gentleman from Indiana is in order under the Constitution and against every rule of this House. But these precedents sometimes become of importance, and the Chair has listened patiently to what various gentlemen have said about them. The Chair quite understands the desire to protect calendar Wednesday, although a majority could have protected it by raising the question of consideration, if it had desired so to do, and if this bill had been privileged yesterday. But the desire of many gentlemen in good faith to protect calendar Wednesday, as seen possibly from the Chair's standpoint only, led them to make a mistake. Possibly partisanship may now and then have cut some figure. But the Chair is not here to throw stones at any Member. Each Member has exactly the same commission and the same responsibility that the Speaker of the House has as one Member. Now, the Chair, in view of the recent vote of the House and of the value of the vote of yesterday as a precedent, and what this vote may be as a precedent, prefers not to rule, but to submit to the House [great applause]: Is the bill called up by the gentleman from Indiana in order as a question of constitutional privilege, the rule prescribing the order of business to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. BUTLER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. OLMSTED. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Without any lack of respect to the Chair, I think that the House should determine in what form this proposition is put to it; and I ask, if it is in order——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has just demanded the previous question.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I demand a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. It is not divisible; it is one proposition.

Mr. DALZELL. Regular order!

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Well, the gentleman has just made one.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to know whether it is in order to move to lay the proposition pending before the House upon the table.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order pending a demand for the previous question.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 147, noes 110.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 142, answered "present" 13, not voting 97, as follows:

YEAS—137.
